tiff also obtained a money decree against defendants 1 to 3 in S. C. S. No. 117 of 1934 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Nellore in respect of an unsecured debt due by their father and in execution of that decree attached the standing crops on the lands which were the subject-matter of the lease. Two claim petitions were put in, one by the tenants, defendants 7 and 8 and the other by the sixth defendant. Both the claims were allowed on the ground that the possession of crops was not with the plaintiff. The crops were thereafter harvested and before they could be removed they were again attached by the eleventh defendant in execution of a money decree. The plaintiff filed the present action and applied for the appointment of a receiver to take possession of the said crops. By an order dated 7th July, 1936, the crops were directed to be sold and after meeting certain outgoings the balance was directed to be deposited into Court and from and out of the amount so deposited defendants 7 and 8 were asked to take their lessees' share. It is with respect to the remaining amount that a controversy has arisen between the plaintiff and the sixth defendant. Under both the deeds of mortgage the plaintiff is given security over the produce. Under S. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act immovable property does not include growing crops. Therefore the deeds of mortgage will operate in respect of the produce on the land as a mortgage of movable property. Under the Indian Law there can be a valid mortgage of movable property. (Vide *Misri Lal v. Moshar Hossain*¹.) The moment the crop comes into existence the mortgagee gets title to the crop. The principle of law that is usually applied is that enunciated by Jessel, M.R., in *Collyer v. Isaacs*², namely:

"A man can contract to assign property which is to come into existence in the future, and when it has come into existence, equity, treating as done that which ought to be done, fastens upon that property, and the contract to assign them becomes a complete arrangement."

This principle was applied in a case reported in *Baldeo Parshad Sahu v. A. B. Miller*³, where the validity of a mortgage of the produce of a factory, namely, indigo cakes that were manufactured, came into question. The learned Judges Brett and Mitra, JJ., referring to *Collyer v. Isaacs*², observed thus:

"The property hypothecated was the indigo cakes manufactured every season by the Pupri Indigo Factory from the crops grown on the lands of the factory from the date of the mortgage deeds, until such time as the total mortgage money with interests and costs of Court shall be paid by the mortgagor."

They held in that case that the title secured under such mortgage would prevail over the title of a purchaser under a later mortgage of the said cakes. The facts of that case were as follows: On the 22nd September, 1891, there were two mortgages executed of the factory and its produce by the proprietor Mr. Wilson in favour of one Chowdhry Mahadeo Pershad who obtained decrees thereon and thereafter assigned his interest in those decrees to Messrs. Moran & Co. Messrs. Moran & Co. subsequently became bankrupt and the interest of the firm was represented by the Official Assignee. In 1896 Mr. Wilson mortgaged only the indigo cakes to be manufactured in 1895 and 1896 and in 1896 and 1897 to the plaintiffs who were aware of the prior mortgage in favour of Chowdhry Mahadeo Pershad. Subsequent to the date of the mortgage in 1896 Mr. Wilson made over to the plaintiffs in that case a quantity of indigo cakes manufactured in 1896 and 1897. The Official Assignee intervened and claimed them and the question of title was made the subject-matter of a legal proceeding. Pending the adjudication the cakes were sold and the money was brought into Court. It was held that the Official Assignee was entitled to the money in preference to the plaintiffs. The ground on which the learned Judges decided is thus put:

"We think that it is clear that where, as in this case, there were mortgages to the creditor of property which was to come into existence in future, and when the creditor had already paid the consideration, the property, that is to say, the indigo cakes, were bound from the moment that Mr. Wilson acquired them, and from that moment he became the trustee of the property for the creditor, who as cestui que trust acquired an equitable estate or interest in the property. The delivery after acquisition of the cakes to the plaintiff's servant, if there was in fact such a delivery, could not have destroyed the equitable interest of Messrs. Moran & Co. already existing in them, unless indeed the plaintiffs were bona fide transferees for value without notice."

It seems to us that the principle of this decision would apply to the present case. The sixth defendant took the assignment with notice of the mortgages in favour of the plaintiff. The standing crop on the land before it was removed was claimed by the plaintiff. Therefore the plaintiff's title to the moneys in Court must prevail over that of the sixth defendant.

But it is contended by Mr. Ramachandra Rao that so long as the plaintiff as mortgagee did not take possession of the crop, the mortgagor would be entitled to deal and dispose of it and in this case as the mortgagee never interfered with the possession of the mortgagors the sixth defendant was entitled to receive the rent from the crop and in lieu thereof its value in preference to the plaintiff and he relied on a case in Ex parte National Mercantile Bank: In *re Phillips*¹, where Jessel, M. R., stated that under the ordinary law prevailing in England rents and profits of land in mortgage belong to the mortgagor so long as he is allowed to remain in possession and therefore the mortgagor is entitled to sever the crops, which when severed became chattels under the deed and vested in his trustee in bankruptcy. It seems to us that before applying the principle of the English decision we must make note of the fact that in England the growing crop is treated as an interest in land and therefore immovable property. Jessel, M.R., recognises this in the decision relied on. A mortgage of land operates as an absolute conveyance of the property. But in India mortgages such as these in question in the suit do not operate as an absolute conveyance of the property mortgaged. Further the mortgagee is not entitled to possession of the property unless possession is stipulated for as in the case of a usufructuary mortgage. Having regard to these differences let us see how far the contention of Mr. Ramachandra Rao is well founded. Even in English Law in the case of a mortgage of a growing crop on the land a mortgagee is not entitled to claim the crop when it has been removed by the mortgagor but before removal if the mortgagor intervenes and claims it and takes appropriate proceedings, the mortgagee will become entitled to it. (Vide Fisher on Mortgage, 8th Edition, page 716.) In *Wilson v. Wilson*², Vice-Chancellor Malins defines the right of a mortgagee thus:

"We know perfectly well that a mortgagee of land has a right, from the very day of his mortgage, to receive the rents. We also know that if he does not choose to enter into possession or give notice to the tenants, but regards his security as sufficient and allows the mortgagor to receive the rents, those rents can never be recovered back again as rents. The mortgagor has a continuing right to receive the rents until the right is intercepted by some action on the part of the mortgagee."

Here the mortgagee has really intercepted the sixth defendant from removing the crops. Again, the argument based on the question of possession is not sound. Even in English Law a distinction is drawn between a case of mortgage of chattels and a case of mortgage of lands. In *Ex parte Official Receiver: In re Morrit*¹, Cotton, L.J., in considering the exact rights of sale which a mortgagee of personal chattels possesses remarked thus:

1. (1880) 16 Ch. D. 104.

2. (1872) L.R. 14 Eq. 32 at 40.

"A pledge of personal chattels as a rule is and must be accompanied by delivery of possession. It is out of the possession given him under the contract that the pledgee's rights spring A mortgage of personal chattels involves in its essence, not the delivery of possession, but a conveyance of title as a security for the debt."

Much more so in India where, as pointed out above, the plaintiff mortgagee will not be entitled to claim possession. His right is only to enforce the mortgage by suing for a sale of the property or by the appointment of a receiver to secure possession of it in order that his security may be realised. He applied for the appointment of a receiver before the crops were removed from the land and it was on this application for the appointment of a receiver that a consent order was made by which the crops were sold and the sale proceeds deposited into Court. It may be that so long as he allows the mortgagor to remove the crops and does not secure them during the year the crops were raised, he loses his right to them. His rights will not also prevail against a bona fide assignee from the mortgagor without notice of the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. Therefore the case in 16 Ch. D. is not of much assistance to the sixth defendant.

In the result we set aside the judgment of the lower Court in this behalf and allow the appeal with costs Rs. 100 to be paid by the respondent in the appeal. He will pay back whatever costs were paid by the appellant to the respondent in the lower Court.

The petitioner admitted possession of eight villages in respect of which he pays as jodi Rs 6-4-0 only, though he pays approximately Rs. 72, Rs. 339 and Rs. 244, respectively for kaval fees, road-cess and water-charges. In an application for scaling down a debt by the petitioner claiming to be an agriculturist,

Held, in "jodi, kattubadi and poruppu or the like" the words 'or the like' must be taken to denote any other payment in the nature of quit rent on an inam, whatever be the names by which they are denoted and does not include charges for police (kaval), for roads, for water and similar dues levied for services rendered by the State or by a local authority. The petitioner is therefore an agriculturist.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of West Tanjore at Tanjore dated 7th July, 1938 and made in E. A. No. 149 of 1938 in E. P. No. 25 of 1934 in O. S. No. 3 of 1919.

S. Panchapakesa Sastri and T. K. Sundararaman for Petitioner.

K. S. Desikan for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision in this Civil Revision Petition is whether the petitioner can be deemed to be an agriculturist with reference to the definition in S. 3 of Madras Act IV of 1938. The objection raised was that he was the landholder of an estate in respect of which a sum exceeding Rs. 100 was paid as "quit rent, jodi, kattubadi, poruppu or the like." The learned District Judge has not given a precise finding as to the amount payable by the petitioner in respect of the eight villages of which he admits possession but has come to the conclusion that on his admissions the petitioner is disqualified from claiming to be an agriculturist. In the Memorandum dated 6th July, 1938, the petitioner has admitted possession of eight villages in respect of which he pays as jodi, Rs. 6-4-0 only, though he pays approximately Rs. 72, Rs. 339 and Rs. 244 respectively for kaval fees, road-cess and water-charges. The learned District Judge has lumped all these four charges together and has treated them as coming within the description of "quit rent, jodi, kattubadi, poruppu or the like", so as to disqualify the petitioner from claiming to be an agriculturist. I do not know the source from which the phrase just quoted was taken in drafting this Act, but a similar phrase is found in the Full Bench ruling of this Court reported at Lakshmi- *narayana Pantulu v. Venkatrayanam*¹, where Mr. Justice Subramanya Aiyar refers to "the amount of quit rent or kattubadi, jodi, poruppu or by whatever other name it may be known, payable by them to Zamindars or others under grants creating inams." Wilson's Glossary defines jodi, kattubadi and poruppu all as meaning quit rent; and it is, I think, a matter of common knowledge that in revenue parlance these four terms are used according to precedent or local custom without any appreciable difference in their significance, that is to say, all four terms denote quit rent on inams payable to a superior landlord or to the Government. When it is conceded that the four specified terms all mean quit rent, I think it follows that the phrase "or the like" must also be taken to denote any other payment in the nature of quit rent on an inam. If it had been the intention to take into consideration payments to Government for services rendered such as kaval fees, payments to local authorities for the maintenance of communications such as road-cess or payments to the Revenue Department for the supply of additional water such as water cess, the Legislature would have indicated more clearly that such charges had to be taken into consideration. I am therefore of opinion that the phrase "quit rent, jodi, kattubadi, poruppu or the like" refers only to payments in the nature of quit rent on inams, whatever be the name by which they are denoted and does not include charges for police, for roads, for water and similar dues levied for services rendered by the state or by a local authority. The revision petition is therefore allowed with costs and the District Judge will be directed to dispose of the petition after recording findings on the several contentions raised. Both sides will be permitted to adduce evidence. Costs here will come out of the insolvent's estate.

The order of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—The second respondent in these proceedings applied to the Debt Conciliation Board of Kovvur for the settlement of his debts under the provisions of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936. His application disclosed fourteen creditors of whom the present petitioner is one. According to the petition of the second respondent the total amount owing by him was Rs. 1,51,000 and of this Rs. 1,25,000 was owing to the petitioner. The amount due to the petitioner was payable under a mortgage decree dated 16th November, 1937, passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore. The petitioner obtained an order for sale of the mortgaged property on the 14th April, 1939 and the sale was fixed for the 17th July, 1939. A fortnight before the date fixed for the sale the second respondent made his application to the Debt Conciliation Board. Notice of the application was served upon all the creditors, who appeared before the Board on the 11th August, 1939.

The petitioner and another creditor, the Standard Bank of India, took a preliminary objection. They said that in as much as the second respondent represented more than fifty per cent. of the debts owing to the second respondent and they objected there could be no settlement of his debts under the Act and therefore the petition should be dismissed in limine. The Board overruled the preliminary objection and decided to proceed with the hearing of the second respondent's application. The reason given for this decision was that it was nowhere stated in the Act that if fifty per cent. of the creditors did not agree the application should be rejected. Here the Board erred because S. 17 expressly provides that if no amicable settlement is arrived at under sub-S. (1) of S. 14 within twelve months from the date of the application under S. 4, the Board shall dismiss the application. The petitioner asks the Court to quash the order of the 11th August, 1939, on the ground that it has passed it without jurisdiction. It is not suggested that the Board has in any way acted mala fide and it cannot be said that the Board had no jurisdiction to pass the order objected to. All that the Board decided was that the application of the second respondent should be heard. We have been informed by the learned Counsel appearing for some of the other creditors that the amount claimed by the petitioner is disputed. By virtue of the proviso to S. 12 (2) the fact that the Subordinate Court has passed a decree for a sum of Rs. 1,22,000 cannot be disputed, but the Court has been given to understand that there is some question as to whether the decree-holder has not received payment in part of the decretal amount. In these circumstances the petitioner is clearly not entitled to an order quashing the Board's order of the 11th August, 1939. At the same time we would point out that it is the duty of the Board to dispose of the application with reasonable promptitude, and if it becomes apparent that the petitioner, and other creditors who support him represent more than fifty per cent. of the debts and that there is no hope of an amicable settlement, it will be the duty of the Board to dismiss the application. The petitioner has got an order for sale of the mortgaged properties and that order should not be stayed a moment longer than is necessary.

The application will be dismissed but there will be no order as to costs.

Ch. Raghava Rao and V. V. Sastry for Appellant.

V. Govindarajachari for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The only question that arises in this appeal is whether the plaintiff, who had paid property tax to the defendant municipality upon demand in a wrong belief that he was bound to pay that tax, is entitled to have it refunded. Both the lower Courts held that as the payment was a voluntary one, he is not entitled to have any such refund. His suit was therefore dismissed and his appeal to the Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, was also dismissed.

Mr. Raghava Rao, in his very able argument, has put forward two contentions. They are that under S. 72 of the Indian Contract Act the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of money paid by mistake of law and that even though S. 72 would debar a person from recovering money paid under a mistake of law in a quasi-contract, there would still be open to such a person the equitable relief that a Court can give to a person who has wrongly parted with money independently of any contract.

*Municipal Council, Dindigul v. Bombay Co., Ltd.*¹, is a decision on which Mr. Raghava Rao has placed great reliance. It discusses the English principles to be applied in a case somewhat similar to the present one, in which a person made a payment to a corporate body under protest and then claimed it back. The question that arose was whether the suit was in time; because it had been filed more than six months after the payment had been made, six months being the period allowed by S. 350 of the Madras District Municipalities Act for bringing a suit against a Municipality in certain classes of suits. Both Coutts-Trotter, C. J. and Madhavan Nair, J., held that the suit claim was not one arising out of a contract and that therefore principles of the English Courts of Equity could be applied; for in Indian Courts no distinction had ever been drawn between equitable jurisdiction and legal. Such equitable principles being applied, it was considered by these learned Judges that the suit was one for "money had and received" and not an action for damages and compensation. It was held therefore that S. 350 of the Madras District Municipalities Act did not apply, but Art. 62 of the Limitation Act. It has therefore been argued by Mr. Raghava Rao that it is unnecessary to apply the principles of the Common Law Courts of England, which, he says, have been reproduced in S. 72 of the Indian Contract Act and that this suit may be looked upon as one in the general equitable jurisdiction of Civil Courts. *Municipal Council, Dindigul v. Bombay Co., Ltd.*¹, may be regarded as an authority for the position that either a cause of action arises independently of S. 72 of the Contract Act or that when applying S. 72 of the Indian Contract Act, one should not be bound by the somewhat narrower principles of the Common Law Courts of England; but may well have regard to the decisions of the Court of Equity.

Ramjee
Rao
Municipal

That a suit for "money had and received" will lie apart from S. 72 of the Contract Act, has been held in *Narayanasami Reddi v. Osuru Reddi*², where a person was obliged to pay his landlord some money which was really not due, in order to avert a summary sale of his land. It was held that although the money was not paid by mistake, yet the person who paid it was entitled to have it back. But even if we regard this suit as one to which S. 72 of the Contract Act does not apply, I do not consider that the plaintiff's claim would be any stronger; because Courts have generally held that where a payment is made by mistake of law, there is no room for the application of equitable principles. The person who makes the payment is under no obligation to do so; and if he, of his own free will and accord, having the same opportunity of knowing the general law as the person to whom he pays it, makes such a payment, there is no injustice done which Courts of Equity should remedy. It is pointed out in Halsbury's Laws of England (Vol. 23 at page 168, in paragraph 246 and Vol. 7 at page 278 in paragraph 249) that it is not an absolute rule that a payment made under a mistake of law cannot be recovered. A few exceptions do exist, especially where the person who makes the payment has much less opportunity of knowing the law than the person to whom he pays it and relies on the word and experience of the person paid. It has however never been held, even by Courts of Equity, that a payment made under circumstances like the present is recoverable in a Court. Mr. Raghava Rao has been at some pains to point out that in more recent decisions in England there has been a tendency to interpret more liberally the rule against the recovery of money paid by mistake of law; but Ramesam, J., who was apparently dealing with the same argument in *Appavoo Chettiar v. The South Indian Railway Co.*¹, thought that the recent decision of the House of Lords and the remarks of Lord Justice Scrutton indicated that there had been no modification of the general principle against forcing a person to return money paid under a mistake of law.

Returning to S. 72 of the Contract Act, it has been held in a number of cases that payments made in India by mistake of law cannot be recovered. *Appavoo Chettiar v. The South Indian Railway Co.*¹, is a direct authority with regard to a payment of the kind here made. In *Rajah of Ramnad v. Secretary of State for India*², it was held that a wrong payment of income-tax could not be recovered for the same reason. In recent cases the principle that a person who makes payment under a mistake of law cannot recover it back again has been accepted without question—see *The Municipal Council, Tuticorin v. Ralli Brothers*³ and *Chairman, Municipal Council, Rajahmundry v. Subba Rao*⁴.

I have therefore no doubt that as the law stands at present, a person who makes a payment of tax under a misapprehension as to his liability to do so cannot recover it in a Court of Law, although one would expect a corporate body to refund voluntarily any amount which had been paid to it in error.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

An appeal was filed after Act IV of 1938 came into force against a dismissal of a suit before the Act came into force. But there was no application for scaling down before the appellate Court. But the appellate judgment reserved the defendant's right to apply for relief under Act IV of 1938. This reservation was not included in the appellate decree. Thereafter the petitioner applied to the trial Court to scale down the appellate decree under S. 19 of the Act.

Held, a decree passed after the Act came into force cannot be scaled down.

Kotayya v. Punnayya, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 202, followed.

Held, further, when a liability is being declared in the appellate Court's decree for the first time and a plea is open to the defendant under the Madras Act (IV of 1938), there should be a written application raising this plea before the appellate Court and on such application the appellate Court should either give its own decision or reserve in its decree the right to have the matter decided by the Court below. But in the absence of reservation in the appellate decree, the proper course for the defendant is to have the appellate decree brought in accordance with the judgment embodying a direction to the trial Court to deal with the application for relief under Act IV of 1938.

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition raises the question of the proper procedure in a matter arising under Madras Act IV of 1938. The present petitioner was a defendant in a suit which was dismissed on 30th November, 1937, that is to say, before the Act came into force. There was an appeal by the plaintiff and the appellate Court after Act IV of 1938 came into force reversed the decision of the lower Court and gave a decree. The last sentence of the judgment of the appellate Court is as follows:

"This judgment will not preclude the defendants from applying to the lower Court for scaling down the debt under the provisions of Madras Act IV of 1938 if they are entitled to have such relief."

It is common ground that no formal application under Madras Act IV of 1938 was before the learned Judge when he disposed of the appeal. It is not clear whether any oral representation was made at the time of passing judgment that the defendants' rights under Act IV should be reserved. But it seems to me probable that something must have been said to cause the learned Judge to make this reservation in his judgment. After the pronouncement of this judgment a decree was drawn up which contains no provision for a reservation such as the judgment contains. Thereafter the present petitioner applied to the trial Court to scale down the appellate Court's decree under S. 19 of Act IV. At the time when this application was made there was a good deal of difference of opinion on the question whether a decree passed after the Act came into force could be scaled down. That doubt has, I hope, been finally set at rest by our decision reported in *Kotayya v. Punnayya*¹. In the light of that decision, it must be held that the application to the lower Court to scale down the appellate Court's decree under S. 19 was not the proper procedure. At the same time it does not seem equitable merely because the petitioner has adopted a wrong procedure and has not understood what is the right procedure to leave him without a remedy if a legal remedy is open to him.

Now it is doubtful whether the order of the Subordinate Judge reserving a plea under Act IV of 1938 for subsequent adjudication should have been passed in the absence of an express prayer for the benefits of the Act. Assuming, however, that the Judge had the intention of reserving a plea which was open to the defendants and which would have been taken in writing had the necessity therefor been made plain, the irregularity, if irregularity it be, should not deprive the defendants of their remedy when both parties have treated the order of the Subordinate Judge as binding upon them (vide *Hriday Nath Roy v. Ramchandra Barna Sarma*² and *Tuljaram Row v. Gopala Aiyar*³). The Subordinate Judge having granted the defendants leave to raise in the trial Court the question of the relief to which they may be entitled under Act IV of 1938 this order binds both parties and cannot be treated as void merely by reason of an alleged irregularity. I would, however, observe that, though no procedure has been laid down in the Act, in a case of this kind when a liability is being declared in the appellate Court's decree for the first time and a plea is open to the defendants under Madras Act IV of 1938 there should be a written application raising this plea before the appellate Court and on such application the appellate Court should either give its own decision or reserve in its decree the right to have the matter decided by the Court below. On the facts of the present case it seems to me clear that the Court below could not proceed with the enquiry under Act IV of 1938 in the face of the appellate Court's decree which makes no provision therefor. The proper procedure therefore appears to be for the petitioner to apply to the appellate Court to have the decree brought in accordance with the judgment by embodying therein a direction to the trial Court to deal with the application for relief under Act IV of 1938 and amend the decree according to its decision. If and when the petitioner makes such an application to the appellate Court it will of course be open to the respondent to urge any objections which may be available to him to the amendment of the decree. Should the appellate Court carry out the desired amendment, the petitioner will then be at liberty to apply to the trial Court—not under S. 19 which really has no application to a decree passed after the Act came into force—but under Ss. 8 and 9 as in a pending litigation, the matter having been reserved in the appeal for separate disposal.

The revision petition against the order of the District Munsif must be dismissed, his order being correct on the frame of the petition, though he might perhaps have given to the petitioner some guidance as to the course which he should follow. In the circumstances I make no order as to costs.

Where parties enter into a compromise agreeing that a certain sum should be payable in full satisfaction of the suit claim and costs without allocating any part of that sum specifically to the costs of the suit, the provisions of Ss. 11 and 19 cannot be invoked by the creditor. The Court has no power in a case of that kind to reopen the compromise, tax the costs that would have been awarded if the suit had succeeded after contest and direct its payment, when the judgment debtor applies for scaling down a decree under S. 19 of the Act.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Kurnool, dated 13th February, 1939 and made in M. P. No. 37 of 1939 in O. S. No. 14 of 1936, Sub-Court, Kurnool.

K. S. Jayaram for Petitioner.

A. C. Sampath Aiyangar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition to revise the order of the District Court of Kurnool scaling down the amount due to the respondent under a compromise decree passed on 31st August, 1936, in O. S. No. 14 of 1936 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court, Kurnool. The compromise decree, so far as it is material here, runs as follows:

"In full satisfaction of the suit claim and costs, besides the sum of Rs. 1,000 received by the plaintiff's next friend on 22nd August, 1936, the defendant has to pay Rs. 2,100 Each party shall bear the costs incurred by him."

It was admitted that the principal sum originally advanced was Rs. 2,800, and the lower Court, applying S. 8 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, deducted the amount paid by the petitioner Rs. 3,980-8-0 from twice the principal amount and found that the balance payable on the date of the decree was Rs. 1,619-8-0. So far there is no dispute between the parties. The learned Judge, however, proceeded to apply the proviso to S. 19 to a payment of Rs. 140 made after the decree was passed and for this purpose taxed the respondent's costs of the suit at Rs. 347-3-0, and deducting Rs. 140 held that the balance Rs. 207-3-0 was also payable by the petitioner in addition to Rs. 1,619-8-0 with interest on the latter sum at the statutory rate. The learned Judge observed:

"Since the decree passed was a compromise decree and the terms of the compromise were 'in full satisfaction of the suit claim and costs,' when the decree is reopened, naturally the defendant cannot have the best of both the worlds and claim reduction under the Act by reopening and amending the decree and also state that the provision of the Act that all costs lawfully expended by the decree-holder should be reimbursed to him should not come into operation."

The petitioner contends that this view of the learned District Judge is erroneous, and I am inclined to agree with him. Having regard to the definition of 'debt' in S. 3 (iii) which expressly includes sums payable under a decree, it is clear that all amounts payable under decrees are also liable to be scaled down under the provisions of the Act. S. 11, however, excepts 'any sum decreed as costs by any Court' and S. 19 which provides the machinery for the scaling down of decree debts gives effect to this exception by providing that all payments made or amounts recovered in respect of a decree should first be applied in payment of 'all costs originally decreed to the creditor.' Reading these provisions together as they should be, it is clear to my mind that they are applicable only to cases where any specific sum is decreed as costs by the Court. It follows therefore that where parties enter into a compromise agreeing that a certain sum should be payable in full satisfaction of the suit claim and costs without allocating any part of that sum specifically to the costs of the suit, the provisions of Ss. 11 and 19 cannot be invoked by the creditor. The Court has no power in a case of that kind to reopen the compromise, tax the costs that would have been awarded if the suit had succeeded after contest and direct its payment, when the judgment-debtor applies for scaling down the decree debt under S. 19 of the Act. When a suit is compromised by the parties agreeing to pay and receive a gross sum without any allocation, they do not ordinarily contemplate any specific sum as being payable by the one side or the other towards the costs of the proceedings; and it is beyond

v.

mantha
Rao.

Syama Rao
v.

mantha
Rao.

the province of the Court to allocate any portion of the consolidated amount agreed to be paid to such costs or impose any fresh liability for costs as a condition of scaling down the debt. In the present case, though the compromise referred to the defendant's liability to pay Rs. 2,100 in full satisfaction of the suit claim and costs, in another place, it provided that each party shall bear the costs incurred by him. This shows, what is usually the case, that the parties had no definite idea in their mind that any part of that sum represented the liability for costs.

For these reasons, I hold that the view taken by the learned District Judge is wrong and the sum of Rs. 140 paid after the decree should go in reduction of the total sum payable under the compromise decree. With this modification, the order of the learned District Judge is confirmed.

As the petitioner also raised another point which was not however seriously pressed, I direct each party to bear his own costs of this revision petition.

In respect of a mortgage loan to a Nidhi, the interest stipulated was 6½ per cent payable every month. The bond also provided for default interest in case the interest and certain subscriptions to the Nidhi were not paid on due dates. In respect of the transaction it was found that towards a sum of Rs. 1,500 borrowed in February, 1927, a sum of Rs. 1,396-3-3 had been credited as part payment and the balance of Rs. 807 13-2 was sued for on closing of accounts in March, 1932. This was due to further interest imposed under the contract for default in payment of interest and subscriptions. The actual payments worked out at more than 9 per cent. per annum though the primary rate of interest was only 6½ per cent. In an application for scaling down,

Held, as the interest works out at more than 9 per cent. per annum S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Act cannot apply. The debtor can claim to have the debt scaled down under S. 8 of the Act. When money is borrowed and a larger sum is repaid the excess over principal must be treated as interest.

D. Ramaswami Aiyangar for Petitioners.

M. E. Rajagopalachari for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this Civil Revision Petition is the interpretation of S. 10 (2) (iii) of Madras Act IV of 1938. The respondent is the Conjeevaram Hodgsonpet Dharmarakshaka Nidhi, Ltd., from whom the petitioner borrowed Rs. 1,500 in February, 1927, upon a mortgage bond. The suit is brought upon this mortgage bond in March, 1932, and a decree has been granted to the respondent and the mortgaged property has been sold. The petitioner has applied under S. 23 of the Act to have the sale set aside. He will not be entitled to this relief if in the words of the sub-section with which we have to deal the interest payable in respect of his liability is not more than 9 per cent. per annum as the respondent here is a public company as defined in the Indian Companies Act.

The terms of the bond are somewhat complicated. The interest chargeable upon the money borrowed is only 6½ per cent. in the first instance but it is payable at the end of every month and there are provisions also that subscriptions are to be made to the company and those subscriptions are to be credited towards repayment of the principal. If there is no default in the payment of interest and the payment of those subscriptions there is no question but that the rate of interest will be only 6½ per cent. but on default further interest is chargeable on both interest and the amount due for subscriptions. The learned District Munsif who tried the suit in the first instance has held that S. 10 (2) (iii) prevents the petitioner from taking advantage of the provisions of the Act. He says that the Legislature in drafting this sub-section is dealing only with the primary rate of interest charged and that the section cannot apply to any rate which is chargeable in case of default. I am unable to accept this view of the section as correct. It seems to me contrary to all logic and all principles of interpretation to limit so general a word as liability to a liability incurred only by a borrower who is guilty of no act of default. Clearly the liability in my opinion must mean whatever liability may fasten upon the borrower under the terms of the bond.

I am prepared however to concede that this matter should not be disposed of merely upon a strict interpretation of the terms of the bond and the liability which might arise in certain hypothetical circumstances but should be determined upon an examination of the actual state of accounts as between the two parties. I proceed therefore to such an examination and I find that towards the sum of Rs. 1,500 borrowed in February, 1927, a sum of Rs. 1,396-3-3 has been credited as part repayment. The suit is for the balance, namely, Rs. 807-13-2 and the accounts have been closed shortly before the filing of the suit in March, 1932. The result then is that for a debt of Rs. 1,500 incurred in February, 1927, a total sum of Rs. 1,396-3-3 plus Rs. 807-13-2, that is, Rs. 2,204-0-5 has to be repaid and this repayment is related to a period of just over five years. Of this sum, Rs. 1,500 of course represents the principal and the remaining Rs. 704 represents what is claimable in addition to the principal. It is argued for the respondent that this may not be interest in the strict sense of the word because of the provision relating to the monthly payment of subscriptions. But when we probe into the heart of the transaction it seems to me clear that is in all respects analogous to the payment of interest. When money is borrowed and a larger sum is to be repaid the excess over the principal must in my opinion be treated as interest. Therefore in this matter the sum of Rs. 704 represents the interest charged under the terms of this bond on a debt of Rs. 1,500 for a period of just over five years. Arithmetical calculation will show that this interest represents a rate of slightly more than 9 per cent. per annum. It seems to me therefore that with respect to the present claim as the interest works out at more than 9 per cent. per annum the respondent cannot successfully argue that S. 10 (2) (iii) applies. If it does not apply, then of course the petitioner on the assumption that he is an agriculturist can claim to have the debt scaled down under S. 8 and being thus entitled to the benefits of this Act can make an application under S. 23.

In the result therefore this petition will be allowed and the petitioner's application remanded to the learned District Munsif for being allowed or dismissed according as he finds the petitioner to be an agriculturist or not. The respondent must pay the costs of the petitioner in this petition.

time was not passed until 27th August, 1936, although the application had been filed in Court some days before the award was made. The principal question argued in this Court and in the Court below was whether the Court became functus officio in this matter on the day the award was made and was incompetent to pass the order on 27th August, 1936, extending the time.

It seems to me that the order passed by a Court on an application must refer back to the date on which the application is put in; for it is the state of affairs on that date that the Court has to consider in making an order. If on the date of the application the Court had jurisdiction to extend the time, I cannot see how it lost jurisdiction because in the interval between the filing of the petition and the passing of orders the award is actually made. There is nothing in Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure which says so, and no decision has been pointed out to me in which a Court has gone so far as to say that a Court loses jurisdiction to extend the time when once the award has been made. *Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudrain Bhagwant Kuar*¹ is a Privy Council decision upon which much reliance has been placed by the learned Counsel for the petitioner. The facts of that case do not resemble those of the present nor was an order there made under the same provision of law as here; but Mr. Sampath Aiyangar relies on a few words contained in that judgment without reference to the facts of that particular case. There, the award was actually made at a time beyond the period to which the date had been extended, and their Lordships remarked that when once an award was made and delivered, the power of the Court under S. 514 was spent. The reason they gave was that

"that contention (that the award is not valid) has to support it the express statutory enactment that no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court."

S. 521 of the old Code did in fact say:

"No award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by Court."

There is no such clause in the present Act and, as has already been remarked, in the case before their Lordships the award was not made even within the extended time. In *Annamalai Chettiar v. Annamalai Chettiar*², Curgenven, J., doubted whether *Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudrain Bhagwant Kuar*¹ was any longer good law. In *Gopalji Kallianji v. Chhaganlal Vithalji*², where an application was put in by consent for extending the time for making the award, it was held that the date of the application must be referred back to the date when it was filed in the office of the Prothonotary and not to the date when it was signed by him. That case is not similar to the present one; but it lays down the principle that an application dates back to the day of its presentation which has, I think, a wide application. Moreover, if the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioner is correct, then the arbitrators were functus officio on the date on which they should have made the award expired, and they had no power to continue the arbitration proceedings while the application was pending. If that were so, then there was no valid award made at all. It would also follow from this proposition that applications for extension would become largely fruitless because the applicants could do nothing before the applications were granted and so proceedings would drag on indefinitely. Needless to say, there is no authority, either for the original contention of Mr. Sampath Aiyangar or for any of the principles that have been deducted from it. It seems to me that the arbitrators had jurisdiction to continue the arbitration subject to the result of their application to extend the time.

2. (1933) 65 M.L.J. 376.

Chokkappa
Chetty
v.
Santhubava Rowther.

It has been argued on behalf of the respondent, on the authority of *Annamalai Chettiar v. Annamalai Chettiar*³, that a revisional Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with an award passed in these circumstances; but I do not find that *Annamalai Chettiar v. Annamalai Chettiar*³, goes so far. There were special circumstances there which led the learned Judge to hold that the order of the lower Court filing the award was right and could not be interfered with in revision, and that the only remedy of the aggrieved person was to take separate proceedings to have the award set aside.

*Jetha Lal Laxmi Chand Shah v. Amrita Lal Ojha*⁴ is a very important decision on the present paragraph 8 of Schedule II; for it holds that the section is so widely worded that an application for extension of time put in even after the award is made.

can be granted; and that if it is granted the award can be filed. The wording of paragraph 8 is certainly wide enough to carry this meaning and with due respect I agree. I find no reason in the present provisions relating to arbitration for supposing that once an award is made the Court ceases to have jurisdiction to extend the time. The old Code did contain such a provision; but that is absent in the present Act.

The learned District Munsif has supported his finding on another ground; and that was that one must not suppose that because the award was written on 26th August, 1936, it was necessarily made on that day. *Arumugam Chetti v. Arunachalam Chetti*¹, pointed out that filing is not making—filing being a mere administrative act; but it was held in *Harbhajan Singh v. Mewa Singh*², that an award has to be pronounced before it can be said to be made and that filing it in the Court is one of the ways of pronouncing it and that if the pronouncing of the award did not take place until the award was filed into Court, then the date of the making of the award was the date of the filing of it. It is unnecessary for me to consider whether this decision is correct; but it does seem to be true that the mere writing of an award would not amount to the making of the award. There can be no finality in the writing of an award and if the arbitrators choose to tear it up and write another, I can see no reason why they should not do so. It may however be argued that the signing of the award gives legal effect to it, and if so, then the award was made on the 26th, the date of writing it.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are simple. On 7th November, 1922, defendant 1 mortgaged three items of property to plaintiff's father. In January, 1925, he settled the equity of redemption upon defendant 2 his mother. In September, 1925, defendant 2 sold item 1 to one Ademma, the main consideration for the sale being the promise by Ademma to discharge the whole of the mortgage debt. In 1926 and 1927 Ademma made two part-payments of Rs. 650 and Rs. 600 respectively. In January, 1932, Ademma sold item 1 to the plaintiff who had succeeded to his father's rights as mortgagee for Rs. 3,000 a sum which did not suffice to discharge the mortgage. Plaintiff accordingly sued to recover the balance, and the question at issue is whether on these facts, and with reference to S. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act, items 2 and 3 which have remained since 1925 in the possession of defendant 2, can be called upon to contribute any sum to the satisfaction of the mortgage. It is found that item 1 is five times as valuable as items 2 and 3.

The first question to decide is whether there is a 'contract to the contrary' within the meaning of S. 82. At one time it was held (see *Ramabhadrachar v. Sreenivasa Aiyangar*¹), that such a contract must be between mortgagee and mortgagor, but since the decision of the Privy Council in *Ganeshi Lal v. Charan Singh*¹, that is no longer good law, and a contract, as here, between an assignee from the mortgagor, and the purchaser of a part of the equity of redemption certainly falls within the section.

What is that contract? The contract clearly is that Ademma, the purchaser, shall pay the whole debt, which means that Ademma shall not be entitled to call upon items 2 and 3 for contribution.

Is that contract still in force? It would certainly be in force if this were an action between defendant 2 and Ademma. Does the sale to plaintiff make any difference? It is argued for the appellant that it does on the ground that contracts of this kind do not 'run with the land'. I have been referred to *Seshagiri Aiyar v. Vythilinga Pillai*² and other authorities for the position that the benefit of a contract of this kind does not automatically pass to an assignee but only if it itself be specifically assigned. But here it is defendant 2 herself, and not any assignee, who is opposing plaintiff. I cannot agree that because the benefit of a contract such as this does not necessarily pass to an assignee from one party, the burden of it similarly does not pass to an assignee from the other who has full notice of its existence. In *Muthiah Bhagavathar v. Venkatarama Aiyar*³, it is pointed out that such an assignment cannot give the assignee rights under S. 82 which his assignor did not possess.

*Muthiah Bhagavathar v. Venkatarama Aiyar*⁴ is a decision of a Bench of this Court which I think clearly binds me in deciding the present appeal. Not only on the proposition of law there laid down is plaintiff bound by the terms of Ademma's contract with defendant 2, but also, on the arithmetic of this case he can have no claim. For it is further pointed out on page 137 that if plaintiff is not bound by his predecessor's contract he cannot take advantage of payments which his predecessor has made. If in the present case, plaintiff cannot credit the sum of Rs. 1,250 as payments made by his item of property, defendant 2 will have fully discharged the 1/6th share of the mortgage debt due from her items.

In a bank an ex-secretary was sanctioned a gratuity by the Board of Management. Under the existing rules and by-laws the gratuity could not have been sanctioned. On the objection by the Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies, the Board of Management was asked to get the sanction of the general body of shareholders. The Board passed new rules amending the existing rules. The general body also by a resolution of its meeting sanctioned the Board's recommendation of gratuity to the retiring officer. On the objection that such a gratuity being wrong originally could not be ratified by an amendment of the rules passed later and that the general body's sanction was itself ultra vires, Held, that the matter related only to the administration and management of the affairs of the company and so long as the general body acted within the ambit of the Articles of Association, any act done by them in regard to the management of the bank will be intra vires and not ultra vires.

The fact that the Board of Management was delegated the power to frame by-laws did not take away the power of the general body to sanction any payment of gratuity in exceptional cases which had not been provided for by the by-laws framed by the Managing Board.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this second appeal is whether the award of the sum of Rs. 1,295 paid as gratuity to the second defendant by the first defendant Bank in pursuance of a resolution of the General Body dated 23rd November, 1935, is valid. The learned Judge in the Court below answered the question in the affirmative. The question is whether his view is sound.

Presanna
Venkatesa
Rao
v.
Trichino-

Co-

Bank, Ltd.

Mr. Rajah Aiyar canvasses this view on two grounds: (1) The Ex-Secretary was permitted to retire on 17th March, 1935, on production of a medical certificate which stated that he was suffering from chronic bronchitis and would not be in a position to attend to his duties for a period of six months. Under the Gratuity rules which govern the payment of gratuity, the Ex-Secretary would not be entitled to claim any money as and by way of gratuity; because the rules contemplated certain conditions on fulfilment of which alone an ex-servant of the Bank can claim gratuity. However the Board of Management seems to have granted the gratuity but exception was taken by the Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies and the Board of Management was requested to get the sanction of the General Body to the said payment. After the receipt of that letter from the said Registrar, the Board of Management seems to have amended the by-laws by providing that in cases where the Board comes to the conclusion that an officer will have to be permanently incapacitated, though not supported by a medical certificate, it might pay gratuity. On the strength of the amended by-law, the Board of Management wanted to grant the gratuity but however by way of abundant caution, they wanted to put the matter before the General Body. They accordingly framed a resolution to the following effect:—

“To sanction a sum of Rs. 1,295 as gratuity to the Ex-Secretary Mr. S. R. Subramania Aiyar as recommended by the Board in their Resolution No. 19, dated 2nd October, 1935.”

The intended resolution was circulated to the shareholders and a General Body meeting of the shareholders was held on 7th December, 1935, wherein they passed a resolution sanctioning the payment of the said gratuity. It is contended by Mr. Rajah Aiyar that the Board of Management had no power to give retrospective operation to the amended by-law and any payment of gratuity in pursuance of such an amended by-law would be illegal. Therefore, when the General Body passed a resolution

Presanna
Venkatesa
Rao

sanctioning the said sum of Rs. 1,295, they were simply sanctioning an illegal resolution of the Board of Management. It must therefore be held that the payment was ultra vires. I am not inclined to agree with this contention. It cannot be denied that even though the by-laws did not provide for payment of a gratuity because under the rules, the Board of Management could not grant it, still, it is always open to the General Body to sanction a gratuity which an officer according to the sense of the meeting of the General Body deserved. In the particular case, how I construe the resolution of the General Body is this. They intended to pay the gratuity of Rs. 1,295 and treat the resolution communicated to them by the Board of Management as a recommendation to them. It is perfectly competent to them to grant the gratuity or to decline it. There is a statement in the resolution circulated to the shareholders that it was recommended by the Board in Resolution No. 19 dated 2nd October, 1935. But that would not invalidate the payment sanctioned by the General Body. At the meeting of the General Body, the General Body must have been apprised that according to the old by-laws, that is, before they were amended, the payment of gratuity to the Ex-Secretary was not proper, that objection was taken by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies and that therefore the sanction of the General Body was sought. Considering all these facts, the General Body chose to pass the resolution which it is perfectly competent to do and Mr. Rajah Aiyar has not placed before me any authority to show that it was ultra vires of them to do so. The matter only relates to the administration and management of the affairs of a company and so long as the General Body acts within the ambit of the Articles of Association, any act done by them in regard to the management of the Bank will be intra vires and not ultra vires. It is next contended by Mr. Rajah Aiyar that the power to frame by-laws in regard to the payment of gratuity was delegated to the Board of Management and once they passed by-laws, both the Board of Management and the General Body were bound by them. I am not prepared to agree with this contention. The fact that the Board of Management is delegated the power to frame by-laws does not take away the power of the General Body to sanction any payment of gratuity in exceptional cases which have not been provided by the by-laws as framed by the Board of Management. This power is always vested in the General Body and by the mere fact of delegation, it cannot be taken away. Mr. Rajah Aiyar has again not placed before me any authority in support of his contention. Only these two contentions were advanced by Mr. Rajah Aiyar and I am clearly of opinion that both the contentions are unsustainable.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs (one set).

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), S. 302—Sentence—Extenuating circumstances—Duty of Sessions Judge to consider—Conviction based on confessions—Need for considering reason for crime.

The law gives the Sessions Judge the option of sentencing a person convicted of murder either to death or to transportation for life. Where there are extenuating circumstances it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to award the lesser sentence and not to pass the sentence of death. When the only evidence that the accused took the lives of her children is derived from her confessions, it is necessary to take into account the reasons which she alleged for the act. Where a woman killed her two children for the reason that she had been very harshly treated by her husband and was living a life of utmost misery.

Held, that it was a proper case for awarding the sentence of transportation for life.

No. 33 of 1940 and appeal by the said prisoner against the said sentence of death passed upon her in the said case on 3rd April, 1940.

P. Sivarama Krishniah for Accused.

The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Burn, J.

Burn, J.—The appellant has been convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Coimbatore for the murder of her own two children, a little girl aged 5 and a little boy aged 2 on the 17th December, 1939. The evidence against the appellant consisted mainly of confessions of her own said to have been made to her aunt (P. W. 10) and to an acquaintance (P. W. 1, Rama Boyan) and also to the Village Munsif of Pattaramangalam, P. W. 12. The appellant according to these witnesses admitted that she had thrown her children into a well and said that she had jumped into the well herself but had afterwards, apparently repenting of her intention to take her own life, managed to get out. She said that the reason why she had decided to take her children's life and her own was that she had been very harshly treated by her husband and was living a life of the utmost misery. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has accepted these confessions of the appellant and has stated that in his opinion this was a fit case for awarding as lenient a sentence as possible but, strangely enough, he goes on to say that, having found the accused guilty of murder, he has no option but to award her the extreme penalty under law. This is of course quite incorrect. The law gives the Sessions Judge the option of sentencing a person convicted of murder either to death or to transportation for life. Where there are extenuating circumstances as in this case, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to award the lesser sentence and not to pass the sentence of death. We agree entirely with the reasoning of the learned Additional Sessions Judge. Since the only evidence that the appellant took the lives of her children is derived from her own confessions, it is only fair to take into account also the reasons which she alleged for taking such a terrible step. Her husband was examined as P.W. 5 and he said that his wife had not been right in the head for some years before, but it must be borne in mind that according to the woman herself it was her husband's ill-treatment that drove her to take the lives of her children. There was no evidence of insanity such as would take away the criminality of the act; that is to say, there is no evidence that the woman was incapable by reason of unsoundness of mind of understanding what she was doing or the consequences of her act. The conviction for murder is correct and is confirmed. The sentence of death is in this case wrong. We set it aside and substitute a sentence of transportation for life.

Karuppal,
In re.
Burn, J.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge has made a separate recommendation to the Government to reduce the punishment imposed upon this appellant to a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment. The letter of the learned Additional Sessions Judge has already been forwarded to the Government and they will take such action as they deem fit in the exercise of their prerogative. We do not associate ourselves with the express recommendation that the sentence be reduced to three years' rigorous imprisonment but we are in agreement with the

The stamps were purchased on 13th February, 1933 and sale certificate issued by the Court on 20th February, 1933. The suit was brought on 18th February, 1936.

Held, the cause of action did not arise immediately on the purchase of the stamps. JUDGMENT.—The only point for determination in this revision petition relates to the applicability of Art. 61 of the Limitation Act to the petitioner's claim for contribution in respect of a half share of the amount spent by him for purchase of stamps for a sale certificate issued in respect of properties jointly purchased by the petitioner and the respondent. Court below applied Art. 61 of the Limitation Act and reckoning 3 years from 13th February, 1933, when the petitioner actually paid the money for the purchase of the stamps held the suit barred by limitation. I cannot agree with this view. Even assuming that Art. 61 is applicable to certain classes of suits for contribution, I am clearly of opinion that it cannot apply to a suit of this description. For it is obvious that the petitioner could not have a cause of action against the defendant as soon as he purchased the stamps though he might have intended such purchase to enure to the benefit of the defendant also by the stamps being utilised for the purpose of engrossing the sale certificate to be issued jointly in the name of both the parties. Until the stamps were actually utilised for the purpose the petitioner could not, as it seems to me, claim to recover any part of the purchase money from the respondent. To a case of this kind Art. 61 which presupposes the accruing of a cause of action when the payment is made cannot be applicable. (cf. *Sundara Aiyar v. Ananthapadmanabha Aiyar*¹). It is not disputed that if Art. 61 does not apply, the proper article applicable is 120, and the suit was filed in time.

The Civil Revision Petition succeeds and the petitioner's suit will be decreed with costs here and in the Court below.

It was contended that the secretary had no authority to act in insolvency on behalf of the Bank.

Held, a petition in insolvency involves proceedings in Court and the secretary had full authority to file a creditor's petition in insolvency on behalf of the Bank.

Held, further, that a debtor can commit more than one act of insolvency and even where there is an act of insolvency committed as the result of a previous attachment continuing for more than three weeks there could be a second act of insolvency of the same nature which can be relied on for adjudicating a debtor.

On appeal from the order and judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mockett, dated 1st May, 1939 and passed in the exercise of the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the High Court in I. P. No. 64 of 1939.

V. Ramaswami Aiyar and T. V. Srinivasan for Appellant.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C. J.

The Chief Justice.—This is an appeal against an order passed by Mockett, J., adjudicating the appellant an insolvent. It is said that the person who filed the application for adjudication had no authority in law to do so and that there was no act of insolvency. Both these questions were raised before the learned Judge who has dealt with them fully in his judgment and we agree with his conclusions.

The petitioning creditor was the Mettupalayam Narayani Bank, Limited, which had obtained a decree against the appellant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore for a sum of some Rs. 56,000. The decree was transferred to Madras for execution and execution proceedings were duly instituted. On the 4th March, 1939, the Bank attached the appellant's residence. The attachment continued until the 30th March, 1939, when the petition for adjudication was filed. The application was signed by V. Palaniappa Chettiar, who was the Director in charge of the Bank and also held the office of Secretary. On the 20th October, 1937, the Board of Directors passed this resolution:—

"M. R. Ry. The Director, V. Palaniappa Chettiar Avergal shall take charge on 28th November, 1937, as Director-in-charge, Secretary and attend to the duties. It has been decided that, till appointment of another Secretary, the said V. Palaniappa Chettiar Avergal himself shall attend to all the affairs and Court proceedings relating to the Nidhi."

This resolution remained in force at the time of the filing of the insolvency petition in this case. The first contention of the appellant is that this resolution gave Palaniappa Chettiar no authority to act in insolvency on behalf of the Bank.

It is difficult to imagine what wider power could be given than was given here. Palaniappa Chettiar was authorized to attend to all the affairs of the Bank, including Court proceedings relating to the Bank. Therefore he had the authority to attend, to institute, and conduct all proceedings in Court with which the Bank was concerned. A petition in insolvency involves proceedings in Court and we agree with the learned Judge that Palaniappa Chettiar had full authority to file the petition.

Mr. Ramaswamy Aiyar has suggested that this view is inconsistent with the decisions of the Courts in England in *In re A Debtor*¹, *In re A Debtor: Ex parte The Petitioning Creditors v. The Debtor*² and *Guthrie v. Fisk*³. A glance at these cases shows that they have no bearing here. In the first case it was held that a resolution of an incorporated company, authorizing one of its officers to present a petition in bankruptcy, against a particular debtor did not authorize the officer to present a petition founded on an act of bankruptcy committed after the date of the resolution. The decision in *In re A Debtor: Ex parte The Petitioning Creditor v. The Debtor*², far from helping the appellant is against him. There a Division Bench held that a company could give general authority to one of its officers to present a petition in bankruptcy in the future in respect of acts of bankruptcy which might not have been committed at the date when the authority was given. It was pointed out that the decision in *In re A Debtor*¹, dealt with the particular set of facts and did not militate against the contention that there could be a general authority to act in bankruptcy proceedings. In *Guthrie v. Fisk*³, authority was given "to sue". It was held that this did not give authority to institute bankruptcy proceedings. In the resolution now under consideration the authority is not confined to the institution of suits. There is no limitation on the agent's powers to institute proceedings in Court.

The second contention is that inasmuch as there were two previous attachments subsisting when the Bank presented its attachment it could not rely on its own attachment. In other words it is said that because there had already been an act of insolvency committed as the result of a previous attachment for more than three weeks there could not be a second act of insolvency of the same nature. S. 9 (e) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act says that a debtor commits an act of insolvency if any of his property has been sold or attached for a period of not less than 21 days in execution of the decree of any Court for the payment of money. A debtor can commit more than one act of insolvency and the three attachments here constituted three different acts of insolvency. There is no substance whatever in this contention.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs in favour of the opposing creditors, one set.

The initial burden is on the petitioner (the debtor) to prove that he is an agriculturist. The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—With reference to the question of the burden of proof under S. 3 (ii) of Madras Act IV of 1938 and its provisos, it seems to us clear that the applicant has first to establish a prima facie case that he falls under one of the categories enumerated in Ss. 3 (ii) (a) to (d). Then the burden shifts to the respondent to show prima facie that the applicant is excluded by one or other of the provisos. When this has been done the burden again shifts to the applicant to adduce materials which are specially within his knowledge and have a bearing on the applicability of the provisos. The lower Court does not appear to have grasped the principles on which the onus should lie and a fresh finding is necessary on the question whether the applicant is an agriculturist.

If he is an agriculturist the position is clear with reference to our decision in C. R. P. No. 1607 of 1938. All interest outstanding on 1st October, 1937, has to be wiped out. Thereafter interest will have to be calculated as under S. 12 of the Act and the various payments credited as and when made. There can be no question of appropriating payments made after 1st October, 1937, to interest which was outstanding on that date.

The petition is allowed with costs and the application is remitted to the lower Court for disposal in the light of this judgment.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—In this case a former District Munsif heard arguments on the question whether the petition under Madras Act IV of 1938 would lie under S. 19, having regard to the provisions of S. 10 (2) (ii) and he passed a considered order that there was no vendor's lien in respect of the liability and no obstacle under that section to the application. He then adjourned the matter for further enquiry. He was transferred and his successor instead of proceeding with the matter where his predecessor left it, reopened the issue which had been decided and gave a contrary finding and dismissed the application on that finding. I am of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to do that. Granting that the matter is not precisely covered by S. 11, Civil Procedure Code, that section is not exhaustive of the applicability of the principle of res judicata. *Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal*¹. When an issue has been made the subject of a final order by a Court, that order cannot be ignored by a succeeding Judge nor has the Court jurisdiction to alter its decision except on grounds which would justify a review (vide *Basanta Kumar Das v. The Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—In view of our decision in *Subbaramier v. Venkatachalapathi Aiyar*¹ that a simple mortgagee of agricultural land has a saleable interest therein sufficient to satisfy S. 3 (ii) (a) of Madras Act IV of 1938, it would seem to follow that the holder of a vendor's lien in agricultural land is equally qualified to be an agriculturist. But the trial Court has not gone fully into the question whether in fact the lien subsists. The transferee did not admit his liability to pay to his transferor, as the learned Judge seems to think, but to the plaintiff the holder of the incumbrance over the right transferred. Whether or not the vendor's lien subsists will in our opinion depend largely on the circumstances of the transfer—for instance, if the transferee has the right to hold the unpaid money for the protection of his own interest against the incumbrances, there can hardly be a debt due to the transferor in respect of which the lien may be said to subsist. But this question can best be investigated by the trial Court in disposing of the pending application under S. 19. With these observations the petition is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT:—The question at issue in these two appeals is whether two applications for execution filed by the decree-holder on 17th February 1936 were or were not in accordance with law. The prayer in each application was for the arrest of defendant 1. The decrees as they then stood amended did not in either case make defendant 1 personally liable, but were only against the family properties in his hands. Both Courts below have held that these applications were in accordance with law.

In appeal it is argued that the applications were not in accordance with law as the relief asked for was one which the decree did not permit of being granted. If this premise is correct, I think the conclusion must follow. *Ramakrishna Kadirveluswami v. Eastern Development Corporation Ltd.*¹, and Pandarinnath Bapuji v. Lilachand Hatibhai,² are instances in which this legal principle has been applied. But I am bound by a Bench decision of this Court to hold that the premise is not correct. That decision is *Ramachandra Naidu v. Tirupathi Naidu*³, and it deals with precisely similar facts. It is there held in effect that the granting of a decree against assets in a judgment-debtor's hands does not necessarily preclude execution against him personally. In certain circumstances which are provided for by S. 52 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure such a mode of execution may be permitted. It is also pointed out that the judgment-debtor in that case was not asked to explain whether such circumstances existed or not which is also true here. I find that in Rustomji's Commentary on the Limitation Act it is doubted whether this decision is good law—but as it has never been overruled in Madras or, so far as I am aware, dissented from in any reported decision, it is binding upon me. The result is then that these appeals must fail and are dismissed with costs.

There is nothing in r. 183 of the Civil Rules of Practice which would justify the conclusion that a sale of a debt which was attached in execution is void, merely because the Court would have been better advised to have realised it by the appointment of a receiver having regard to the terms of r. 183. It can be set aside only by an application and Art. 166 of the Limitation Act will apply.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order dated 17th July, 1937 and made in C. M. P. No. 2295 of 1936 in S. C. S. No. 868 of 1934 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Gudivada.

P. Satyanarayana Rao for Petitioner.

K. Venkatarama Raju for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The present petitioner was the purchaser in Court auction of a mortgage-debt due to one Krishnayya who was the judgment-debtor in a money suit. The decree-holder, having attached this mortgage-debt, brought it to sale and it was purchased by the present petitioner on 14th October, 1935. More than a year later, the son of the mortgagee, who by this time is dead, filed an application which recites O. 21, r. 90, Ss. 47 and 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure and S. 18 of the Limitation Act, praying the Court to set aside the sale and direct the mortgagor, who was made a party, to deposit the amount due on the mortgage, out of which the decree debt was to be satisfied and the balance paid to the applicant. The lower Court has dealt with this application in a somewhat summary manner. The learned District Munsif recites r. 183 of the Civil Rules of Practice as laying it down that a debt attached in execution of a decree should be realised by appointment of receiver and not by sale, unless the attached debt is very insignificant. He then states, wrongly, that the decree debt was not over Rs. 100 whereas in fact it was three times this figure and that the sale fetched less than Rs. 100, whereas the price was Rs. 251 and, without going into the question of limitation at all, the learned District Munsif sets aside the sale and directs the decree-holder to take steps under r. 183 of the Civil Rules of Practice.

It seems to me that this order cannot be upheld. Granted that r. 183 directs the Court to realise an attached debt by the appointment of a receiver and not by sale, unless this is undesirable from the smallness of the amount of the debt or otherwise, there is nothing in r. 183 which would justify, the conclusion that a sale of the debt in execution is void, merely because the Court would have been better advised to have realised it by the appointment of a receiver having regard to the terms of r. 183. If once it is conceded that the sale in question—however ill-advised it may be—cannot be regarded as void, it must be set aside in some manner known to law. There must be an application and presumably the law of limitation governing that application will be Art. 166. If for any reason, the applicant can bring himself within time in respect of an application which is prima facie time-barred, by calling in aid the provisions of S. 18 of the Limitation Act, the grounds upon which limitation is saved must be proved and definitely found before the Court can go into the question of the validity of the sale. Here, there is a sale which may or may not have been well-advised and which may possibly be attacked on other grounds. But the sale is certainly not ab initio void and there must be an application to get it declared invalid. The application filed by the son of the judgment-debtor is apparently time-barred. Before the Court can adjudicate on the validity of the sale, it must necessarily give a finding regarding the limitation of the application. I say nothing about the merits of the application, having regard to the other contentions raised by the parties. But I do hold that the order of the lower Court setting aside the sale without giving a finding on the question of limitation cannot be sustained.

The Civil Revision Petition is therefore allowed with costs; the order of the lower Court is set aside. The lower Court is directed to deal with the contentions of the parties and dispose of the application afresh in the light of this judgment.

Though a mortgage is found to be not binding on one of the mortgagors—a pardanashin on the ground that the deed was not explained to her, the other mortgagor who was competent to mortgage his interest is bound by the mortgage.

Tests for determining the validity transactions with pardanashins reviewed.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.

The appellant, Hem Chandra Roy Chaudhury, was the first defendant in a suit brought by the first respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Mymensingh to enforce a mortgage. The suit was filed on the 6th March, 1931, and the mortgage deed (exhibit 1) was dated 18th August, 1918. The property mortgaged thereby was a taluk (Gangaram Rai) numbered 237 in the books of the Mymensingh Collectorate and comprising ten mouzas; also another taluk (Sambhu Chandra Roy) numbered 239 in the same Collectorate and comprising seven mouzas. The mortgage deed had been executed in favour of the plaintiff by two persons as mortgagors—the appellant and his paternal grandmother, an old lady whose name was Sm. Nabin Kishore Chaudhurani.

The appellant had inherited the mortgaged properties, together with other properties, from his father at some date before 1914 while he was yet a minor. The father's will, made in 1891, states that Nabin Kishore, the testator's adoptive mother, had managed and administered his zemindari and other properties during his minority and was efficient in doing all business relating thereto. The appellant in 1913, on attaining majority, executed a trust deed (3rd Falgoun 1320 B.S.) vesting all his properties in her so that she might continue to manage them. Between 1914 and 1917 they had jointly borrowed considerable sums from the Maharaja of Mymensingh on four mortgage deeds. The first of these mortgages dated in 1914 was paid off by money raised from one Ananth Bandhu Guha by means of a mortgage (exhibit S) entered into on 18th March, 1918, a few months before the mortgage in suit. The other three mortgages were paid off by means of the mortgage in suit which was for the sum of Rs. 1,20,000—Rs. 1,00,423-4-6 due on the three mortgages already mentioned, Rs. 4,000 due on a note of hand to the plaintiff (respondent No. 1) and Rs. 15,576-11-6 cash advanced. The appellant and his grandmother in 1920 and 1923 had borrowed further sums from Ananth Bandhu Guha under two mortgage deeds exhibits R and T.

The properties comprised in the respective mortgages to Ananth Bandhu Guha were as follows. His prior mortgage of 18th March, 1918 (exhibit S) comprised four out of the seventeen mouzas mortgaged to the plaintiff. His subsequent mortgage of 1920 (exhibit R) comprised the same seventeen mouzas and his last mortgage of 1923 (exhibit T) comprised in addition to these seventeen mouzas a house and lands known as Bailor House.

Ananth had died before suit and the present respondents 2 to 5 were impleaded as his representatives. They were defendants 3 to 6 and may be referred to as the Guha defendants.

Nabin Kishore was impleaded as the second defendant in the suit. She died on 8th September, 1932, before the trial and the appellant was substituted in her place on 13th September, 1932. The time originally allowed by the Subordinate Judge to the defendants for filing written statements was extended by him until 4th June, 1931, on which day the Guha defendants put in a written statement. The appellant was given further time until the 25th. On that day he asked for still more time. The Subordinate Judge gave him two days only, remarking that he had had two and a half months already; also that he had no right to look into the Guha defendants' written statement before filing his own. (This may have meant no more than that he should file his own written statement independently in the first instance.) On the 29th June, Nabin Kishore filed her written statement and on the 6th of July the Guha defendants filed an amended pleading in which for the first time they sought to have their prior and subsequent mortgages enforced in the plaintiff's suit. On the 18th July issues were framed, including an issue as to the sums due on the respective mortgages in favour of the plaintiff and of the Guha defendants. On 29th August an issue, not now of importance, was amended at the instance of Nabin Kishore. After her death in September, 1932, the appellant, who had filed no written statement on his own account, asked leave on 1st November, 1932, to file a new written statement as her representative. He was given leave, but as he applied late, leave was only given on the terms that he could take no fresh ground of defence apart from those already raised by her previous written statement. He filed a written statement on 14th November, 1932, of which paragraphs 5 to 7 setting up an interest of third parties in the mortgaged property was struck out by order of 19th November.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN.—[After setting out the facts as above.]

The first and main contention of the appellant throughout has been that Nabin Kishore was a purdanashin lady, that the mortgage deed sued upon was not explained to her, and that for this reason the mortgage is invalid even against him. Both Courts in India held on very convincing evidence that though an old lady, Nabin Kishore had considerable capacity for business; that the deed was read over to her, though it was not explained; that she understood its effect except that she did not understand that she was making herself personally liable to repay the money borrowed from the plaintiff. Neither Court in India appears to have appreciated that if for want of explanation the lady did not understand an important feature of the transaction, it cannot be held that her mind and free consent went with her act in executing the deed. A purdanashin woman is not required to understand every technical detail of a bargain. In the judgment of the Board delivered by Lord Buckmaster in *Sunitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi Chowdhurani*¹, this is pointed out and the "proper and necessary test" was held to have been applied by the Subordinate Judge who had found "that the lady had sufficient intelligence to understand the relevant and important matters, that she did understand them as they were explained to her, that nothing was concealed and that there was no undue influence or misrepresentation." And in *Farid-un-nissa v. Mukhtar Ahmad*², the Board stated the requirement as being "that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act as its execution is the physical act of the person who makes it." Though there may not be "a clear understanding of each detail of a matter which may be greatly involved in technicalities"—to use Lord Buckmaster's words—there may still be an intelligent comprehension of the bargain on the part of the lady. In such a case the bargain is good and is good as a whole. But if a feature of the transaction affecting in a high degree the expediency of her entering into it is not understood by the lady the bargain cannot be divided into parts or otherwise reformed by the Courts so as to uphold certain portions of it while rejecting others. Her answer to a suit upon the deed is not that she has an equitable defence to the enforcement of a certain stipulation but that it is not her deed. The protection extended to a person in her situation is protection against being held bound by a transaction which never had her free and intelligent consent.

Their Lordships must accept the concurrent finding of the Indian Courts that the lady did not understand that she was incurring personal liability for the loan and on this view must dispose of the case on the footing that the mortgage deed did not bind her at all. What defence is that to the appellant? That he had the beneficial interest in the property is agreed, though the trust deed of 1913 is not before the Board. He was competent to mortgage his interest. No doctrine of the law of India has been indicated to their Lordships which prevents a beneficiary under a trust from dealing with his interest by way of mortgage, though it is true enough that in India such an interest is not technically regarded as an equitable estate. If Nabin Kishore had a life interest in one of the villages, as she would appear from her son's will to have had under her husband's permission to adopt, that in no way affects the present suit. The life interest has come to an end. The mortgage is not being enforced against it, but is good and enforceable against the appellant's interest in the village—an interest which came to him as his father's heir, though subject, it may be, to certain life interests outstanding in his father's mother and widows. The plaintiffs mortgage is plainly enforceable against the appellant, whose defence is neither honest nor substantial.

The only other question raised by the appeal has reference to the relief granted to the Guha defendants in respect of their subsequent mortgages of 1920 and 1923 (exhibits R and T). No relief whatever was given to them in respect of their prior mortgage of 18th March, 1918 (exhibit S) and no personal decree was given to them in respect of either of the subsequent mortgages. Under O. 34, r. 4, cl. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, they were at least entitled to redeem the plaintiff or to receive their own mortgage money under exhibits R and T out of the surplus sale proceeds remaining after satisfaction of the plaintiff's mortgage. If they pay off the plaintiff they become entitled to apply for a final decree for sale in the plaintiff's stead. They have been given this relief and nothing more. The appellant claims to have a grievance that some objection to the validity of these subsequent mortgages was taken by him, but has not been tried. But their Lordships have not succeeded in ascertaining the nature of the objection which requires still to be tried. The execution of the deeds is not disputed, there is no ground for objecting to the rate of interest, the sums due upon the deeds have been enquired into and ascertained. The trial Judge rightly refused to allow the appellant to set up the interest of his father's widows and the decree will not bind them. The appellant has not shown to their Lordships any

Will—Bequest to son of all properties—Subsequent clause directing "If son or his son has no child, the said properties shall pass to Subramaniaswami at Tiruchendur"—Construction.

A will provided ". I have bequeathed to my son the right to all my properties and moneys, etc., and he shall alone enjoy them. If he or his son has no child, the said properties shall pass to Subramaniaswami at Tiruchendur".

Held, the will conveyed an absolute estate on the son and the subsequent clause did not impose any condition affecting the character of the bequest in favour of the son.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang
Row, J.

Pandrang Row, J.—The main point argued in this appeal is that the finding of the Court below on a question of construction of a will is wrong. The will is one about which there is no dispute so far as its execution and validity are concerned. The testator was a retired Deputy Collector, Minakshisundaram Pillai, who was lying very ill in hospital at the time he made the will and died the very next day. The will is very short, being in fact, a model of brevity and it runs as follows:

"I am now an in-patient in the hospital at Madura, having undergone an operation for carbuncle. As I have suspicions about my surviving, I have bequeathed to my son Pichai Pillai the right to all my properties and moneys, etc., and he shall alone enjoy them. If he or his son has no child, the said properties shall pass to Subramaniaswami at Tiruchendur."

This was executed on the 20th May, 1919. The next day a codicil was added to the effect that with the money due to the testator his elder brothers should purchase immovable properties such as lands, etc., in the name of his son. The testator died on the same day soon after the codicil was executed. The question is whether there is an executory devise in favour of Subramaniaswami under the will. If it can be regarded as containing an executory devise in favour of the deity, it is obvious from *Soorjeemony's case*¹ and the subsequent cases which are all referred to in a recent judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in *Gadadher Mullick v. Official Trustee of Bengal*², that there is nothing in the Hindu Law which makes such a devise void or invalid. The real point therefore for our determination is whether on a proper construction of the will it can be regarded as containing only a conditional bequest in favour of the son or, in other words, whether there is an executory devise in favour of the deity. The words used in the will are very simple and there is no dispute about the correctness of the translation of the will which is in Tamil. The two sentences are not connected with each other except that one follows the other. In other words there is no connecting conjunction and there is nothing to show that the last sentence was intended to operate as a condition affecting the character of the bequest made in the previous sentence in favour of the son. The bequest to the son in the earlier sentence is unconditional and appears to convey an absolute estate to him. There is nothing improper or unreasonable in this construction, because the bequest is one made by the testator on his death-bed to his only son, a minor, the testator's wife having predeceased him and there being no other child. There is thus no reason to suppose that it was intended to give only a limited estate to the son who, it must be remembered, would have taken an absolute estate of inheritance if there had been no will at all. The question therefore would arise whether, in spite of these considerations, the last sentence in the will must be read as if it imposed a condition affecting the character of the bequest in favour of the son. After careful consideration we see no reason to take this view which has been pressed before us on behalf of the appellant. It seems to us as if the testator merely as an after-thought wanted to determine the devolution of the property in case his son died without issue and not in any way to limit either the character of the estate that was given by the earlier bequest in favour of the son or to make it conditional and liable to be divested at his death without issue. In this view of the case which, though supported by other reasons, is the view which has commended itself to the Court below, it is not necessary to consider whether, if the bequest in favour of the son is to be regarded as conditional or if it should be assumed that there is an executory devise in favour of the deity, the conditions which the law imposes on such devises have been satisfied in the present case. We may, however, add that we are not satisfied that any such condition has been violated in this case. In view of the construction which we find it impossible to avoid, it follows that the principal ground of appeal must fail.

It is, however, sought to be argued that, even though the appeal has to fail on this ground, nevertheless the lower Court ought to have given a decree for actual partition in respect of these shares of the plaint property which are covered by the compromises between some of the defendants and the plaintiff-appellant. There might have been a good deal to be said in support of this contention if these defendants who had compromised and whose shares are now sought to be partitioned and handed over to the plaintiff-appellant had been made parties to this appeal. The plaintiff-appellant, however, deliberately refrained from making them parties because the case had been compromised so far as they were concerned. Such being the case, it is not now open to the plaintiff-appellant to ask that any decree should be made for the purpose of actual partition when these defendants are not parties to the appeal. And we may as well add that a belated oral application made after this defect was pointed out is certainly not deserving of serious attention. The result is the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

decree in 1935 which they executed and realised the full amount by the sale of the hypotheca. Plaintiffs also filed an appeal claiming an additional sum by way of interest and on 17th March, 1938, the appellate Court gave a decree for this additional sum. The plaintiffs then applied for payment of the amount of this decree out of the balance in Court deposit, and it was this application which gave rise to the application by the representative of the fourth defendant who had been brought on record in execution to scale down the decree.

In revision a number of points have been taken. The first was whether the applicant by virtue of his mortgage can be said to have a saleable interest in agricultural land which would qualify him for the benefits of the Act having regard to the definition in S. 3 (ii). This point is covered by our decision in *Subburama Aiyar v. Venkatachalapathi Aiyar*¹, in which we have held that a simple mortgagee has such a saleable interest as to qualify him for the benefits of the Act.

The second point taken relates to the power of the trial Court under S. 19 to scale down a decree passed by the appellate Court. This question is covered by the decision of a Bench of this Court in *Rantala Ganga Raju v. Bikkina Bulli Ramayya*², with which we are in respectful agreement.

A more substantial question is whether a puisne mortgagee impleaded in a suit by the earlier mortgagee can be deemed to be a 'debtor' entitled to the benefits of the Act; that is to say, is he a person who is liable to pay the amount of the debt due to the first mortgagee. There is a decision of Newsam, J., in *Narayanachari v. Annamalai Chettiar*³, to the effect that a puisne mortgagee is not a debtor of the first mortgagee decree-holder, the reason being that he is a person in whose favour the privilege of redeeming the first mortgage debt has been recognised but not one who is under an obligation to pay. This judgment, which is very short, makes no reference to the earlier case, *Perianna v. Sellappa*⁴, in which the Bench had to consider the position of the purchaser of the equity of redemption impleaded in a mortgage suit and they held that the purchaser had such a liability as would fall within the definition of 'debt' under S. 3 (iii) of the Act and that certainly it was not the intention of the Legislature to limit the relief under the Act to cases where a judgment-debtor was personally liable. An attempt has been made to distinguish this decision on the ground that it emphasized the possessory interest which the purchaser had to protect by discharging the mortgage-debt, whereas in the case of the puisne mortgagee, it is possible for the latter to await the result of the sale and collect his dues from the proceeds thereof, if sufficient balance remains. We are unable to accept this distinction as valid. Under the mortgage decree, the debt is made payable by the judgment-debtor who is a puisne mortgagee. It is true that he need not pay it, if he is prepared to risk the loss of his interest in the hypotheca or if he is confident that the sale will produce sufficient to satisfy his mortgage as well as that of the first mortgagee. Surely the purchaser of the equity of redemption impleaded in a mortgage suit is in a very similar position. He need not pay the debt if he is prepared to risk the loss of his property, or if he is confident that the sale will realise sufficient to pay him a fair compensation for the money he has spent in acquiring the equity of redemption. In each case, there is in fact a liability to pay the debt of the first mortgagee. It is not a personal liability, but it is nonetheless a liability. The fact that a puisne mortgagee is a person under a liability to pay the debt of the first mortgagee has been recognised in other decisions apart from those under this Act—vide *Askaram Sowkar v. Venkataswami Naidu*¹ and *Thinnappa Chettiar v. Krishna Rao*². We have no doubt that the principle governing the decision in *Perianna v. Sellappa*³, must also govern the decision of the present case and we must hold that the puisne mortgagee against whom a decree has been passed in a suit by the first mortgagee is a person liable to pay the debt of the plaintiff.

In the result therefore the petition is dismissed with costs of the contesting respondent.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938). S. 3 (ii) (a)—Simple mortgagee of agricultural land—If an 'agriculturist'.

A simple mortgagee is a person having a saleable interest in land and so an 'agriculturist' within the meaning of the Act.

The Court delivered the following

worth, J.

JUDGMENTS. Wadsworth, J.—The question in this revision petition is whether a simple mortgagee of agricultural land has a saleable interest therein, so as to bring him within the definition of the term, 'agriculturist', in S. 3 (ii) (a) of Madras Act IV of 1938.

A mortgage is certainly an interest in immovable property and it is certainly saleable, so that, on the plain language of the section, it would seem to follow that a simple mortgagee of agricultural land is an agriculturist. The contention which has found favour with the lower Court and which is urged before us is, that the words, "has a saleable interest in land", mean, has a right to sell the land, and it is argued that it could not have been the intention of the legislature to give to a money-lender the rights and benefits of an agriculturist debtor. With reference to this argument, it need only be said that possibly the definition of the word 'agriculturist' has been framed too widely so as to bring within the benefits of the Act those whom the legislature did not intend to benefit, but if so, the remedy is to amend the Act and not to qualify its words by putting in words we do not find in the section. As the definition is drafted, we take it to include a simple mortgagee. The Civil Revision

Petition is therefore allowed with costs and the application is remitted to the trial Court for disposal.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—I agree with my-learned brother, and only wish to add that I was first inclined to think that the opening words of the section, "unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context," might serve to exclude the petitioner in this case from the scope of the definition, as it does seem somewhat repugnant to the natural sense of the word, 'agriculturist' to hold that it includes a simple mortgagee who is only a creditor holding immovable property as security for his debt; but, having regard to the various classes of persons who cannot be said to be agriculturists in the strict sense of the term, but who are clearly intended to be benefited by the Act, I hesitate to base any conclusion on the repugnancy clause.

Wadsworth, J.—This revision petition raises the question of the meaning of the explanation to S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. Does the term “renewed or included in a fresh document” cover the case in which a debt due by A is discharged on a debt due by B to the same creditor being substituted for it?

The facts are that one Arunachala was indebted to the plaintiff under a promissory note Ex. E of the year 1918. That promissory note was discharged and in lieu of it on the same day (3rd October, 1934) a promissory note Ex. D was executed by the defendant who is a distant relative of Arunachala. This has been renewed by a series of documents terminating in the suit promissory note by defendant to the plaintiff dated 19th August, 1936. There is a missing link in 1925, but the lower Court has found that the evidence is sufficient to prove that the missing promissory note of 1925 was part of the chain of renewals. It follows therefore that in scaling down the debt the defendant is at least entitled to go back to Ex. D of 1924. The lower Court has found that he is also entitled to go back to Ex. E of 1918 executed by his relative Arunachala and the plaintiff seeks to revise this order.

It was held by Somayya, J., in *In re Ramaswami Chettiar*¹, that when B takes over a debt due by A, the new document is not a renewal of A's debt nor is it an inclusion in a fresh document so as to bring in the explanation to S. 8. There is a very brief judgment of Stodart, J., in C.R.P. No. 1962 of 1939 where our learned brother held that in the case of a debt by A renewed by his legal representative B, the explanation to S. 8 applies and that B's debt was a renewal of that of A. It is possible that different considerations may govern the case of two debts, one incurred by the legal representative of the debtor under the earlier debt. We are not, however, concerned with such a case here. The defendant was not the legal representative of Arunachala. The fact seems to be that by some private arrangement the debt due by the defendant was substituted for the debt due by his relative Arunachala. Can it be said in such circumstances that the defendant's debt is a renewal of the debt of Arunachala? We have no doubt that in ordinary parlance, when we speak of a renewal of a debt, we ordinarily mean the substitution of a fresh contract between the same parties for the same amount or the same amount plus accrued interest. That is the view taken by the Court of Appeal in the case of *Barber v. Mackrell*¹. Lord Justice Lindley says:

1. (1939) 2 M.L.J. 609.

"A bill is renewed when another bill is taken in its place, the parties to the bill and the amount of it being the same, though perhaps in some cases the interest due on the one bill is added."

It seems to us clear that this is the sense in which the word 'renewed' is employed by the Legislature in the explanation to S. 8.

It has been contended that though the defendant's debt may not be a renewal of the debt of Arunachala, it may be said to be an inclusion in a fresh document of Arunachala's debt and that the explanation can therefore be applied. We consider that this interpretation of the explanation to S. 8 involves violence to the language. Reading that explanation as a whole, we have no doubt that it was intended to cover the case of a debt by A in favour of X renewed by another debt by A in favour of X or included in a fresh document executed by A in favour of X for the original advance plus some further sum. This view is confirmed by reference to the later words of the explanation regarding the principal originally advanced with such sums, if any, as have been subsequently advanced and especially by reference to the final words 'principal sum repayable by the agriculturist'. Obviously, the Legislature was dealing with the same debtor throughout. We say nothing on the question whether when A dies and B inherits his liability and executes a new promissory note in substitution for that executed by A, the explanation would or would not apply.

In the result therefore we hold that the defendant will be entitled in scaling down the debt to go back only to the promissory note Ex. D dated 3rd October, 1924.

There is one other point with respect to which the lower Court's order appears to be defective. No provision is made in the lower Court's order for the costs in the suit. This is not a case to which S. 18 (1) applies as the suit appears to have been filed before 1st October, 1937. The omission to provide for the costs in the suit seems to have been due to inadvertance. This will be remedied by the trial Court if the petitioner's statement

Mockett, J.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Mockett, J.—The first defendant is the appellant. He is the son of one Chelamiah who died on the 15th October, 1925, at a great age. The second defendant is the brother of the first defendant and the plaintiff is the third brother. The following facts were stated from the bar and were accepted. In April or October, 1917—at this stage it is not necessary to be more precise about the date—the family became divided in status. In 1920, the second defendant filed, but subsequently withdrew, a suit for partition, but on May 22nd, 1921, there was a muchilka entered into between the parties with a view to dividing the property. On that there was a reference to arbitration by the plaintiff and the defendants and it is on that reference that this matter comes before this Court, having been first of all decided by the District Judge of East Godavari. That is all that is necessary at present with regard to the facts, because what is now being dealt with may be called a preliminary point. It can be shortly stated. Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the first defendant has raised a point which was referred to but not decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in *Ramlal Hargopal v. Kishanchand*¹. The point in question is dealt with by Lord Phillimore at page 372. His Lordship said:

“It was contended on behalf of the appellant that if an award relates to more than one subject-matter and only one is within the jurisdiction of the Court, it cannot be filed in that Court; in fact, that it can be filed in no Court, because no one Court would have jurisdiction over the whole subject-matter. Their Lordships deem it unnecessary to rest their judgment on any such general proposition.”

Lord Phillimore went on to point out why it was unnecessary to decide that point. His reason was this, namely, that it was evident to their Lordships that the property concerned in the case before them was property wholly outside British India and that in the words of their Lordships there was no dispute concerning the ownership and management of properties within the jurisdiction. It must, therefore, be emphasised in that case that what was before the lower Court was an application under S. 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to property wholly outside the jurisdiction of the Courts of British India. What is the procedure set out in the second schedule? Clause 20 is headed "Arbitration without the intervention of a Court" and it says:

"Where any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court, and an award has been made thereon, any person interested in the award may apply to any Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award that the award be filed in Court."

And in the case to which I have just referred there was an application to the Court to file an award with regard to property wholly outside British India. In this case it is not necessary to say more than this, that admittedly this award dealt with property and part of it was immovable property within the jurisdiction of the District Judge of East Godavari and part of it outside his jurisdiction, as that term is ordinarily understood. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar has argued before us exactly the point that was referred to by Lord Phillimore. His argument is that clause 20 of the second schedule to the Code states that the person interested in the award may apply to any Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award and that means "to a Court having jurisdiction over the whole of the subject-matter of the award" and that, as admittedly part of the subject-matter of this award is situated outside East Godavari judicial District, the District Judge had no jurisdiction. And Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar has also not recoiled from the position that no judge had any jurisdiction to make an order under clause 20 in regard to this matter, because once it is conceded that the subject-matter is in more than one jurisdiction, it must follow that no Judge in any one jurisdiction can have jurisdiction over it. That seems to me to be a startling proposition and it is difficult to suppose that the legislature can have contemplated the results it would produce in numerous cases—for it naturally and frequently happens—especially on the borders of districts that family lands are partly in one district and partly in another. But authorities have been cited to us which, according to the learned Counsel for the appellant, are said to support the proposition. It is as well to state that no authority has been cited to us covering facts similar to the facts now under consideration. There is no authority which has been brought to our notice in which it has been decided that, when an application under cl. 20 relates to property in two jurisdictions in British India, no Court has jurisdiction to hear the application. But there is clear authority that, when part of the subject-matter is in British India and part of the subject-matter is in a foreign state which naturally in this country usually means "in a native state", the Court in British India cannot exercise jurisdiction over the award. I respectfully agree that that must necessarily be so, because, once it is conceded, and especially in the case of immovable property, that the property in question is wholly outside the jurisdiction of the British Courts, it must follow that a British Court cannot deal with an award because the award could not be enforced in a foreign state and moreover very curious results must follow, if the award was divided. The following result would follow; that is to say, A has awarded to him lands in British India and B lands in a foreign state. A partial enforcement of that award would mean that A would get something and B would get nothing. It is obvious that, in order to make an award effective, the whole of it must be enforced except possibly in such cases in which it appears that the award may be equitably divisible and that is a topic on which I desire to express no opinion. This particular topic—severability—has been discussed in one or two cases but does not in this case require any decision from us. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar relies very strongly on a decision of this High Court which is reported in *Krishna Aiyar v. Subbarama Aiyar*¹. The learned Judges in that case, Reilly and Anantakrishna Aiyar, JJ., held that the expression "the subject-matter of the award" in para. 20 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code means "the whole" and not "the whole or portion of the subject-matter of the award" and a Court within whose jurisdiction a portion of the immovable properties forming the subject-matter of an award is situated has therefore no jurisdiction to entertain an application to file the award made under that paragraph. That is a very general proposition and, if accepted by us, undoubtedly covers this case and is a clear authority in favour of Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar's argument. But it is most important to emphasise that in that case the properties over which the Subordinate Judge of Palghat in this province purported to exercise jurisdiction were partly within the Madras Presidency and partly in Travancore, a state under the rule of His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore. There was some discussion with regard to certain property situate in Bangalore. It is not necessary to go into that as it is sufficient if part of the property concerned lay within Travancore. That judgment therefore deals with the position which I have previously indicated, namely, where it is obvious that the Court in British India can have no jurisdiction to make any order it is to be emphasised that there were immovable properties in Travancore State. It does not seem that in that case any argument was addressed to the Court with regard to the position before us now, namely, where the whole of the properties are in British India. At page 694 Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., who gave the leading judgment of the Court says:

"Prima facie the expression 'over the subject-matter of the award' would seem to imply over the whole of the subject-matter of the award. The words 'whole' or 'in part' occur in para. 11 of the second schedule, and in S. 17 of the Code, the words 'any portion of the property' occur. If therefore, the intention of the legislature was that the words 'subject-matter of the award' should mean the whole or a portion of the subject-matter of the award, then it is reasonable to expect that it would have said so expressly."

As to this, there seem to me to be little relation between S. 11 and S. 20 which deal with very different topics and with respect I am not able to agree that they can be usefully compared.

The learned Judges relied on two decisions, both of this High Court. The first was a decision of Scotland, C.J., and Collett, J., reported in *Gangappa v. Kapinappa*¹ and secondly reference is made to certain observations of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., referred to in *Ratnamalai Servai v. Ramaswami Servai*². Reference is also made to a decision in Rangoon reported in *S. A. Nathan v. S. R. Samson*³. But in that latter case also the subject-matter was immovable properties within the jurisdiction of British Courts and immovable properties in the French territory of Pondicherry. In the case reported in the Madras High Court Reports the Court observed as follows:

"The application must be made to a Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the award relates From this it appears quite clear that the Court applied to must be one having jurisdiction in respect of the whole matter."

We have had the advantage of seeing the original documents in that case. It was a reference by the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Chittoor and it is clear from that reference that what the arbitrators had done was to adjudicate on debts payable between the parties, the aggregate thereof being beyond the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court but the amount of one of them within the jurisdiction. In other words, what was raised in that reference was, could a Court of Small Causes deal with an award which dealt with matters beyond its pecuniary jurisdiction? And the learned Judges took the view that the Court applied to must be one having jurisdiction in respect of the whole matter. That seems to me to mean "having jurisdiction in the sense that it is understood, the measure of pecuniary jurisdiction" and that, if the award dealt with a matter that was beyond that jurisdiction, it was a clear case when the award as a whole could not be enforced by that Court. The judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., does not seem to me to touch the question which we have to decide, because his observations are very general. What had happened in that case was that an arbitrator had joined in an award an order for dissolution of marriage and also for the payment of money. What Kumaraswami Sastri, J., held was that the jurisdiction of the Court would depend upon the reliefs awarded by the award and that it was not open to the parties to confer jurisdiction on the Subordinate Judge to deal with matters over which he had no jurisdiction at all. It should in this appeal be remembered that the District Court of East Godavari has unlimited jurisdiction. It is well to mention that the decision to which we have just referred in *Krishna Aiyar v. Subbarama Aiyar*¹ has been considered by a Bench, Broomfield and Sen, JJ., of the Bombay High Court in *Gangadhar v. Dattatraya*² and their Lordships at page 212 express the view that:

"If the decision in *Krishna Aiyar v. Subbarama Aiyar*¹ is correct, it could mean that in many cases private arbitrations could never be made effective in the manner contemplated by the legislature, since there would be no Court to which the application could be made. With all deference to the learned Judges who decided this case I am not satisfied that this is the law".

In my view the learned Judges in Bombay have not noticed what seems to me the key to the whole position, namely, that, however general the words in that decision, the decision itself actually only deals with references in which property in British India and property in a foreign jurisdiction is concerned. If the decision of the Court was intended to go further than the actual facts before it, I personally should be disposed to share the doubt expressed by the Bombay High Court. But I take the view that that decision extends no further than the actual facts and that it is only due to the generality of the observations of the Court while dealing with those particular facts that it has been possible to attempt to extend the decision so as to bring about the deadlock which the appellant seeks to establish in this case in applications under cl. 20 of Sch. II. In my view there is a complete answer to the argument which has been put before us by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar. It must be observed in cl. 20 that any person interested in the award may apply to any Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award. How is the Court to determine whether it has or has not jurisdiction? What procedure is laid down? In the case of an ordinary Court, in an ordinary suit, the Civil Procedure Code, Ss. 15 to 25 give guidance to the Courts as to how they should decide whether they have jurisdiction or not and it seems to me that it is by reference to S. 16 that the appellant contends that the Court has no jurisdiction. But it is argued that these sections do not apply to proceedings under cl. 20. The nature of those proceedings is dealt with in sub-cl. 2. It is stated that the application should be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as the plaintiff and the other parties as defendants. A reference to the record in this case shows that the pleadings are described as in an ordinary suit. It is numbered as such. There is the document headed a "plaint." There are three written statements and additional written statements and there were issues. From where is all that procedure derived? It has not been possible for me to understand how, if the Civil Procedure Code does not apply, it is possible for the Court to which application is made under cl. 20 to decide any matters at all. Once again how can it decide whether it has jurisdiction? It seems to me that the curious position referred to by Lord Phillimore and argued before us to-day is met by the answer that the intention of sub-cl. 2 of cl. 20 is that these applications should be in every way treated as suits and that the procedure applying to suits should apply to them; and I am fortified in that view by the position which at the risk of repetition I will again state that, if it is not so, then apparently there is no procedure and no methods whatever provided by which the Court can deal with those matters. If that is so,

S. 17 of the Code provides that where a suit is to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immovable property situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts, the suit may be instituted in any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any portion of the property is situate. If S. 17 applies, it is obviously open to the plaintiff as they are described in the pleadings in this case to file their plaint in East Godavari and the East Godavari Court would have jurisdiction to hear that case not only with regard to the property immediately within its jurisdiction but with regard to any other property, the subject of that suit; and the result would be that by the application of S. 17 the East Godavari Court would have jurisdiction over the whole of the subject-matter when the trial starts. If that is so, much of the argument in this case will have been unnecessary. I hold that for the reasons I have given, the District Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the whole of the subject-matter which is situate in the first place outside his jurisdiction but by the filing of the suit included the other matters in the plaint over the whole of the subject-matter. The arguments which I just referred to were directed from another aspect of the case altogether. It was contended by the learned Counsel for the respondent that it was not open to Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar to raise this objection at all. It had never been argued in the Court below that the Court had no jurisdiction and therefore, says the learned Counsel for the respondent, S. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code is in the appellant's way. It has never been raised as a ground of appeal and therefore, again says the respondent, O. 41, r. 2, prevents the appellant from raising it. As the argument was originally put to us by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar, I inclined to the view that he was not prevented from raising the point for the same reason that the appellant was not prevented from raising the point in the case before the Judicial Committee to which I have referred, because what he was arguing was that this was a case of no jurisdiction whatever. But in view of what I have held above I think technically this is a matter relating to the place of suing which should have been raised in the lower Court and that therefore both the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code stand in Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar's way and, speaking for myself, I should not be disposed to grant him any indulgence here to allow him to raise it. All this, however, is purely academic, because, in order to arrive at a decision with regard to the whole matter, it has been necessary for us to hear it argued in full and I therefore only record my above view for the sake of completeness. For the reasons I have given I consider that the objection by the appellant that the lower Court had no jurisdiction to hear this application under cl. 20 of the second schedule of the Civil Procedure Code must fail.

swami
Aiyangar, J.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—I agree. It is unnecessary for me to refer to the facts which have been sufficiently set out in the judgment of my learned brother just now delivered. In the memorandum of appeal before us the appellant has taken a number of points. We are not now dealing with any of those points but with a question of jurisdiction not raised in the Court below and not mentioned in the grounds of appeal before us. O. 41, r. 2 leaves a discretion in the Court as to whether an appellant may be allowed to urge in support of his appeal a ground of objection not set forth in the memorandum of appeal. I may also mention that, beyond giving the respondent notice that the objection was going to be taken, the appellant has not chosen to follow the procedure indicated by r. 42 of the Appellate Side Rules for obtaining leave to raise an additional ground of appeal. Ordinarily speaking, we should not object to a new ground of appeal being raised and argued if the respondent is not likely to suffer any prejudice thereby. But it seems to me that the facts of this case render it extremely difficult for us to exercise our discretion in favour of the appellant. The application for filing the award was made in the Court below in September, 1926, and it was heard and disposed of on the 30th October, 1935. The application therefore appears to have been pending for a period of nearly nine years in the Court below and the hearing itself before the learned Judge seems to have occupied a period of twelve days. The appeal to this Court was filed about 3½ years back and, after all this long lapse of time and after all the expense which must have been incurred, one feels naturally reluctant to allow a point to be raised which had never been taken before. But, in view of the large stakes involved and the possibility of the case proceeding further, it is perhaps proper that we should deal with the merits of the objection.

The objection is that the Court below had no jurisdiction to entertain the application because the whole of the property which formed the subject-matter of the award did not lie within the local limits of its territorial jurisdiction. It is not disputed that except for a house in Innespet, Rajahmundry and a share in a rice factory in the same place the rest of the large properties, mostly immovable, dealt with by the award were outside the Court's jurisdiction. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar, the learned Counsel for the appellant, has contended that the Court having jurisdiction over an application to file an award under para. 20 of the second schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure is the Court having jurisdiction over the whole of the subject-matter of the award and, inasmuch as admittedly in this case a portion only of that subject-matter was within the jurisdiction of the Court below, it had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. In other words, a Court having territorial jurisdiction over a part only of the subject-matter is wholly incompetent to deal with an application filed under the paragraph. If the award should be sought to be enforced in a suit it is not disputed that the suit could be entertained by a Court having jurisdiction over part only of the subject-matter of the award. The contention, however, is that an application coming under para. 20 is not governed in matters of jurisdiction by the rules in the Code which determine the venue for the purpose of a suit. There are two objections to this contention. In the first place, though para. 20 speaks of a Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award, neither it nor the second schedule contains any rules for determining the Court invested with jurisdiction in matters within the second schedule. We would be left entirely without any guidance on the point unless we can refer to the provisions of Ss. 15 to 25 in the Code as providing the necessary machinery. S. 89 of the Code is not to be regarded as implying a prohibition to this course. That section provides that:

"Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the second schedule."

There is nothing in the language of the section to warrant our holding that the sections of the Code or the rules in the First Schedule do not apply to matters arising under the second schedule. For instance, the question whether the procedure of O. 23, r. 3 could be made applicable to matters arising under the second schedule was considered in Subbaraju v. Venkata- *ramaraju*¹ and it was ruled that the Code was applicable to the second schedule which is really a part of it and that there was no justification to regard it as a self-contained chapter in itself. So it seems to me that it is not only permissible but obligatory upon the Court to take note of the provisions of Ss. 15 to 20 and with their aid to ascertain which Court is the proper Court to entertain an application under para. 20. Among those sections is S. 17 which furnishes a valuable guidance for the determination of the point raised. It enables a party to institute a suit relating to immovable property if a portion at least, though not the whole of the property is situate within the limits of the Court to which he resorts. Where the property is situate within the jurisdictions of different Courts, the plaintiff has the option of choosing any one of those Courts, and when he has once chosen it, he is entitled to bring before it not only so much of the dispute as relates to the property within its jurisdiction but the entire dispute covering that property, and other property in other jurisdictions as well. In other words, where, by reason of S. 17, a Court is given jurisdiction by reason of part alone of the property being within its local limits that jurisdiction extends over the entire subject-matter of the suit. I am quite unable to accede to the argument that S. 17 does not govern the consideration of the question as to which Court is to be held for the purpose of para. 20 of the second schedule to have jurisdiction in a given case. If this construction is not to be accepted, it would lead, as my learned brother has observed, to startling results; it would really result in denying altogether to a litigant an easy and inexpensive remedy by way of application in every case where the subject-matter of the award lies in more jurisdictions than one. In fact, if such were the case no Court whatever would have jurisdiction to deal with an application under the paragraph. If this was the intention of the Legislature, one would expect to find more explicit language to have been used. In my opinion it is a forced construction that is sought to be placed upon the word subject-matter in para. 20. It is not to be forgotten that the primary object of the Legislature is to place in the hands of litigants an easy, speedy and inexpensive remedy by resort to a domestic tribunal of their own choice without the necessity of having to institute a suit with all the delay, expenses, worry and trouble it might entail. Para. 20 appears to my mind to be conceived with the object of promoting such a beneficent purpose and I am of opinion that if I accede to the contention of the appellant, it would result, in an appreciably large number of cases, in the frustration of the very object behind the paragraph. Beyond stating that such was the law and the plain construction of the language the appellant's learned Counsel was unable to point to any intelligible or rational basis for the distinction that he drew between a suit and an application for enforcing an award. And I find it difficult for my part, more especially when the language is not plain, to give my assent to a construction which, far from advancing justice, has the effect of hindering it.

It is true that para. 20 speaks of any Court having jurisdiction, jurisdiction may be territorial, or pecuniary and may also depend on the nature of the dispute brought up for settlement before the Court. Whether or not an objection to jurisdiction which is based upon the limits of pecuniary jurisdiction or has reference to the nature of the disputed matter can be waived, it seems to me that an objection having reference to the local or territorial jurisdiction of the Court is capable of being waived. This furnishes the second ground for repelling the contention. S. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure enacts that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity. Some argument—I confess it was a little too subtle for me—was advanced on behalf of the appellant to the effect that there was a distinction recognised by the Code between what was called 'the place of suing' which is the heading under which Ss. 15 to 25 appear, and the jurisdiction of the Court to take cognizance of a matter although that jurisdiction may turn on its local or territorial limits. To my mind the determination of the place of suing is the same thing as the determination of the local or territorial jurisdiction of the Court. If, either by reason of S. 17 of the Code or by reason of the omission of the party to take the objection to the territorial jurisdiction of the Court at the proper time, the Court entertains or deals with a litigation it seems to me that it is a case where there was either no initial defect of jurisdiction, or if there was such a defect it is one that must be deemed to have been waived. As my learned brother has pointed out, para. 20, cl. 2 makes it fairly clear that the procedure applicable to the determination of applications coming within it is the procedure relating to suits, and, if I understood the appellant's learned Counsel aright, he seemed to concede this proposition. The considerations adverted to above incline me to the opinion that the District Court of East Godavari which had admittedly jurisdiction over a part of the subject-matter of the award had ample jurisdiction over the whole, and was therefore competent to make the order it has made.

It has been contended that there are judicial pronouncements in this Court and in the Privy Council which make it obligatory on us to hold that where the whole of the subject-matter is not within the jurisdiction of a Court but only a part of it that Court has no power to entertain the application. Before referring to the cases relied upon for the appellant it is perhaps well to remember that in S. 16 of the Code which lays down the essential test for fixing the venue there is an important explanation added, namely, that 'property' in the section means 'property situate in British India'. S. 16 is the most important section of the group of sections relating to the place of suing. S. 17 and the later sections in the group proceed to widen and enlarge the scope of S. 16 by enacting other and more liberal rules. However that may be it is not permissible in view of the explanation to S. 16 to extend the jurisdiction of the Court beyond British India or even to any place within it to which the Code of Civil Procedure does not extend. In *Raniabhadra Raju Bahadur v. Maharaja of Jaipur*¹, the question was whether a mortgage decree for the sale passed by the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam comprising properties not only within his jurisdiction but also in the Agency tract governed by the Scheduled Districts Act could be held to be valid. The Civil Procedure Code did not extend to the Agency and the Subordinate Judge who was only exercising jurisdiction under the Code had no power whatever to deal with, or pass any decree relating to property in the Agency. That being so, the objection to the jurisdiction of the Court was held to be one which went to the very root of the matter and the decree was held to be null and void so far as that property was concerned. For the term 'Courts' in S. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code, as their Lordships point put, could have reference only to Courts to which the Code applies and where the Code did not apply, it was no use referring to S. 21 or any other provision in it for validating an invalid order. The importance of this decision lies in this, that a distinction must be made between cases where the property lies within British India though in different jurisdiction to which the Code applies and a case where some portion of the property is within British India and some portion out of it, in a Native state or in any other place to which the Code as such is not, and could not be made applicable.

It is on the decision in *Krishna Aiyar v. Subbarama Aiyar*¹ that the appellant relied almost exclusively for the argument that the Court below not having jurisdiction over the whole of the subject-matter had no jurisdiction at all to deal with the application. A reference to the facts of the case makes it clear that the award in that case comprised property partly situate in British India and partly in Travancore. The Court held that the application could not be entertained as the word subject-matter in para. 20 of Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code, meant the whole matter dealt with and decreed by the award and not any particular portion of it only and that the Court being incompetent to pass a decree in respect of the whole of the award property, could not split it up and deal with only those portions of it that were within its jurisdiction. The learned Judges were concerned as pointed out by Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., at page 696 with the question whether the Court in British India had jurisdiction to pass a decree in accordance with the award when that award dealt with property outside British India. The actual decision was thus circumscribed by reason of the inapplicability of the Code to part of the award property and the consequential incompetency of the Court to deal with it. It is thus clear that S. 17 can be displaced only in a case where part of the property is situate outside British India and not in a case where as here the whole of it is in British India though in different jurisdictions and therefore governed by the Code. In fact neither side has been able to point to any precedent governing a case like the one before us. There are however observations in the judgment which tend to support the appellant though the actual decision as I understand it, does not. We have examined the facts in all the cases referred to by the learned Judges who decided *Krishna Aiyar v. Subbarama Aiyar*¹ and we find that there is none among them which can be said to furnish a parallel to the present case. It will be found on examination that either they are cases where the question did not turn upon territorial jurisdiction at all as for example, *Gangappa v. Kapinappa*² and *Ratnamalai Servai v. Ramaswami Servai*³, or where a single inseparable award had dealt with property situate partly in British India and partly outside. Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., has also expressed the opinion that para. 20 provides a special procedure and confers an extra and special statutory right under special conditions imposed by that paragraph. He thinks that there is no hardship in construing S. 20 in the way he does as there is an alternative remedy available to the party by a regular suit which he can by virtue of S. 17 institute in any one of the several Courts within whose jurisdiction the property or any part of it is situate. I regret that with great respect I am unable to agree that this aspect of the question affords a true guidance to the construction of para. 20 which, as I have indicated, must receive a liberal rather than a restricted construction. The Bombay High Court has expressed a view contrary to the one which has found support in *Krishna Aiyar v. Subbarama Aiyar*¹. The latest case in Bombay brought to our notice is that reported in *Gangadhar v. Dattatraya*⁴, to which I shall not refer as it has been already dealt with in detail by my learned brother.

Reference was made to the decision of the Privy Council reported in *Ramlal Hargopal v. Kishanchand*⁵. In that case an award relating to the management of three Hindu temples for the support of which three villages had been endowed two of which were in Berar, was sought to be filed in the District Court of East Berar. Two of the temples were in the Dominions of the Nizam, and the third in British India but not in Berar. The objection to the jurisdiction taken before the District Judge himself in the first instance though not pressed afterwards was allowed to prevail in the Privy Council. The ground of the decision was that all the temples were outside Berar and although two of the endowed villages were within the jurisdiction there was no dispute concerning their ownership or management or the application of their revenues to the upkeep of the temples. In other words, the award did not in fact deal with properties outside the jurisdiction, or as the Board pointed out, there was no substantial question decided by the award which affected property within the jurisdiction of the Berar Court. It was no doubt contended that if an award relates to more than one subject-matter and only one is within the jurisdiction of the Court, it cannot be filed in that Court; in fact that it can be filed in no Court, because no one Court would have jurisdiction over the whole subject-matter. But their Lordships did not find it necessary to pronounce on any such general proposition. I am unable to treat this decision as containing any support for the appellant's contention. The point is merely mentioned and not decided, and the relevant provisions of the Code were not noticed.

For the reasons which I have endeavoured to explain I am unable to see any substance in the objection to jurisdiction raised on behalf of the appellant and agree that it must be overruled.

Their Lordships delivered the following judgments on the merits of the appeal:—

Mockett, J.—I will now deal with the objections to this award as stated by Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, who appears on behalf of the first defendant Venkatachalam. (1) Chelamiah having died in 1925 was not thereafter a party to the reference which was thereby revoked. (2) If the reference was not thereby revoked, Chelamiah's legal representative should have been added. (3) Matters referred were not decided. (4) Matters not referred were decided. (5) The arbitrators misconducted themselves. (6) The award is bad in part on the face of it.

Mockett, J.

As far as it is possible, I will deal with the arguments addressed separately on these points although many arguments overlapped.

[His Lordship proceeded to consider the evidence and concluded.]

In my opinion these charges of misconduct are wholly unfounded and are a pure after-thought on the part of a disgruntled party to the reference. I think a reasonable latitude should be allowed in examining awards such as these having regard to the people concerned and the circumstances. More especially would I be unwilling to assist a party who, with full knowledge of the circumstances, allows an arbitration to proceed and takes part in it and then seeks to evade it later on by raising a number of objections which have never occurred to him before. The observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee on this topic in *Chowdhri Murtaza Hossein v. Mussumat Bibi Bechunnissa*¹ can clearly be called in aid by the respondent. This applies not only to that part of the case which I have dealt with but also with regard to what follows.

The appellant has argued that in importing the terms of Ex. C into the award the arbitrators have gone outside the scope of the reference. Ex. C is dated 2nd October, 1917. The reference of muchilika is dated 22nd May, 1921. Ex. A is a curiously worded document. It does not say that the property should be divided equally among Chelamiah and his 3 sons. It says:

"You should effect a partition as you think fit according to your pleasure and give a decision, that you should give some property you think fit to Chelamiah of us—out of the properties mentioned above and make proper arrangements therefor as you please, that you should divide and give the remaining property to Venkatachellam, Suryanarayanamurty and Ammiraju."

I do not think it has really been doubted in this case that the intention was, Chelamiah being over 90—so we are told—to make reasonable provision during his life and partition between the brothers. The history leading up to Ex. A is unfortunately not clarified in the evidence, I think this has been one of those cases where knowledge of all the circumstances seems to have been assumed by those in charge of the case in the lower Court and so not proved. According to Ex. III-B Chelamiah gave a notice to Venkatachellam calling on him to divide the property into four equal shares. That is dated 3rd July, 1918, some 9 months after Ex. C. What happened I do not know but it seems to me that Ex. A replaced Ex. C. The arbitrators considered Ex. C very fully and they said regarding it:

"Considering the position and circumstances, status, etc., of this family we are of opinion that the above arrangements subject to the alterations specified hereunder are very proper. All the parties accepted the above terms and have given effect to them till now. The said terms are hereby confirmed subject to the alterations hereunder and it is decided that the same should be given effect to. The properties proposed to be given to the various individuals in pursuance of the above terms should be determined and the necessary alterations should be specified according to the partition which we are now effecting."

Mockett, J.

It seems to me that what the arbitrators did was to take as the frame work of their award a previous agreement which had been entered into between the parties but made certain adjustments which were necessary, for instance, Chelamiah had died and so provision had to be made naturally for his wife, the mother of the plaintiff and the male defendants. It must again be remembered that long before then the immovable properties had been divided by consent. I do not think it was outside the terms of the reference in a Hindu family for the arbitrators to make provision for charity and for the women members. In fact, that such a criticism could be directed to a family division of property caused me some surprise which was, I understand, shared perhaps even in a greater degree by my learned brother. But any difficulty over this disappears if the evidence of the arbitrator P. W. 2 is accepted, because he stated at the conclusion of his evidence that the allotment of the land to the sisters and to the choultry was agreed to by the parties. This witness's evidence has been accepted throughout by the learned Judge and in my view rightly. In Ex. L dated 23rd April, 1926, Venkatachellam is writing with reference to the registration of the land for the choultry and for the sisters. No objection was taken to these matters in Ex. XV, the notice sent to the arbitrator. I think it is perfectly evident that this ground also is an after-thought. Apart from the affirmative evidence of the arbitrator the whole of the probabilities in this case point to members of the family assenting to the arrangement being made for pious purposes and for the ladies of their family.

Considerable arguments have been addressed to us on the following topic. It has been contended for the appellant that Chelamiah was one of the referring parties, that as he died on the 15th October, 1925, the award of the 25th August, 1926, is bad in law on the ground that the reference was wholly revoked by the death of *Chelamiah, a referring party. The Indian Arbitration Act of 1899 applies only to Presidency towns and arguments have therefore been based on the common law.

Mockett, J.

Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar has argued that he is entitled to go back to the position as it was in England before legislation affecting arbitrations and reference is made to the case of *Orphan Board v. Van Reenen*¹. We have been referred to the judgment of Lord Wynford in the course of which the following observation is made:

"If men who submit to arbitration in the instrument of submission bind their representatives in a case where the action would survive to or against their representatives although one or both of the parties should die before the award be made, the arbitrators may proceed with the reference. They have provided for the event of death, and agreed, that those who take their property should take it, subject to the decision of the arbitrators appointed. But if the representatives are not included in the reference, and one of the parties dies, that reference is determined."

Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar contends that in the absence of legislation the whole position turns on the relationship of principal and agent between the referring parties and the arbitrator, that as the death of the principal in this case one of the referring parties, determines the authority of the agent, so the arbitrator's authority is withdrawn by the death of a referring party. In fact he relies on the general law as he claims it was and still is.

It has been contended before us that an agreement to refer cannot be specifically enforced under the Specific Relief Act. This no doubt is so, but an arbitration, the subject of the second schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure can be enforced by the provisions of paras. 17 and 19. If this is a matter to be judged by a consideration of the relationship of principal and agent, it would seem that if the death of the principal revokes his authority, it is equally open to the principal during his lifetime to revoke it himself. But that view is negated by a decision of this Court in *Nagaswamy Naik v. Rangaswamy Naik*², in which a bench of this High Court held that in India an agreement to refer an existing dispute to arbitration was as binding and capable of enforcement as any other lawful contract and a submission cannot be revoked without just and sufficient cause. The Court took the view that the English rule was not in consonance with the law of India and referred to the provisions of the then Code of Civil Procedure which are to-day reproduced in the present Code. The learned Judges pointed out that the-dislike of private forums which prevailed in the early days in English Courts have never found favour in the Courts of British India where the policy of the Legislature was rather to promote references to arbitration than to discourage them. That case was decided in 1875. In 1868, the Judicial Committee in *Pestonjee Nusserwanjee v. D. Manockjee & Co.*¹ had held that the appellant cannot at his own will and pleasure revoke the authority of an arbitrator in whose appointment he has concurred. Their Lordships took the view that an agreement to refer was by the Indian Legislature put on the same footing as any other lawful agreement. In 1903, in *Satyannarayana v. Venkata Rangayya*², a Bench of this High Court again dealt with the subject more directly now under discussion. The learned Judges made the following observation:—

“It follows therefore that contracts to refer to arbitration should not, in this country, be treated as standing upon the peculiar footing that such contracts are revocable at the mere will of a party so as to warrant the view that every such contract is essentially of a personal nature, as the District Judge seems to have thought, and the question whether a legal representative of a deceased party is or is not entitled to enforce the contract to refer is a question which would depend upon whether the right dealt with in the reference is of a merely personal nature or is one which survives to the legal representative.”

In *Dutta v. Khedu*³, Kuramat Husain and Chamier, JJ., accepted the Madras view and stated:

“It seems clear, however, that the authority of an arbitrator is not necessarily revoked by the death of one of the parties to a proposed arbitration. In the present case the right to sue survived, and therefore after substitution of the representative of the deceased party the case should have been referred to the arbitration as prayed.”

In the case reported in *Satyannarayana v. Venkata Rangayya*², the reference to arbitration had been filed in Court.

In *Manindra v. Mahananda*⁴, Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ., had before them a case such as the present, namely, where there had been a private submission to arbitration and counsel in that case sought to distinguish between a reference filed in Court and a private submission. The learned Judges observe:—

“But, clearly there is no substantial difference in principle between the cases mentioned and the case before us; as pointed out by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in *Satyanarayana v. Venkata Rangayya*¹, the rule of the English Common Law that a submission to arbitration stands revoked by the death of one of the parties, is not applicable to this country. The test to be applied here is, what is the true nature of the submission? Were the matters in difference personal questions in respect whereof it was not intended that the successors in interest of the parties should be affected by the decision of the arbitrators? If the intention of the parties was that not merely themselves but their representatives in interest should be bound by the decision of the arbitrators, the reference plainly does not stand revoked merely by the death of one of the parties."

The learned Judges go on to say:

"If the hearing had not been completed, it would have been necessary to bring the representatives of the deceased party on the record and to make them parties to the submission. Here, however, the hearing had terminated and nothing remained for the arbitrators to do but to deliver their award."

I cannot see in the case of a private submission to arbitration how the legal representatives of a referring party can be brought on the record, there being no record in the ordinary sense. The only question that arises is whether the result would bind their personal representatives.

In *Binayakdas v. Sashi Bhushan*², Woodroffe and Ghose, JJ., observed:—

"It is true as a general principle that a person who is not a party to, or properly represented in, any proceedings should not be bound by those proceedings. But proceedings before arbitrators are not intended to be carried on according to the rules of procedure contained in the Civil Procedure Code. If there is a binding reference to arbitration all that is necessary to be seen is that there is a substantial representation of the different interests before the arbitrators. The question whether the award would be binding or not must depend upon the circumstances of each case."

*Tegha v. Ram Singh*³ is a case of death of a party to a reference. "It is true," says Sagar, J.:

"That if, before the death of a party, the hearing of the case has been completed and nothing remains to be done except the delivery of the award, and it is also shown that the intention of the parties was that not merely themselves but the legal representatives should also be bound by the decision of the arbitrator, the award delivered after the death of the party would be binding upon his representatives in interest."

It is important to note that the objection here is not taken by the executor under the will of Chelamiah but by one of his sons and it is not suggested there are any merits in this objection. It is frankly conceded to be purely technical. Personally I have very little doubt that by this muchilika Chelamiah intended that there should be a division of the property among his sons and provision for him during his few remaining years as he was then a nonagenarian must necessarily have been in his view. But taking all the circumstances into consideration and the absence of any serious objection by the legal representatives or the executor, I think that the underlying intention of this reference was a final division of the properties and the probable early death of Chelamiah must have been in contemplation. That being so, I do not think it can lie in the mouth of one of the sons to argue that there was no intention that his legal representatives should be bound. Para. 11 of the judgment deals apparently with this topic which has been so fully developed here. I doubt very much whether it was argued in its present form before the lower Court. The objection, the learned Judge says, is that provision was not made for Chelamiah. This is a curious objection coming from the first defendant. On the date of Ex. L, Chelamiah had been dead six months. Nobody took any objection to the continuance of the reference. The conclusion I have arrived at with regard to this objection is that it is now clearly established that in India there is no rule that the death of a referring party of itself recalls the reference to arbitration, that is, brings it to an end. Whether it must continue must depend upon the special circumstances of each case. I am satisfied in the circumstances of this case that it was the intention of Chelamiah and of all concerned that it should go on and that was fully understood by the first defendant. So far as the will is concerned, I think it was no doubt completely lost sight of in the two partition proceedings, Exs. A and C. It has not even been printed in this appeal and I have not heard what its terms are. The first defendant at no time relied on its provisions. For the reasons which I have given, I think the learned Judge arrived at the right conclusion and that he rightly disbelieved the evidence of Venkatachellam on questions of fact which conflicted with that on the other side—and rightly held that the arbitrators acted in good faith throughout—and that they did nothing without the knowledge and consent of all concerned.

Personally I should be very reluctant to interfere with these arbitrations relating to the adjustment of family disputes unless some real injustice or substantial divergence from the law can be proved. When, as in this case, the matter has gone on without objection by anybody until after the result, it would be most undesirable to interfere especially in matters of procedure unless the Court felt itself constrained to do so in the interests of justice.

In the result this appeal must be dismissed with costs. We consider that we should exercise our powers under r. 46 of the Appellate Side Rules in fixing the fee for this case which we fix at Rs. 1,000. Our reason is this. In whatever form the case has been brought before us, it has in fact been in substance and has been argued as a first appeal. It has occupied six days of the time of this Court, it has involved investigation of a nice question of law and we think that it is a proper case for such an order to be made.

The Civil Revision Petition and the memorandum of objections which have not been argued are also dismissed but as to these matters I would make no order as to costs.

It is right that I should add that although objections 3 and 4 set out in the first paragraph of this judgment are under para. 14 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, grounds for remitting the award, not for setting it aside, this case has been argued before us throughout on the basis that the award should be set aside and no application to remit it was made. Indeed it seemed to me that headings 3 and 4 were really included as charges of misconduct rather than under para. 14 of the Second Schedule.

swami
Aiyangar, J.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—I agree that there is no substance in this appeal, but I would however like to add a word or two on some of the matters on which stress was laid in the course of the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellant. I may at once say that there is no ground for thinking that there is any error of law apparent on the face of the award so far as I can see, nor can I see any ground for attributing corruption or misconduct either in fact or in law to any of the arbitrators. I am satisfied that the arbitrators did not decide any matter not referred to them or omitted to decide any matter referred to them. The objection under this head is that a share should have been allotted to the father, which was not done and that no property should have been set apart for the choultry or for the sisters, which is charged as an act outside the reference. The arbitrators were in this case appointed to effect a partition of what was originally a joint family estate between the three brothers, namely, the appellant and respondents 1 and 2. The father Chelamiah was alive at the time of the reference and was in fact himself a party to it though he was very, very old. Looking at the language employed in the muchilika, Ex. A, there is clear indication that he did not want a share to be allotted for himself but that he only desired that some property should in the discretion of the arbitrators be given to him apparently for the purpose of maintaining himself during the brief period during which he expected to live. The age of the father and the nature of the provisions to which he had himself agreed in the Samakhya deed, Ex. C, suggest, that such must have been his intention. Nor is there much substance in the contention that the arbitrators exceeded their powers in making certain other minor provisions which are usually made at the time when partitions in a joint family take place. A reasonable provision for charity or by way of portions to sisters, more especially when the family estate is large, is so common a feature of partitions in general that it is a rare thing to see parties raising a controversy about it at the time or later. Even in the present case the appellant does not object to the provisions themselves as being either improper or extravagant. His learned Counsel has been quite frank when he said that he has a legal right to take advantage of any handy weapon that may be available to him in order that he might get rid of what, according to him, is a hateful award. In the special circumstances of this case and in view of the very large discretion vested in the arbitrators by the words "you should effect a partition as you think fit according to your pleasure and give a decision." I am unable to agree that in setting apart some property for the sisters of the appellant and some for the choultry the arbitrators travelled outside the reference. In fact it would seem that in this matter they had the consent, express or implied, of all the parties including the appellant who only thought of raising this objection in the appeal before us.

It was strenuously urged that the death of Chelamiah during the pendency of the proceedings before the arbitrators brought about a complete termination of the arbitrators' power to proceed further with the reference. The death of Chelamiah, it was contended, operated in law as a revocation of their authority. The principle relied on is the familiar one of an agent's authority coming to an end on the death of the principal.

Whether an arbitrator fills the position merely of an agent whose agency is revocable by the happening of those events which have the effect of determining an ordinary agency is a question not altogether free from difficulty at the first look. The theory of agency had apparently some support in the old common law of England, but it must be remembered that it had reference to the authority of the arbitrator rather than to the agreement to refer between the parties. The former was deemed revocable by the exercise of a legal power supposed to be implicit in the submission itself. The latter was irrevocable, being in the nature of a contract which could not be broken without giving rise to a claim for damages. Even in England the integrity of the common law seems to have been materially interfered with by the enactment of Statutes. In this country we are governed by the statutory provisions on the subject and it seems to me that it is scarcely permissible to go in search of an ancient principle of the common law, when we find that it has been definitely abrogated even in the country of its origin by S. 1 of Statute 24 and 25, George V, c. 14, which enacts that:

"An agreement shall not be discharged by the death of any party thereto either as respects the deceased or any other party but shall in such an event be enforceable by or against the personal representative of the deceased."

The idea that the appointment of an arbitrator contemplated in every case the exercise of personal judgment by the party which appears to be the foundation on which the doctrine of revocability by death rested, would thus seem to have been definitely given up in England. We here are not bound by any rule of the common or statutory law of that country except in so far as it furnishes a standard of justice, equity and good conscience to be applied to the decision of questions arising for consideration by the Courts of this country.

The question was considered by the Privy Council in *Pestonjee Nusserwanjee v. D. Manockjee & Co.*¹, with special reference to S. 326 of the Code of 1859 which was the predecessor of the present para. 17 of Sch. II. At pages 130 and 131 the following pertinent observations occur:

"Their Lordships are of opinion, that according to the proper construction of this Code, as previously explained, when persons have agreed to submit the matter in difference between them to the arbitration of one or more certain specified persons, no party to such an agreement can revoke the submission to arbitration unless for good cause, and that a mere arbitrary revocation of the authority is not permitted. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to refer to the English law on this subject further than to point out, that the direction of recent legislation, both by English Acts and the Acts of the Indian Legislature, has been to put an end to the distinction between the agreement to refer, and the authority thereby conferred, which formerly enabled a person who was a party to a binding agreement to revoke the authority thereby conferred, and by so doing, to put an end to the agreement for submission to arbitration; and to put such agreement for arbitration on the same footing as all other lawful agreements by which the parties are bound to the terms of what they have agreed to, and from which they cannot retire unless the scope and object of the agreement cannot be executed, or unless it be shown that some manifest injustice will be the consequence of binding the parties to the contract. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion, that it was not in the power of the appellant simply, at his own mere will and pleasure, to revoke the authority of the arbitrators in whose appointment he had concurred."

The effect of this decision, as I understand it, was to get rid finally and for ever of the doctrine of revocability at will and the distinction supposed to exist between the agreement to refer and the authority of the arbitrators. It is in this sense that this important decision has been understood and acted upon in this Court. In *Nagaswamy Naik v. Rangaswamy Naik*¹, the learned Judges expressed themselves at page 55 as follows:

"The 'horror', which formerly prevailed in the English Courts of a domestic forum never found place in British India, where it has always been the policy of the Legislature to promote the reference of disputes to arbitration; and the framers of the Code in the chapter on Arbitration, embodied most of the existing law of the Company's Courts. Having regard, not only to the former law in force in this country, but to the provisions of the Indian Contract Act (S. 28) of 1872, we are incline to say that an agreement to refer an existing dispute to arbitration is as binding and capable of enforcement as any other lawful contract, and that a submission of such a dispute to arbitration once made is not, without just and sufficient cause, revocable."

When the Court was pressed with a previous contrary ruling in *Alla Aiyappa v. Nundula Peraiya*², to which Hollo-way, J., himself was a party he appears to have expressed himself in a somewhat pungent, and, if I may say so with respect, a refreshingly frank manner. He is reported to have observed at page 53 as follows:

"That decision is bad. It is one of the worst in the Reports. I then had the jargon of the English Common Law running in my head, and my attention was not called to the fact that the Civil Procedure Code had completely altered the law out here. I would not have thought that the point could be doubted or that it was open to argument had not my attention been drawn by Mr. Mayne in *Pestonjee Nusserwanjee v. D. Manackjee & Co.*¹, to the change in the law made by Act VIII of 1859."

After this pronouncement it is scarcely possible to accede to the contention that the common law of England should be taken as a guide for our decision. Further in *Satyanarayana v. Venkata Rangayya*², we have a modern decision of a strong Bench of this Court which has acted upon the principle recognised in the earlier case. In that case pending a reference by Court on an agreement filed under S. 523 of the Code of 1882 corresponding to the present para. 17, one of the parties died and the question was whether the authority of the arbitrator became ipso facto revoked and whether the legal representatives of the deceased could not continue the proceedings. The learned Judges adverted to the difference between the old English common law and the law as understood to be applicable in this country and ruled:

"That contracts to refer to arbitration should not, in this country, be treated as standing upon the peculiar footing that such contracts are revocable at the mere will of a party so as to warrant the view that every such contract is essentially of a personal nature and the question whether a legal representative of a deceased party is or is not entitled to enforce the contract to refer is a question which would depend upon whether the right dealt with in the reference is of a merely personal nature or is one which survives to the legal representative."

This view was expressed after the relevant cases both in England and in this Court had been considered. The decision was that a right to partition which formed the subject-matter of the submission in that case as it is here, being of such a nature that it would survive to the legal representative, the death of a party could not cause a revocation of the arbitration. In view of these decisions to which no exception seems to have been ever taken since, it serves no purpose to pursue the matter further. It only remains to say that the fact that the remedy by way of specific performance has been limited to the mode indicated in the Code, is no reason for holding that the contract can be put an end to at the will of one of the parties to it. It rather emphasizes its enforceability by the other, though not by suit but by the process of an application. The contention therefore that the death of Chelamiah put an end to the arbitration must be overruled.

1. (1868) 12 M.I.A. 112. 2. (1903) 13 M.L.J. 311: I.L.R. 27 Mad. 112.

It is however urged that Chelamiah had left a will dated 1st February, 1919, by which he had made a disposition of his property appointing his widow, the third respondent here, as executrix. The argument was that an award passed without notice to, and in the absence of, the executrix is bad and cannot be sustained. It is not necessary to deal with this contention at any length as in my opinion it is enough to say that the only party who could be said to have had a grievance was the executrix herself who has not however chosen to challenge the judgment of the Court below. It seems to me that the appellant who never thought of this objection and never put it forward before the arbitrators cannot now be permitted to take advantage of a ground which might have been available to some party other than himself. Further the objection loses all its force when it is remembered that the fight all along was between the brothers and the mother seems never to have taken no real part in it at all. I also entirely agree in the view of my learned brother that, so long as a dispute is pending before arbitrators on a private reference, the proceedings before them are not governed by the provisions of O. 22 of the Civil Procedure Code and there can be no question therefore of the legal representative of the deceased Chelamiah being brought on the record. Finally I may add that almost all the objections which have been pressed before us were objections that could well have been taken before the arbitrators themselves, had the appellant chosen to do so. It is now too late to entertain any of them.

October, 1932, appropriated towards interest and costs—If to be reopened and readjusted under S. 8 (1)—Reappropriation if barred as "refund" within meaning of S. 8 (4).

Appropriations made after 1st October, 1937 and before the Act came into force towards interest due before that date can be reopened and re-adjusted first towards the costs then interest due from 1st October, 1937 and next towards the principal. The word 'refund' in S. 8 (4) means only repayments in cash and it is no bar to readjustment of the debt according to S. 8 (1) of the Act.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wadsworth, J.—This Civil Revision Petition raises the question of the way in which S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938 should be interpreted in a case in which there have been payments made and appropriated after the 1st October, 1937 and before the Act came into force. The essential facts are that there was a debt anterior to the 1st October, 1932, which resulted in a decree dated the 30th September, 1936. The decree was for a sum of Rs. 1,761-8-0 with interest at 6 per cent. and for costs amounting to Rs. 437-6-3 with interest thereon. After the decree had been passed there were three payments: (1) Rs. 500 on 25th January, 1938; (2) Rs. 200 on 23rd February, 1938; and (3) Rs. 300 on 2nd March, 1938. It is found by the Court below that these payments were all appropriated towards costs and interest. The question is whether these appropriations are liable to be undone with reference to Ss. 8 and 19 of the Act.

The petitioner contends that the plain way of working out the provisions of the Act in a case of this kind is as follows. Firstly, you appropriate payments under S. 19 to costs as originally decreed, that is to say excluding interest on costs. Then you look to the state of affairs as on 1st October, 1937, and you cancel so much of the debt as represents interest payable on that date, disregarding the fact that some of that interest is embodied in the decree for a fixed sum. Next you take the principal and work out the interest at the rate of the decree, six per cent., which is less than the maximum prescribed in S. 12 and appropriate the payments as on the date on which they were made, firstly, to the amount due for costs already mentioned; secondly, to the amount due for interest after 1st October, 1937. Any balance will be credited towards the principal. This interpretation of the Act gives full force to the provisions of the first clause of S. 8. It is, however, contended for the respondent that the interpretation ignores the provisions of S. 7 and the fourth clause of S. 8. The argument is that under S. 7 all that can be scaled down is the debt payable at the commencement of the Act and therefore to the extent to which there have been appropriations before the commencement of the Act there is no debt payable and the process contemplated in the first clause of S. 8 cannot be applied. It seems to us that this is placing upon S. 7 an interpretation which is inconsistent with the provisions of S. 8 and the proviso to S. 19. The proviso to S. 19 quite clearly contemplates a re-appropriation and re-adjustment in respect of payments actually made either before or after the commencement of the Act. That is to say the debt to be scaled down is not the debt less payments made before the Act, but the debt having regard to the payments made before the Act which have to be readjusted in accordance with its provisions. Similarly the first clause of S. 8 does not say interest outstanding on the 1st October, 1937, less any amounts appropriated thereto before the commencement of the Act. The section seems to contemplate the cancellation of all the interest as it stood on the 1st October, 1937, without regard to the subsequent appropriations.

A further contention is that the fourth clause of S. 8 protects the creditor from re-appropriation of any amount appropriated already. This seems to us to be an interpretation which is not in accordance with the plain meaning of this clause. The fourth clause appears to us to contemplate cases in which the literal application of the scaling down provisions would result in an obligation by the creditor to pay back in cash to his debtor something which the latter has voluntarily paid towards the debt. This, according to the clause, need not be done. If the debtor has paid something over and above that which would be due from him after the application of the Act the creditor keeps the excess. There is nothing in this clause which to our mind justifies the interpretation of it as giving sanctity to appropriations made after 1st October, 1937 and before 22nd March, 1938. In our view therefore the debt has to be scaled down in the manner for which the petitioner here contends that is to say by cancelling the interest payable on the 1st October, 1937, adjusting the payments made firstly to costs as decreed; secondly to the amount outstanding towards interest as on the dates of payments after cancelling the interest outstanding on the 1st October, 1937; and thirdly adjusting any balance towards the principal debt.

The revision petition is therefore allowed and the application is remitted to the trial Court which will dispose of the matter in the light of this judgment. The respondent will pay the petitioner's costs.

JUDGMENT.—The question whether the payment of Rs. 643-12-0, dated 29th December, 1934, was appropriated before 1st October, 1937; is a question of fact which does not appear to have been decided by the Court below. If from the materials available, it can be shown that there was an appropriation towards interest made before 1st October, 1937, to the extent of that appropriation there cannot be any cancellation of interest and the appropriation will stand. Any appropriation made after 1st October, 1937, and before the commencement of the Act must be deemed to be available for readjustment in accordance with the provisions of the Act, vide our decision in C. aged twelve to her house, strangled her by putting a cloth round her neck and pulling it tight, took her silver jewels worth about Rs. 5 off and then threw the body into a well in the compound. With the jewels she went straightaway to a silver smith (P.W. 14) and requested him to make them over for her. The silver smith deducted one rupee weight of silver for his own wages and turned the rest of the jewels into chitters which were recovered from the appellant by the police very shortly afterwards. There was no eye-witness of this crime and the evidence against the appellant consist almost entirely of confessions made by herself. When she was questioned on the 3rd January by a member of the local Vigilance Committee (P.W. 11) it is alleged that she admitted the murder. She was sent immediately to the Village Munsif (P.W. 3) and to him also she admitted her guilt and she made a statement which the Village Munsif reduced to writing (Ex. E). She was sent to the Sub-Magistrate and on the 6th February, the police asked the Sub-Magistrate to record her confession. The Sub-Magistrate having given the woman time for reflection till the 11th January recorded her confession which is Ex. B and finally when the preliminary investigation was being made the appellant said to the Magistrate, "It is true that I killed Katheesa and took the jewels. I committed a folly. I have nothing else to state." In the Sessions Court she retracted the confession before the Sub-Magistrate and she alleged that she had not made any confessions out of Court.

Her story was confirmed by the evidence of the younger sister of the deceased (P.W. 6) who said that on the morning of the 2nd January the appellant came and asked her sister Katheesa to go with her to pick tamarind. Katheesa never returned. The evidence of the silver smith (P.W. 14) also confirms her story. He produced the bits of silver (Material Objects 3, 3-a, 4, 4-a and 5) which he had kept for his own remuneration and he spoke to M. Os. 6 to 26 which he said he had made for the appellant out of the silver jewels brought to him on the 2nd January.

The appellant was advanced in pregnancy and has given birth to a child since this murder. This was apparently made a ground for urging before the learned Sessions Judge that the extreme sentence should not be passed; but the learned Sessions Judge, we think, has dealt with this matter in the proper manner. He has pointed out that the crime was obviously committed after deliberation and in a brutal manner. There was no suggestion that the appellant was in any way unbalanced in mind or that she was unaware of the nature of her act or the consequences of it. There was no suggestion made at the trial that the appellant might not have been in full control of her faculties. The learned Sessions Judge has therefore said quite rightly that the existence of an extremely young baby born to the appellant since the murder might perhaps be taken into consideration by the Provincial Government when the appellant prefers an application for clemency but would not be a ground for passing the lesser sentence.

We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the offence was clearly established. We confirm the conviction for murder and the sentence of death and dismiss this appeal.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), Ss. 3 (v) and 8—'Creditor'—If includes successive assignees of original creditor.

The renewal of a debt to the assignee of the original creditor is a renewal to the 'same' creditor within the meaning of the explanation to S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. This definition of 'creditor' extends not only to a first assignee but to any subsequent assignee also. The ultimate assignee has, in respect of the debt succeeded to, the legal rights of the original creditor in exactly the same sense as the first assignee has.

within the meaning of the explanation to S. 8 of the Madras Act IV of 1938. I am now, however, asked to hold that the definition of the word 'creditor' in S. 3 (v) though it may extend to a first assignee cannot be extended to any subsequent assignee. The number of links in the chain of succession makes, in my opinion, no difference. The point is simply this that the ultimate assignee has, in respect of the debt, succeeded to the legal right of the original creditor in exactly the same sense as the first assignee has. Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 4 (e)—Applicability—Registered society formed under Societies Registration Act—If "corporation" excluded from operation of Act IV of 1938.

A registered society formed under the Societies Registration Act is a corporation and a debt due to such a society cannot be scaled down.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam in S. C. S. No. 29 of 1938.

This is a suit on a promissory note brought by a society formed under the Societies Registration Act (XXI of 1860) as transferee from the payee, the third defendant. The promissory note was executed by the second defendant, who signed her name above the words as "guardian of the first defendant."

The suit promissory note was in renewal of a promissory note dated the 10th June, 1933, executed by the mother (second defendant) in the same way. That promissory note was in renewal of a promissory note executed by the father of the first defendant on 10th June, 1930.

Three points have been raised in this petition. The first is that the person really liable under the promissory note was the first defendant, who has now become a major, and not the second defendant, who executed the suit promissory note and the promissory note of 1933 as the guardian of the first defendant. The lower Court came to the conclusion from the terms of the promissory note that it was the mother and not the son who was liable. In this revision petition the mother has not chosen to make her son party, although it is clear that either the mother or the son would be liable. She has therefore sought to avoid liability altogether by the family by omitting to make the son a party. Even if it be true that the legal liability is against the son and not against the mother, I am not willing to interfere in revision to do an inequity.

Rukmin-
amma
v Venkata
Ramadas.

The second point is that the third defendant is not liable because the plaintiff did not give him any notice of the dishonouring of the promissory note by the first defendant when it was presented to him by the plaintiff for payment. As to these, there is evidence by P. W. 2 that oral notice was given to the third defendant. That evidence has not been controverted, the third defendant not having gone into the box.

D. Suryaprasada Rao for Petitioners.

A. Lakshmayya for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—[After dealing with the other points on facts as set out above proceeds.]

The third point relates to the application of Act IV of 1938. The lower Court found that as the plaintiff was really a registered society formed under the Societies Registration Act, the debt could not be scaled down. It is contended that this society is not a corporation; but I am unable to see why. A perusal of the Societies Registration Act makes it clear that a society formed under that Act is a corporation and that it has a separate existence apart from its members and can sue and be sued in its corporate capacity. On all the points therefore this petition fails and is dismissed with the costs of the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—The question is whether the sale of the appellant's property for arrears of rent under the Madras Estates Land Act operates as an act of insolvency under S. 6 (e) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It seems to me clear that the decree for rent is a decree for the payment of money, notwithstanding the fact that the rent is charged on the holding. The decree in question was passed before the appointment of the ad-interim receiver in the previous insolvency. At the time of the sale, the receiver was apparently not in possession though he had been appointed. The property therefore not only vested in the debtor but was in his physical possession and there was nothing, except his poverty, to prevent him from paying the rent. The property was certainly "his property" within the terms of S. 6 (e) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The case reported in *Lachmi Chand v. Bipin Behari*¹ has no application, for in that case, there had been an adjudication and the property no longer vested in the debtor. The view taken by the Courts below is correct and the petition is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in O. S. No. 787 of 1937.

V. C. Gopalaratnam for Appellants.

N. Panchapagesa Aiyar for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by respondent against the appellants for damages for defamation. The facts may be stated very briefly. Respondent, a Medical Practitioner in Madras took some diamonds from the appellants, a firm of jewellers, on approval in April, 1936. On 25th May appellants presented him with an invoice for their cost. By 27th September, the diamonds had not been paid for. On that day the appellants sent a letter to the Inspector of Police, Flower Bazaar Police Station, which is claimed by respondent to be defamatory, as being equivalent to a charge against him of criminal breach of trust. In their written statement appellants contended that this communication was privileged, having been sent bona fide with the sole purpose of protecting their own interests. The learned City Civil Judge held that the occasion was privileged and if the letter were in fact bona fide the suit must be dismissed, but he held further that the letter did not state the true facts; that there was an outright sale on 25th May; and that the appellants were maliciously referring to the Police for investigation what they knew could be only the subject-matter of a civil claim. He accordingly decreed the suit.

In appeal an entirely new point has been taken with reference to the law of privilege. It is now contended that the letter in question was privileged absolutely, that is to say, that a Civil Court is precluded from adjudicating upon the question whether it was sent maliciously or not. On a careful consideration of the authorities I think this contention must prevail.

Bapalal
& Co.
v.
Krishna-

Bapalal

v.
Krishna-

Aiyar.

The principal authorities to which I have been referred to in the course of the arguments are *Sanjivi Reddi v. Koneri Reddi*¹, *Golap Jan v. Bholanath Khettry*², *Madhab Chandra Ghose v. Nirod Chandra Ghose*³ and *Majju v. Lachman Prasad*⁴. All these authorities are unanimous in holding that the common law of England which grants an absolute privilege to all statements made in the witness-box should be applied in India. That privilege extends in England to the preliminary examination of witnesses, e.g., by a solicitor to find out what they can prove (see *Watson v. M'Ewan*⁵). The question then is how far this principle derived from *Watson v. M'Ewan*⁵ should be extended. *Sanjivi Reddi v. Koneri Reddi*¹ dealt with a complaint to a Magistrate requesting him to take action under S. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, and to statements made by the complainant to a Police Officer investigating that complaint. Both were held to be absolutely privileged. No actual evidence was given in this case, as the Magistrate eventually refused to take any action under S. 107. In *Golap Jan v. Bholanath Khettry*², a complaint laid before a Magistrate for criminal breach of trust which led to no trial but was dismissed under S. 203, Criminal Procedure Code, was held to be absolutely privileged. In *Madhab Chandra Ghose v. Nirod Chandra Ghose*³, it was held that both a report to the police alleging the commission of a crime, and evidence given in Court in support of the accusation were absolutely privileged. In *Majju v. Lachman Prasad*⁴, a distinction was drawn between a complaint to the police which in fact led to judicial proceedings, and one which did not. A complaint in the latter case was held not to be privileged.

Now there is nothing in the three other decisions referred to above to suggest that this particular ground of distinction would find favour with the Madras or Calcutta High Courts. In *Sanjivi Reddi v. Koneri Reddi*¹ and *Golap Jan v. Bholanath Khettry*², complaints to a Magistrate were held absolutely privileged, even though the Magistrate dismissed them. In *Madhab Chandra Ghose v. Nirod Chandra Ghose*³, the complaint to the police was no doubt followed by an actual trial, but there is nothing in the judgment to suggest that that fact influenced the learned Judges in coming to their decision. Both Judges apply the principle of *Watson v. M'Ewan*¹, to a complaint to the police and Ghose, J., points out on page 580 that the reason for the privilege is stronger in the case of a complaint to the police than in the case of statements to a solicitor for the question whether a prosecution shall follow upon the complaint is taken out of complainant's hands by his own action.

I am accordingly of opinion that the weight of authority is in favour of the view that a complaint to a Police Officer from its very nature as a statement which the complainant is prepared later, if called upon to do so, to substantiate upon oath is absolutely privileged. I must accordingly allow this appeal, and dismiss respondent's suit. As the main ground in the appeal was never pleaded in the Court of first instance I make no order as to costs.

Banker and customer—Customer (another bank) depositing employees' cash security as required by S. 282-B (1) of Indian Companies Act—Liquidation of banker company—Customer is entitled to priority.

As the result of the statutory obligation under S. 282-B (1) of the Indian Companies Act imposed upon the appellant (a bank) the employees' cash security, was deposited in a scheduled bank which subsequently went into liquidation. The depositor bank claimed priority on the ground that the money had been deposited for a specific purpose.

Held, though the appellant held the moneys for a special purpose, the relationship with the bank in which the money is deposited is that between a bank and an ordinary customer, namely, that of debtor and creditor. The only obligation of the bank having notice of the trust, was not to participate in a breach of trust by the trustee.

On appeal from the order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Venkataramana Rao dated 21st April, 1939 and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 2874 of 1938 in O. P. No. 158 of 1938.

K. Kuttikrishna Menon for Appellant.

C. Krishnaswami Aiyar instructed by King and Partridge for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C. J.

The Chief Justice.—The appellant is a company registered under the Indian Companies Act and carries on a banking business at Palghat in Malabar. The appellant requires certain employees to deposit sums of money with it as security for the due fulfilment of their duties. S. 282-B (1) of the Indian Companies Act states that all moneys or securities deposited with a company by its employees in pursuance of their contracts of service with the company shall be deposited by it in a special account to be opened for the purpose in a scheduled bank as defined in clause (e) of S. 2 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, and that no portion of the money shall be utilised by the Company except for the purposes agreed to in the contract of service. The Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Limited (I will refer to it for brevity as 'the Bank') was a scheduled bank as defined in the Reserve Bank of India Act, but it is now in liquidation as the result of an order for compulsory winding up passed by this Court on the 4th September, 1938. On the 30th July, 1937, the appellant deposited with the Bank a sum of Rs. 1,000 received as security from an employee. On the 15th of January, 1938, and on the 21st of February, 1938, it deposited with the Bank Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 500 respectively, these sums also representing security received from employees. These moneys were credited to the appellant in an account headed "employees' cash security". They were, of course, deposited with the bank as the result of the statutory obligation imposed upon the appellant by S. 282-B (1) of the Indian Companies Act. The question involved in this appeal is whether the appellant is entitled to rank in the liquidation of the Bank in priority to the ordinary creditors. The question was decided against the appellant by Venkataramana Rao, J., and this appeal is from his order.

The learned counsel for the appellant frankly and rightly concedes that the Bank did not hold the moneys as a trustee for the employees of the appellant, but he says that his client is entitled to prior payment because it is recognised that property which has been delivered to a bankrupt for a specific purpose does not pass to his trustee in bankruptcy, and quotes a passage from Halsbury's Laws of England where it is stated that property of this nature is clothed with a species of trust and is subject to the same principle as trust property. (Vol. 2, p. 228, Hailsham edn.) The learned Judge rejected this contention. He recognised that in such a case as the present one the depositor is the trustee and the money deposited is trust money, but he held that this does not affect the relation which the law creates between a bank and an ordinary customer, namely, the relation of debtor and creditor. The learned Judge pointed out that the legal effect of the notice to the Bank that the moneys deposited were trust moneys was only to cast a duty on the bank not to participate in a breach of trust by the trustee.

We agree with the opinion of the learned Judge. The appellant would be entitled to succeed only if the Bank was in the position of a trustee or if the money had been deposited for a specific purpose. The appellant has conceded that the Bank was not a trustee; and we think it is equally clear that these moneys were not deposited with it for a special purpose so far as the Bank was concerned. The appellant held the moneys for a special purpose and was required by statute to deposit them in a Bank, but the section makes no difference in the position of the Bank. Its position was still that of a banker keeping an account for a customer. The Bank, having notice of the trust, could not be a party to a breach of trust but that does not help the appellant. There has been no breach of trust.

The appeal fails and will be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal filed under O. 43, r. 1, cl. (k) of the Code of Civil Procedure against an order of the learned District Judge of North Arcot refusing to set aside the abatement of A. S. No. 214 of 1936. The appellant is the legal representative of the appellant who was on record in A. S. No. 214 of 1936. He applied to be impleaded and to be allowed to continue the appeal at a time when more than 90 days had elapsed since the death of his predecessor-in-interest. The reasons for his application were that he was a sepoy undergoing service at Jubbulpore, that he attempted to obtain leave from his Commanding Officer for the purpose of coming to Vellore and attending to this question of coming on record in the appeal, that the Commanding Officer refused to grant him leave and that when he eventually granted him leave on receipt of a letter from the Village Munsif, 90 days had expired. The learned District Judge refused to allow the petition on the ground that it was not necessary for the appellant to have obtained the attestation of his Commanding Officer in Jubbulpore to his affidavit and that he could easily have attended to this matter in the ordinary course of the post. There is no other material available, no affidavit from the Commanding Officer himself which in the circumstances of the case could hardly be expected, nor any affidavit from the Advocate who represented the appellant or the appellant's predecessor-in-interest.

Raju
Mudali
v.
Chinnaraju
Naidu.

The learned Advocate for the respondents takes the preliminary objection before me that no appeal lies under O. 43, r. 1 (k) and in support of that position cites the case reported in *Akkas Mia v. Abdul Asis Bepari*¹. That authority certainly supports his view, but on the other hand there are cases in which the Patna High Court has interpreted the clause in O. 43 in a different way. It seems to me quite clear on an examination of both O. 22 and O. 43 that I should follow the view of the Patna High Court. O. 22, r. 9 in terms relates only to a suit. It begins:

"Where a suit abates, ... no fresh suit shall be brought on the same cause of action."

But r. 11 of O. 22 runs as follows:

"In the application of this order to appeals, so far as may be, the word 'plaintiff' shall be held to include an appellant, ... and the word 'suit' an appeal."

And there is no dispute before me that an order that an appeal has abated can be set aside under O. 22, r. 9 as interpreted by r. 11. O. 43, r. 1 (k) reads as follows:

"An appeal shall lie from an order under r. 9 of O. 22 refusing to set aside the abatement or dismissal of a suit."

It is argued in support of the preliminary objection that the use of the word "suit" in cl. (k) must necessarily exclude the word 'appeal'. I am unable to accept that argument. It seems to me that the expression "refusing to set aside the abatement or dismissal of a suit" is merely a compendious way of referring to the provisions of r. 9. As already stated, r. 11 of O. 22 makes r. 9 applicable to appeals. It would be contrary to all rules of logical interpretation, it seems to me, if the word 'suit' in cl. (k) of O. 43, r. 1 is to bear a different meaning to what

Raju
Mudali
v.
Chinnaraju

it bears in O. 22, r. 9. I accordingly overrule the preliminary objection and hold that this appeal does lie.

On the merits of the appeal I think the order of the learned District Judge was not one in which he has rightly exercised his discretion. It may well be that if the appellant had been more familiar with legal procedure or if it were shown that he had been in correspondence with his Advocate during this period, he might have taken other steps to bring himself on record in time. But what he states in his affidavit seems to me to show that he has conducted himself with reasonable diligence in this matter. He has done what one might normally have expected a soldier serving in a foreign province to do. He states that he has prepared an affidavit and that his Commanding Officer would not sign it. This matter of course has not actually been proved, but it seems to me that it would never have been stated if it were not true, and once the Commanding Officer had refused to sign the affidavit, one could hardly have expected the appellant to have sought out any other public official in a distant place like Jubbulpore. Although the appellant does not state explicitly that in his mind the only practicable way of bringing himself on record was to come to Vellore and there prepare the necessary affidavit and take the necessary steps, I think it is a reasonable inference from a perusal of the affidavit as a whole that that was the impression which existed in his mind, an impression which in my opinion is not in all the circumstances of this case an unreasonable one. I would therefore set aside the order of the learned District Judge and the abatement of the appeal and allow the appellant to be brought on record as the legal representative of the appellant in that appeal and order that the appeal be duly heard and disposed of according to law. In the circumstances of this case I think the fairest order in regard to costs is that each party should bear his own costs throughout.

Where the appellant company was formed by the respondent Bank for the purpose of organising chit-funds, and the bank held almost all the shares in the company and controlled the company also, and the subscribers of the chit-fund under the terms of understanding between them could not withdraw any amount without furnishing security and therefore the company either retained the money or paid it into the bank where savings bank accounts were opened in the subscribers' names, and under certain conditions contained in the letters of assignment by subscribers to the appellant company, on the question whether on the liquidation of the bank the appellant company could claim preferential payment before the ordinary creditors of the Bank,

Held, that there was no trust in contemplation entitling the liquidator of the company to preferential payment from the Bank. Before there could be a trust of movable property the author of the trust must indicate with reasonable certainty by words his compliance with the provisions enumerated in S. 6 of the Trusts Act II of 1882.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The appellant and the respondent are limited liability companies and both of them are now in liquidation under orders for compulsory winding up. For the sake of brevity I will refer to the appellant as “the company” and the respondent as ‘the bank’. The company was formed by the bank for the purpose of organising chit-funds, which was considered to be a profitable business. The bank held all the shares in the company, except two, and it is common ground that it controlled the company through one of its officers. The chit-funds which the company organised were for periods of 25 months with four classes of subscribers. The subscriber who was successful at the monthly auction could not withdraw the amount subscribed that month unless he furnished security to the company for its repayment. If he furnished security, of course, he was allowed to withdraw the money and dispose of it as he pleased. If security was not furnished, the company either retained the amount or paid it into the bank. In the latter event the subscriber was required to open a savings bank account with the bank and the money was paid into it. One of the conditions of the keeping of this account was that the amount deposited in it should not be available for withdrawal for purposes other than payment of the instalments for which the subscriber was liable in respect of the chit-fund until the subscriber had paid all his instalments. When he opened the account the subscriber was required to sign a letter addressed to the bank and couched in the following terms:

“I beg to inform you that I am holding No. . . . in your Chit Fund No. which was prized at the auction conducted on the for the instalment.

I have acknowledged receipt of the bid amount for which I have given a separate receipt and I confirm my agreement that as security for the due payment of all the future subscriptions towards my above ticket in Chit No. you will hold as much amount as would cover up the future liability of this in chitty savings bank account with you.

I also confirm my agreement with you that you will appropriate towards future instalments as they fall due the necessary amount from my deposit in your chitty savings bank account."

This letter is not very appropriately worded as the chit-fund did not nominally belong to the bank, but there can be no doubt as to its effect. The bank was to hold what was deposited in the account as security for the due payment of what the subscriber owed to the company. The company and the bank carried on business in the same premises in Madras and the arrangement was completed by an officer of the bank acting on behalf of the company and the bank.

The Court is informed that the bank kept a considerable number of these accounts. The company and the bank having gone into liquidation, the question arose whether the company was entitled to have the amounts standing in these various savings bank accounts treated as moneys over which the liquidator of the company had a preferential claim. In order to have the question settled he took out a summons under S. 183 of the Indian Companies Act. The matter was heard by Venkataramana Rao, J., who held that the liquidator of the company was not entitled to any preferential payment from the liquidators of the bank, but that he was entitled to rank as an ordinary creditor in respect of these various amounts. The appeal is from this decision.

The claim for preferential payment was based on an allegation that the bank held these moneys as a trustee for the company. This claim was rejected by the learned Judge who held that the letter which the subscriber addressed to the bank on the opening of the savings bank account operated as an assignment to the company of the moneys standing to the credit of the account. The learned Advocate who appears on behalf of the appellant concedes that if there is no trust the learned Judge's decision cannot be challenged. He does not dispute that the letter signed by the subscriber on the opening of the account can be read as an assignment of the money to the bank for the benefit of the company. The learned advocate for the bank denies that there is any trust and accepts the learned Judge's decision as being correct.

We are in entire agreement with the learned Judge when he says that there is no basis on which the bank can be regarded as a trustee for the company. Before there can be a trust of movable property the author of the trust must indicate with reasonable certainty by words or acts (a) an intention on his part to create a trust, (b) the purpose of the trust, (c) the beneficiary, and (d) the trust property, and (unless the trust is declared by will or the author of the trust is himself to be the trustee) transfer the trust property to the trustee. These are the provisions of S. 6 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. In this case it is impossible in our opinion to say that there was an intention on the part of the subscriber to create a trust. What the subscriber agreed to do and did was to open a savings bank account with the bank which was to be kept on certain conditions. The payment into the account of the money by the company was a payment in on behalf of the subscriber and the intention was that this money should be used in discharging the subscriber's financial obligations to the company. It is accepted that the letter which the subscribers signed effected an assignment of the amount to the company, but there was no trust in contemplation. Moreover the whole arrangement was really brought about by the bank for its own benefit. It owned the company which it had formed for the purpose of making profit out of chit-funds and the conditions which it imposed upon the subscribers to the chit-funds were conditions which were merely intended to safeguard itself.

The learned advocate for the appellant has quoted to us *Farley v. Turner*¹, but the facts in that case are so far apart from the facts in this case that it has no application. From whatever point of view this matter is looked at, the argument cannot be accepted that there is here a trust which entitles the liquidator of the company to claim preferential payment from the bank. The liquidator must prove as an ordinary creditor in the bank's liquidation. In order that there may be no misunderstanding it may be added that the subscribers have not been made parties to this appeal and have not appeared.

The liquidators of the bank are entitled to the costs of the appeal. The liquidator of the company will obtain his costs out of the assets of the company.

JUDGMENT.—The short question for decision in these revision petitions is whether an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis can be rejected without hearing the applicant or giving him an opportunity of being heard. In each case, the Court below rejected the application without hearing the petitioner and the legality of this procedure is challenged before me.

It is not disputed that an application under O. 44, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, is a judicial proceeding and the order made therein should be based upon the exercise of a judicial discretion exercised on a proper consideration of the relevant material. A Full Bench of this Court has expressed the opinion, approving *Appasami Pillai v. Somasundara Mudaliar*¹, that an order rejecting an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis is an appealable 'judgment' under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. (See *Tuljaram Rao v. Alagappa Chettiar*¹.) It is therefore difficult to see how such a proceeding can be disposed of except in conformity with the fundamental principle in all judicial procedure that no order should be made without notice to the parties who will be prejudicially affected by the order and without affording them a reasonable opportunity of being heard. It is satisfactory to note that the practice of the Courts in this Presidency in dealing with applications of this kind has been in conformity with this principle.

Subbayya
Nadar
v.
Anjaneyalu.

The respondent relies on a recent decision of Wadsworth, J., in *Kanthimathi Ammal v. Ganesa Aiyar*², following an earlier decision of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in *In re Paramasivam Pillai*³. With all respect I am unable to agree with these decisions. In the latter case, the learned Judge understands 'perusal' in the proviso to O. 44, r. 1 to mean "perusal without being supplemented by argument on petitioner's side" and he quotes in support of his conclusion a passage from the judgment of Jenkins, C.J., in *Sakubai v. Ganpat*⁴:

"It is to be noticed that the Court must come to its conclusion upon a perusal only of the application, the judgment and the decree. This proviso is apt to be overlooked," etc.

The point now under consideration did not arise in the Bombay case (*Sakubai v. Ganpat*⁴), where the learned Judge was merely pointing out the desirability of the Court recording briefly the reasons for granting leave, and it is by no means clear that "only" in the passage quoted was meant to exclude a hearing of the petitioner and not material other than the application, the judgment and the decree. In the other case *Kanthimathi Ammal v. Ganesa Aiyar*², the learned Judge notes the prevailing practice of hearing the applicant in such cases, but finds no warrant for it in O. 44, r. 1 observing that:

"The proviso to that rule contains no indication that it is either necessary or desirable for the Judge to hear the party before passing orders of rejection."

The mere absence of an express provision for hearing the applicant is, in my view, no justification for refusing to hear him. Hearing the parties affected before passing adverse orders is such a well-established and cardinal rule governing the procedure of Courts that the Code must be taken to assume its observance in all cases a matter of course without any express provision in that behalf. There is no such provision, for instance, in S. 115 but it has never been suggested that a revision petition can be dismissed without giving the petitioner an opportunity of being heard. Nor is the reference in O. 44, r. 1 to a 'perusal' by the Court of the documents specified sufficient, to my mind, to justify a departure from the ordinary cursus curiae.

Learned Counsel for respondents also placed reliance on *Somasundaram Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar*¹, as showing that the respondent to an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis has no right to be heard, and argued that the petitioner could be in no better position. But the respondent would not be prejudiced by not being heard at the stage of the admission of the petition because he would be heard in support of the judgment and decree appealed from before the matter is finally disposed of. (Cf., the procedure under O. 41, r. 11.) But the dismissal of a petition without hearing the petitioner is quite a different matter, as the judgment sought to be appealed from would become final without his having had an opportunity of showing that it was contrary to law, etc.

I therefore set aside the rejection of the application by the Court below in each case and remit it for disposal after giving the petitioner an opportunity of being heard. I make no order as to costs as the respondent was not responsible for the course adopted by that Court.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 151—Suit for partition—Defence denying claim in all the properties except a few which belonged to joint family—Order for interim maintenance—Whether proper—Revision—Memorandum of cross objections—Maintainability.

1st May, 1940.

Where a person sued his father and brother for a share in some properties of the joint family but the defence was that as most of the properties were self-acquired the plaintiff could not claim against all properties except a few mentioned in a particular schedule, but during the pendency of the suit the plaintiff applied for maintenance, and the lower Court awarded the maintenance though less than the amount applied for,

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the order of the nature passed.

Maharaj Kumar Gopal Saran Narayan Singh v. Sita Debi, (1923) 77 I.C. 718, relied on.

The Court has no inherent power under S. 151, Civil Procedure Code, to pass an interim order of maintenance.

Judgment of Jackson, J., in C. R. P. No. 1312 of 1930, followed.

A memorandum of cross-objections cannot be filed in revision. The proper procedure will be to file a separate revision.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order dated the 5th October, 1938, of the District Court of West Godavari at Ellore in I. A. No. 179 of 1938 in O. S. No. 34 of 1937.

V. Viyyanna for Petitioner.

Ch. Raghava Rao for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought the present suit against his brother and his father for the B schedule properties which, he said, were allotted to him in accordance with an agreement. In the alternative, he prayed for partition. The defendant's case is that the property is for the most part his self-acquired property and that the only property to which the plaintiff is entitled is that in Sch. I. During the pendency of the suit the plaintiff made an application to the Court for an interim maintenance of Rs. 800 a month. The learned District Judge has awarded Rs. 250 a month.

The plaintiff is not entitled to an order of the nature passed. In Maharaj Kumar Gopal Saran Narayan Singh v. Sita Debi, a Divisional Bench of the Patna High Court held that a Court has no inherent power under S. 151 to pass such an order. That case was very like the present, in that the plaintiff sued on a maintenance agreement, and only differed from it in that the defendant there did not admit that the plaintiff was entitled to anything. Here, the defendant does admit that the plaintiff is entitled to something; but he does not admit that the plaintiff is entitled to any part of the land that he claims. Jackson, J., in C. R. P. No. 1312 of 1930, quotes Maharaj, Kumar Gopal Saran Narayan Singh v. Sita Debi, as an authority for the position that the Court has no inherent power under S. 151 to pass an interim order of maintenance and pertinently adds that:

"A Court cannot interfere with a private person's property merely because he happens to be a defendant on behalf of another person merely because he happens to be a plaintiff. There is no inherent power in a Court to act without findings, so that if a matter is asserted by the plaintiff and denied by the defendant, the Court cannot presume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and give some interim relief pending disposal of the suit."

In the face of the above decisions, I do not feel justified in taking into account the document in the plaintiff's favour, the validity of which is denied by the defendant. The defendant does however admit that the plaintiff is entitled to some property, but it would be inconvenient, I consider, during the pendency of this suit which, I hope, will not be very much longer, to compel the plaintiff to take possession of property which he does not claim and with regard to which he may have some difficulty in collecting rent. Some maintenance in proportion to the property admittedly belonging to the plaintiff can be given; and I think the fairest course would be to reduce the amount granted to the plaintiff by the lower Court to Rs. 50 a month from the date of the last payment. If it is subsequently found that Rs. 50 a month is in excess of the mesne profits from the land to which the Court finds the plaintiff is entitled, the excess will be charged on the land awarded to the plaintiff.

The petition is allowed to the extent indicated. There will be no order as to costs.

A memorandum of cross-objections has been filed asking for an enhancement of the allowance. This has to be dismissed, whether on the ground that the plaintiff cannot be given even as much as was granted by the lower Court or on the ground that a memorandum of cross-objections cannot be filed in a revision petition. It could no doubt be treated as a revision petition if it had been filed within three months from the date of the passing of the order. Apparently this was not done. The memorandum has not been argued and it is not necessary to pass any order as to costs. The trial Court should expedite the disposal of the suit.

In a suit against the endorser as well as the maker of a promissory note of 23rd January, 1924, which was endorsed to the plaintiff on 26th January, 1933, a decree was passed against both. The endorser applied for scaling down.

Held, the liability of the endorser was a personal liability the basis of which was the endorsement though the quantum of liability was the original debt under the pre-existing promissory-note. The debt is one incurred after 1st October, 1932, and must be scaled down under S. 9 of the Act.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Wadsworth, J.—This revision petition arises out of an application under Ss. 8 and 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938, to scale down the debt on a decree dated 29th August, 1936, in a promissory note suit. The present petitioner is the decree-holder. The original promissory note was executed on 23rd January, 1924, by the first defendant in favour of the second defendant. On 6th January, 1933, the second defendant endorsed the promissory note to the plaintiff, who sued upon it and got a decree both against the original promisor and the endorser. It was the second defendant (the endorser) who filed the application to scale down the decree.

Poovana-

The only question raised in revision is whether the debt, so far as the endorser is concerned, was incurred on 23rd January, 1924, the date of the original promissory note in his favour, or on 26th January, 1933, the date of his endorsement to the plaintiff. It is contended on behalf of the applicant (respondent here) that the principle of the decision in *Perianna v. Sellappa*¹ must govern the case. That was a case in which a purchaser of the hypotheca was made a defendant in a suit on the mortgage and the learned judges decided that he was a person having a liability towards the mortgagee by reason of his purchase of the land, that the purchase was not the basis of any new liability and that the liability then sought to be enforced was the liability arising out of the mortgage itself. It seems to us that the reasoning of that decision is not applicable to the facts of the present case. We are not here concerned with a liability charged on land, which becomes the liability of the purchaser of that land. Here, there is an original promissory note under which the applicant had no liability whatever. His liability was first incurred by reason of his endorsement of that promissory note and the date on which he incurred that liability is the date of his endorsement. It is true that the extent of his liability is measured by the extent of the liability of the original promisor. But, so far as the applicant is concerned, he incurred a liability for the first time on 26th January, 1933. That liability was a personal liability, the basis of which was his endorsement of the pre-existing promissory note. It is therefore a debt incurred after 1st October, 1932, and has to be scaled down under S. 9 of Madras Act IV of 1938.

The revision petition is therefore allowed and the application is remitted to the lower Court for fresh disposal in the light of this judgment. In the circumstances of the case, we make no order as to costs.

Messrs. Mahaliram Ramjidas .. Respondents.

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 34—Income-tax authorities having reason to suppose that return of income was false—Quasi judicial enquiry—If essential before ordering further return.

The respondent firm made a statutory return of income under S. 22 (2) which showed a loss and were accordingly assessed to income-tax at nil for the material year.

Subsequently allegations were made to the Income-tax Officer that the firm's return was false. Ex parte and informal enquiries having satisfied the officer that the firm had deliberately misled him and that prima facie chargeable income had escaped assessment he issued a notice to the firm under S. 34. The firm having contended that such a notice could not be validly served on them until they had had an opportunity of being heard, the matter was referred to the High Court on a case stated under S. 66 (1) of the Act. The High Court held in effect that the Income-tax Officer was not entitled to exercise his powers under S. 34 unless he had first held a quasi judicial enquiry to which assessee had been convened. On appeal, Held, the Income-tax Officer is not required by the section to convene the assessee or to intimate to him the nature of the alleged escape from taxation, or to give him an opportunity to be heard before he decides to put into operation the powers which the section confers.

Decision of the High Court, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 557, reversed.

Appeal from the decision of the High Court, Fort William in Bengal dated 24th February, 1938 (Derbyshire, C. J. and Panckridge, J.†) on a reference under S. 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The respondents are a registered partnership firm carrying on business in Calcutta.

The question in the appeal turns on the true construction of S. 34 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. That section enacts:—

"34. If for any reason income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax has escaped assessment in any year or has been assessed at too low a rate, the Income-tax Officer may, at any time within one year of the end of that year, serve on the person liable to pay tax on such income, profits or gains, or, in the case of a company, on the principal officer thereof, a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under sub-S. (2) of S. 22 and may proceed to assess or re-assess such income, profits or gains, and the provisions of this Act shall, so far as may be, apply accordingly as if the notice were a notice issued under that sub-section:

Provided that the tax shall be charged at the rate at which it would have been charged had the income, profits or gains not escaped assessment, or full assessment, as the case may be."

The question at issue was formulated in the reference as follows:—

"Where the Income-tax Officer has, on such materials and informations as are available to him, reason to believe that income from any of the heads of income described under S. 6 of the Indian Income-tax Act—in the present instance, from 'business' and 'other sources', which should have been assessed in the year of assessment, has escaped assessment, and, as a result of such enquiries and investigations as are possible at that stage, has been satisfied as stated in paragraph 3 of the statement that a prima facie case has been made out against the assessee for assessment under S. 34 of the Act, whether, on a true construction of S. 34 of the Act, it is not open for the Income-tax Officer to initiate proceedings under S. 34, affording at the same time ample opportunities to the assessee to produce such evidence to the contrary as he likes, in the course of the proceedings thus initiated, or, on the other hand, does the section contemplate that the factum of such escapement should have been first proved and definitely found and determined by an independent enquiry, before the Income-tax Officer can assume jurisdiction to re-open the assessment under S. 34?"

The learned Judges of the High Court criticised this formulation, holding that it was not in proper form and that it was made up of several involved questions connected with each other. They therefore did not render a positive or negative answer to either of the alternative branches of the question, but the judgment of the Court delivered by the learned Chief Justice construes S. 34 as requiring the Income-tax Officer to indicate to the assessee the nature of the alleged escapement from assessment and to give the assessee an opportunity of being heard, before the Income-tax Officer decides that income has escaped assessment and before proceeding to exercise his powers under S. 34. To put the decision negatively, the Court held that the Income-tax Officer was not entitled to exercise his powers under the section unless he had first held a quasi-judicial enquiry to which the assessee had been convened. The question now is whether that decision is well founded in law.

Though the appeal is concerned with a general question of the construction of S. 34, it is necessary for a clear understanding of it that the facts which give rise to it should be briefly explained under reference to other material provisions of the Act which were in force in 1932-33, the year of assessment. These provisions are to be found in Ss. 22 and 23 of the Act. Under S. 22 (2) the Income-tax Officer must serve notice on any person, other than a company, whose total income is in the Income-tax Officer's opinion of such an amount as to render such person liable to income-tax, requiring him to furnish a return in the prescribed form of his total income during the previous year. Sub-S. (4) authorises the Income-tax Officer to serve on any person upon whom a notice has been served under sub-S. (2) a further notice requiring him to produce accounts and documents, subject to the limitation that he shall not require the production of any accounts relating to a period more than three years prior to the year previous to the year of assessment. S. 23 provides for the making of the assessment. Sub-S. (1) requires the Income-tax Officer, if he is satisfied that the return made under S. 22 is correct and complete, to assess the total income and to determine the sum payable. Under sub-S. (2) if the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe that the return is incorrect or incomplete he must serve on the person who made the return a notice requiring him either to attend at the Income-tax Officer's office or to produce any evidence relied on in support of the return. Sub-S. (3) provides that the Income-tax Officer, after hearing such evidence as the person who made the return may produce and such other evidence as the Income-tax Officer may require on specified points, shall by an order in writing assess the total income and determine the sum payable. Sub-S. (4) makes provision for an assessment by the Income-tax Officer to the best of his judgment if the assessee fails to make a return or to comply with the terms of the notices issued to him. This whole procedure, it may be recalled, not only applies on first assessment but is also prescribed by S. 34 if for any reason income, profits or gains have escaped assessment or have been assessed at too low a rate.

In the present case the procedure under S. 22 was put into operation by the Income-tax Officer and the respondents in reply to the notice issued under sub-S. (2) made a return in which they entered under the head "business, trade, commerce, etc." a loss of Rs. 8,54,385. The Income-tax Officer accepted the return as correct and complete and on the 23rd December, 1932, assessed the total income of the respondents at nil for the year 1932-33. But at the beginning of January, 1934, the Income-tax Officer received information that the account books of the assessee produced before the department had always been manipulated, that a comparison of the cash book with the bank pass books within recent years would show that they did not agree and that large sums of money which had been shown as received by the assessee in their bank pass books were not entered in the cash book. Specific instances of some of these discrepancies and inaccuracies were supplied by the informant. This naturally gave the Income-tax Officer food for thought, and after receipt of the information and before issuing notice under S. 34 he made such enquiries as were possible about the truth of the information. These enquiries were informal and ex parte. As a result of them the Income-tax Officer was satisfied (1) that the allegations of discrepancies between the assessee's books of accounts produced at the assessment and some of the entries in their bank pass books were not without foundation; (2) that the assessee had withheld or suppressed relevant facts and information and thereby deliberately misled the Income-tax Officer; and (3) that a prima facie case that some income chargeable to Income-tax had escaped assessment was made out. Accordingly on 5th February, 1934, the Income-tax Officer made an order directing notice to issue under S. 22 (2) read along with S. 34, and on 8th February, 1934, a notice was issued to the respondents in these terms:—

"Whereas I have reason to believe that your income from business and other sources which should have been assessed in the financial year ending the 31st March, 1933, has wholly escaped assessment and I therefore propose to assess the said income that has escaped assessment. I hereby require you to deliver to me, not later than the 9th March, 1934, or within 30 days of the receipt of this notice, a return in the attached form of your income from all sources which was assessable in the said year ending the 31st March, 1933."

On 22nd March, 1934, the respondents filed a new return showing the same loss as was shown in the original return.

The Income-tax Officer on 21st May, 1934, issued further notices under Ss. 22 (4) and 23 (2) and thereafter further procedure followed, including applications by the respondents to the High Court for the purpose of preventing the Income-tax Officer from proceeding with a new assessment, on the ground, inter alia, that S. 34 had been put into operation without giving the respondents an opportunity of being heard. It is not, however, necessary to discuss these proceedings, because eventually the convenient and competent course was taken of staying proceedings under S. 34 till the question at issue should be settled on a case stated under S. 66 (1) of the Act.

Learned Counsel for the respondents submitted an argument that the facts alleged did not bring the case within the scope of S. 34. This is an argument which is not open to the respondents on the terms of the reference, which assume a case that falls within the terms of S. 34 and on that assumption raise the general question, what on a sound construction of the section is the duty of the Income-tax authorities before issuing a notice under S. 22.

S. 34 is unhappily and even ungrammatically phrased. It is expressed impersonally, and it fails to state by whom and by what procedure it is to be established that income, profits or gains have escaped assessment or have been assessed at too low a rate. There is fortunately no dispute that the person who must make that decision is the Income-tax Officer, for, apart from the assessee, no one else is in a position to say whether income has been assessed or at what rate it has been assessed. The omission to prescribe expressly what the nature of the decision should be and by what procedure it must be reached is all the more surprising because in other sections of the Act the legislature has been careful to define what is necessary in these respects. This circumstance was founded on by the learned Counsel for the respondents, who pointed out that where some fact had to be established merely prima facie to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer in the bona fide exercise of his discretion, this was expressed by such phraseology as "When it appears to the Income-tax Officer", or "if the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe". On the other hand, when the statute requires that the Income-tax Officer shall make a decision, which is final so far as he is concerned, upon a matter of fact, the usual expression is "if he is satisfied". When that expression is used, however, express provision is also made whereby the interested parties may be heard either by the Income-tax Officer himself (S. 25-A and S. 28) or by the Assistant Commissioner (S. 3-A) before any definitive action is taken. In one place (S. 26) the formula is "where it is found", but in this instance the decision is made by the Income-tax Officer in the course of making an assessment and when an enquiry under S. 23 is open. Learned Counsel for the respondents maintained that in a taxing Act the construction more favourable to the assessee should be preferred and he suggested that S. 34 should be read as if it were introduced by the words "If the Income-tax Officer is satisfied" or the words "If it is found". But this suggestion is not in itself helpful to the respondents, since the words proposed to be implied do not carry with them by a further implication a direction to hold a quasi-judicial enquiry; and the real question is whether the section should be read subject to an implied proviso that the Income-tax Officer shall not apply the procedure prescribed by the section except after a decision taken in a quasi-judicial enquiry.

The section, although it is part of a taxing Act, imposes no charge on the subject, and deals merely with the machinery of assessment. In interpreting provisions of this kind the rule is that that construction should be preferred which makes the machinery workable, ut res valeat potius quam pereat. In the present instance two considerations are in their Lordships' opinion decisive. First, no powers are imposed by the section on the Income-tax Officer to convene the assessee, or to issue notices calling on him to produce documents, though these powers are essential if the Income-tax Officer is to conduct a quasi-judicial enquiry before deciding that profits have escaped assessment or have been assessed at too low a rate. In *Rex v. Kensington Income-tax Commissioners*¹, S. 52 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880 (now S. 125 of the Income-tax Act, 1918) came under consideration of the Divisional Court. It was contended on behalf of the subject taxpayer that the section imposed as a condition precedent to the operation of the section an obligation on the part of the surveyor to obtain legal evidence that the return was defective. The words to be construed were "if the surveyor discovers that any properties or profits chargeable to tax have been omitted from the first assessment". Rejecting this contention Lush, J., said:

"It is certainly remarkable that the statute . . . contains no machinery for enabling the surveyor to obtain the evidence which it is said he must obtain before his jurisdiction under the section arises. He is not a judicial officer; he has no power to compel witnesses to give evidence, or to administer an oath if they are willing to give evidence. He has no means of obtaining that evidence without which, according to the contention, the jurisdiction does not arise."

The decision of the Divisional Court in that case ultimately turned on a question not material to the present issue. It was reversed by the Court of Appeal (*Rex v. Kensington Income-tax Commissioners*¹), but the Court of Appeal did not differ from the observations of Lush, J., cited above, as is made clear by the judgment of Pickford, L. J. (at p. 445). Caution is necessary in applying decisions on a British Income-tax Act to the Indian Income-tax Act, but the reasoning of Lush, J., is general and is not affected by specialties of the British Act. It is apposite to the respondents' contention in the present case. Their Lordships are of opinion, in accordance with that reasoning, that it cannot be a condition precedent to the operation of S. 34 that the Income-tax Officer should hold a quasi-judicial enquiry, because the powers necessary for such an enquiry are not conferred upon him. But there is a second consideration which is no less conclusive. The operative part of S. 34 empowers the Income-tax Officer to proceed de novo under sub-S. 2 of S. 22, and that in turn leads, if there should still be a question of the accuracy of the return, to an enquiry under S. 23 (2) and (3), and in that enquiry the assessee has a statutory right to appear and to produce evidence. Therefore a construction of S. 34 which requires a quasi-judicial enquiry to be held before the powers under the section can be operated would result in mere duplication of procedure and in two enquiries of the same kind, into the same matter, conducted by the same official, and without any advantage to the parties. A construction so unreasonable and unpractical ought not to be preferred when another construction is open. Accordingly their Lordships are of opinion that the Income-tax Officer is not required by the section to convene the assessee, or to intimate to him the nature of the alleged escapement, or to give him an opportunity of being heard, before he decides to operate the powers conferred by the section. In the opinion of their Lordships the view which the learned judges of the High Court have taken of the section is too narrow, and the notice sent to the respondents on 8th February, 1934, is in form a competent preliminary to a new assessment.

The question in the reference is so framed that an answer to the first branch in the affirmative and to the second branch in the negative might be misleading and fail to give exact effect to the opinion of their Lordships. Their Lordships think that the proper answer to be given is that to enable the Income-tax Officer to initiate proceedings under S. 34 it is enough that the Income-tax Officer on the information which he has before him and in good faith considers that he has good ground for believing that the assessee's profits have for some reason escaped assessment or have been assessed at too low a rate. The result is that their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, and that the order of the High Court should be set aside. The respondents should pay the appellant's costs in the proceedings on the reference before the High Court and before the Board.

Jagannatha Pillai v. Kathaperumal Pillai, (1927) 53 M.L.J. 688: I.L.R. 51 Mad. 76, followed.

Where the petitioner contended that an order of the Deputy Collector setting aside a rent sale was wrong on the ground that O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, was not applicable to sales in execution of decrees for rent passed under the Act,

Held, the petitioner was entitled to have his petition allowed.

The amendment to S. 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act by Act VII of 1934 does not make any substantial difference in the applicability of the Civil Procedure Code read subject to S. 132 of the Act, which provides a complete Code of Procedure applicable to the execution by a Revenue Court of any decree for arrears of rent.

Gopalakrishnaiah v. Narasimha Rao, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 120, referred to.

Petition under S. 115 of Act of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Deputy Collector of Nuzvid dated 14th April, 1937 and made in E. P. No. 311 of 1936 in S. S. No. 20 of 1934.

G. Ramakrishna Rao for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition to revise the order of the Deputy Collector, Nuzvid Division, setting aside a rent sale held, on 19th December, 1936. The petitioner who is the Agraharamdar of Singanagudam village obtained a decree for arrears of rent due by a tenant and brought his holding to sale in execution of the decree. The Revenue Inspector, Nuzvid, was appointed as the selling officer and he posted the sale to be held on 19th December, 1936. Meanwhile on 2nd December, 1936, the first respondent herein, the Zamindar of Talaprolu Estate, which adjoined the Agraharam addressed a letter to the Deputy Collector alleging that the holding which had been proclaimed for sale formed part of Ranganagudam village comprised in his estate and that the petitioner had no right to bring it to sale as part of his Singanagudam Agraharam. This letter was forwarded by the Deputy Collector to the selling officer, "for information and necessary action". No notice of this letter was given to the petitioner but on the date fixed for sale, the selling officer called upon the agent of the petitioner who had come there to attend the sale to answer the allegations in the letter sent by the first respondent. The agent filed a counter-statement alleging that the property sought to be sold was part of the petitioner's Agraharam, that it was in the possession and enjoyment of the judgment-debtor as a 'ryot' of the Agraharam village and that the claim of the first respondent was unfounded. The Officer took statements from the karnam and two ryots of Ranganagudem who supported the first respondent's claim, while the judgment-debtor and his brother filed statements supporting the petitioner's case. On these statements, the Revenue Inspector came to the conclusion that the land in question did not belong to the petitioner's village but formed part of the first respondent's Zamindari village Ranganagudam. In spite of this conclusion, he conducted the sale and knocked down the property to the second respondent who was the highest bidder, and submitted the sale records together with the record of his enquiry to the lower Court. That Court, however, set aside the sale on the ground that the selling officer having found that the land ordered to be sold was not part of the petitioner's village ought to have postponed the sale and submitted the records of his enquiry for orders of the Court and that the petitioner played a fraud on the Court by attempting to bring to sale a holding which was no part of his village. It accordingly directed the refund of the purchase money to the second respondent. In passing this order, the Court purported to act under O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, read with S. 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act, though no application was made by the first respondent under that provision.

Learned counsel for the petitioner has challenged the validity of this order mainly on the ground that the Court has no power to set aside the sale under O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, as that provision is not made applicable by S. 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act to sales in execution of decrees for rent passed under that Act. The respondent raised a preliminary objection to the maintainability of the revision petition. It was contended for him that O. 21, r. 90 as well as O. 43, r. 1 (j) applies to proceedings under the Estates Land Act and that therefore the petitioner's remedy was to appeal from the order now sought to be revised.

The question whether S. 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act makes O. 21, rr. 90 and 92 applicable to sales in execution of decrees for rent passed under the former Act was decided in the negative by a Bench of this Court in Jagannatha Pillai v.

*Kathaperumal Pillai*¹ and that decision is binding on me. It was, however, pointed out by learned Counsel for the first respondent that that case was decided before S. 192 of the Act was amended by Act VII of 1934 and that the reasoning based on the specific exclusion of Chapter 43 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 corresponding to O. 43, r. 1 of the present Code from the provisions made applicable to proceedings under the Act could no longer apply. Jackson, J., observed at page 82:

"Under the procedure, which, as now suggested, S. 192 is supposed to import, the sale is confirmed, and the aggrieved party has no appeal because S. 192 excludes Chapter (Order) XLIII, and no suit, because O. 21, r. 92 precludes a suit."

This anomaly, it is urged, cannot occur after the amendment of S. 192 as it does not now specifically exclude the application of O. 43 to proceedings under the Estates Land Act. I do not consider that this makes any difference. The substantial reasoning on which the decision in *Jagannatha Pillai v. Kathaperumal Pillai*¹ is based is that S. 132 by making the provisions of Chapter VI of the Estates Land Act applicable to the execution by a Revenue Court of any decree for arrears of rent, provides a complete Code of Procedure, and S. 192 which applies the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to proceedings under the Act must be read subject to S. 132. In fact, the decision was followed and applied even after the amendment of S. 192 in *Gopalakrishnayya v. Narasimha Rao*².

It follows that the preliminary objection should be overruled and the revision petition should be allowed. The petitioner will have his costs here and below to be paid by the first respondent.

—Appeal against—Court-fees payable—Madras High Court Original Side Fees Rules, Appendix II, No. 35.

Question of title to property is not within the province of a Probate Court. The only question before it is whether a person died testate or intestate and who is entitled to the administration of the estate and if he died testate whether the executor is entitled to the grant of probate. A judgment directing the issue of probate after declaring the will genuine is a final judgment. The subject-matter of an appeal against such a judgment is incapable of valuation and the person preferring an appeal is entitled to put his own valuation upon it. The minimum fee of Rs. 225 under High Court Fees Rules, Appendix II, No. 35 is the proper court-fee payable for such appeal.

Reference under Court Fees Act, S. 5 in Original Side Appeal sought to be filed against the judgment of Somayya, J., in T. O. S. No. 11 of 1938 in Original Testamentary Jurisdiction of the High Court.

K. Narasimha Aiyar and A. S. Nataraja Aiyar for Appellant.

The Government Pleader (B. Sitarama Rao) instructed by The Government Solicitor on behalf of the Government.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision is, what is the Court-fee payable on the Memorandum of Appeal, which was presented against the judgment of my learned brother Somayya, J., in T. O. S. No. 11 of 1938 by which he directed the issue of a probate after declaring the will propounded by the respondent to be genuine. The appellant paid a court-fee of Rs. 225. The learned Master is of the opinion that an ad valorem stamp duty is payable under No. 35 of the High Court Fees Rules. The office is of the opinion that under No. 35 the appellant has to pay a stamp duty on Rs. 7,615-12-5 at which the testamentary suit has been valued and the same must be deemed to be the valuation in the appeal. The appellant contends that the subject-matter is incapable of valuation, but he however values it at Rs. 2,000 and states that the stamp duty paid by him is correct. The question is, is the contention of the appellant sound?

The rule governing this matter is No. 35 of the Original Side Fees Rules which runs thus:

“Memorandum of appeal from a final judgment:

When the value of the subject-matter of the appeal does not exceed Rs. 2,500 .. Rs. 225

And for every Rs. 1,000 or part thereof in excess of Rs. 2,500 .. „ 5.”

There can be no question that the appeal is from a final judgment (vide *Perumal Chetty v. Kandasamy Chetty*¹). But the question that has to be decided is, what is the subject-matter of the appeal? In deciding this question the nature of the probate proceedings has to be considered. In a probate proceeding no question of title to property is adjudicated as it is not within the province of a Probate Court to go into it. The only question before it is whether a person died testate or intestate and who is entitled to the administration of the estate, and if he died testate whether the executor is entitled to the grant of probate. In *Pran Kumar Pal Chaudhury v. Darpahari Pal Chaudhury*², Sanderson, C.J., described the nature of a probate proceeding thus:

Maragadh-
ammal
v.
Yasodh-
ammal.

"I propose to consider what is the nature of the proceedings in connexion with an application for a grant of probate. There is no doubt that in such proceedings the question of title to property does not arise. The question is whether one or other of the parties to the proceedings is entitled to represent the estate. But, when the proceedings are contested, as in this case, the Court has to try an issue which arises between the parties and which involves the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to have a grant of probate or whether the person, who has entered a caveat and who has become a defendant, has substantiated and proved the defence which he has set up."

The learned Chief Justice then referred to the case of In the goods of *Colonel John Shelton, deceased*³, where the nature of the proceedings is described thus:

"A contest for probate is a suit to try the question of testacy or intestacy, and that administration is a matter of civil right."

This is the view which has also been taken by a Bench of this Court in *Rodrigues v. Mathias*⁴. In that case the question was what is the stamp duty payable in the High Court on a memorandum of appeal presented against an order granting probate by a District Court? In dealing with that question Sankaran Nair and Munro, JJ., observed thus:

"We also think that on principle an ad valorem stamp should not be levied in such cases. The only title which the order appealed against gives to the petitioner is the right to administer the estate and if he has to sue to recover the estate he will have to pay stamp duty on its value. We do not think stamp duty on the value of the estate should be twice exacted."

Having regard to the nature of the right that is agitated in a probate proceeding, the subject-matter of the appeal in my opinion must be deemed to be incapable of valuation or the person who is preferring the appeal is entitled to put his own valuation upon it. In *Miss Eva Mountstephens v. Mr. Hunter Garnett Orme*¹, the view taken was that the subject-matter in dispute in an appeal against an order issuing probate was impossible to be estimated at a money value. There is no provision in the Original Side Rules as to payment of any fixed fee in regard to matters which are incapable of valuation as provided in the Court Fees Act. The only indication that can be gathered from the Fees Rules is a note to Rule No. 1 in regard to a plaint which is that the plaint shall contain a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for purposes of calculating the court-fees payable thereon under this item. The plaintiff shall, in preparing the statement, follow as far as possible the provisions of S. 7 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, as amended by Madras Act V of 1922. S. 7 of the Court Fees Act does not provide for all cases. It seems to me that if the subject-matter of an appeal is viewed to be incapable of valuation which in my view is the correct basis, the minimum fee for the memorandum of appeal provided according to the High Court Fees Rules, namely, Rs. 225 is the proper fee leviable. But if the appellant is entitled to put his own valuation—and he has put his valuation here at Rs. 2,000—the fee that has been paid is the proper fee. I therefore decide that the appellant need not pay any further court-fee. The Government Solicitor will get his costs Rs. 35 from the Government.

Petition under Ss. 115 of Act V of 1908 and 224 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Trichinopoly dated 11th November, 1939, in O.P. No. 127 of 1938.

T. A. Ramasami Reddi for Petitioners.

A. V. Narayanaswami Aiyar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question that falls to be decided in this revision petition is whether a person whose adjudication is annulled under S. 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is disqualified for election as a member of a Local Board as an 'undischarged insolvent' under S. 55 (2) (b) of the Madras Local Boards Act. The respondent was adjudicated insolvent in 1928 and the adjudication was annulled in 1932 as he did not apply for discharge within the time prescribed. He was elected as a member of the Samayapuram-Kannanore Panchayat Board in June, 1938. Apparently no objection was raised on the ground of disqualification when he offered himself for election nor was any proceeding instituted to set aside his election after he was elected, but the petitioner who was also a member of the Board applied under S. 57 on 21st November, 1938, to the District Judge, Trichinopoly, in which the area of the Local Board is situated, to determine whether or not the respondent was disqualified under S. 55 of the Act. The learned District Judge held that the adjudication of the respondent having been annulled, he could not be said to be an 'undischarged insolvent' and accordingly rejected the application. This civil revision petition is directed against that order.

The petitioner's learned counsel contends that the expression 'undischarged insolvent' should be understood in a literal sense and that once a person was adjudicated insolvent he remained an 'undischarged insolvent' unless he obtained an order of discharge, though the adjudication itself was subsequently annulled. I have no hesitation in rejecting this contention, as its acceptance would lead to the obvious anomaly that a debtor who has obtained his discharge on a partial payment of his debts would be qualified for election to Local Boards, whereas a person whose adjudication has been annulled under S. 35 of the Provincial Insolvency Act either on the ground that he ought not to have been adjudged insolvent or that his debts have been paid in full, would continue to be disqualified for such election as he would be an 'undischarged insolvent' in the sense contended for by the petitioner's counsel. This certainly could not have been the intention of the Legislature in enacting S. 55 (2) (b). The petitioner's learned Counsel recognising this reductio ad absurdum endeavoured to draw a distinction between an annulment of adjudication under S. 35 and an annulment under S. 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, on the ground that annulment under the latter provision does not remove the taint of insolvency but only emphasises the debtor's insolvent state, and he placed reliance on S. 73 of that Act as recognising the distinction. Apart from this section the bearing of which on the question in dispute I will presently consider, the Act makes no distinction between annulments of adjudication based on one ground or another so far as their legal effect is concerned. There are three sections in the Act which provide for annulment of adjudication, namely, Ss. 35, 39 and 43, and S. 37, which indicates what consequences are to follow on such annulment, is made applicable in each case. It seems to me therefore that annulment of adjudication on whatever ground it is based, must be taken to put an end to the legal character of an insolvent which adjudication under the Act confers upon a debtor. The extinction of such character due to annulment may operate to the advantage or to the prejudice of the person concerned according to the circumstances in which his adjudication is annulled, but it is clear that he can no longer be regarded in the eye of the law as an insolvent. It follows therefore that the respondent in this case cannot be held to be an 'undischarged insolvent'.

It remains to consider whether this conclusion is affected by anything contained in S. 73 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. That section relates to disqualification of insolvent debtors and so far as it is material here, runs thus:

"73. (1) Where a debtor is adjudged or readjudged insolvent under this Act, he shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be disqualified from—

(c) being elected or sitting or voting as member of any local authority.

(2) The disqualifications which an insolvent is subject to under this section shall be removed and shall cease if—

(a) the order of adjudication is annulled under S. 35, or

(b) he obtains from the Court an order of discharge, whether absolute or conditional, with a certificate that his insolvency was caused by misfortune without any misconduct on his part."

Chindiya
Pillai
v Subbaratnam
Pillai.

It is clear that under this provision, a person adjudged an insolvent continues to be disqualified for election as member of any local authority notwithstanding the annulment of his adjudication under S. 43 of the Act and in this respect the provision goes beyond S. 55 (2) (b) of the Local Boards Act. Petitioner's learned Counsel did not argue before me that S. 73 enacted by the Central Legislature ought to prevail against S. 55 of the Local Boards Act passed by the Provincial Legislature. Such a contention will obviously be of no assistance to the petitioner, as the application in this case was made to the lower Court under the special procedure provided by S. 57 of the Local Boards Act whereby jurisdiction is conferred upon the District Judge to decide questions of disqualification under certain specific provisions only, namely, Ss. 54, 55, 56 and 59 of that Act. All that was argued was that the expression 'undischarged insolvent' used in S. 55 (2) (b) must be understood in the light of the provisions of S. 73 of the Provincial Insolvency Act so as to avoid a discrepancy between the two provisions. I am unable to see how this can be done consistently with established principles governing construction of statutes. The two provisions, though relating to disqualification for election to Local Boards, so far as it arises out of insolvency, are worded altogether differently and the expression 'undischarged insolvent' does not occur in S. 73. Petitioner's counsel pointed out that the expression 'uncertificated bankrupt' in S. 55 (2) (b) of the Local Boards Act must refer to the certificate which is provided for in S. 73 (3) of the other Act and argued that the two sections must be read together. I fail to see how the meaning of the expression 'undischarged insolvent' in the former section can be controlled by anything contained in S. 73. It may be that the respondent is disqualified for membership of the Panchayat Board in question by virtue of the provisions of S. 73 and that, in an appropriate proceeding, he may be declared to be so disqualified. But that, in my opinion, cannot affect the question whether the respondent is disqualified under S. 55 (2) (b) of the Madras Local Boards Act. The Court below was concerned only with this question in the proceeding out of which this Companies Act (VII of 1913), S. 235—Officer of company—If can be ordered to deliver books of the company in his possession to the liquidators.

Where books of a company, which must have some value to the company are found to be in the possession of the manager of the company the Court has power to order them to be delivered to the liquidator and it is not necessary to pass an order for payment of a specified amount in default of delivery of such property.

On appeal from the order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Gentle, dated 15th March, 1939 and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 1499 of 1938 in O. P. No. 165 of 1937.

Dr. V. K. John for P. N. Sundararajan and D. Noronha for Appellant.

R. Venkataraman for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—This is an appeal from an order passed by Gentle, J., on a misfeasance summons taken out by the liquidator of the Pollachi Vellala Union Mills Company, Limited. The liquidator alleged that the appellant, who had been the manager of the company, was liable under S. 235 of the Indian Companies Act to pay two sums of money, one of Rs. 3,448-10-6 and the other of Rs. 700-7-0. The liquidator also asked that an order be passed against the appellant, directing him to produce all books, papers, documents and correspondence relating to the company which were still in his possession

The learned Judge held that the appellant was not liable in the sum of Rs. 3,448-10-6 and the liquidator withdrew the summons so far as Rs. 700-7-0 was concerned. With regard to the books it was said that the appellant had wrongfully retained the following: (1) The inventory or stock book; (2) the directors' circulation book; (3) the shareholders' circulation book; and (4) the share transfer application register. The learned Judge found that the first two of these books were with the appellant, but that the remaining two were not with him. Accordingly he passed an order directing the appellant to deliver over to the liquidator the inventory book and the directors' circulation book. This order was not complied with and the learned Judge then called upon the appellant to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Court. In the meantime the appellant filed this appeal and as the result the contempt proceedings have been stayed.

Dr. John has contended that the learned Judge erred in law in confining his order to the delivery of the two books. He says that unless a loss has been suffered by the company there can be no order under S. 235 and that when an order is passed for the return of property it must also state the amount for which the person against whom it is passed is liable in the event of the non-delivery of the property. In this connection the learned Counsel has quoted the decisions of the Court of Appeal in *In re Canadian Land Reclaiming and Colonising Company: Coventry and Dixon's case*¹ and of the House of Lords in *Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn*². In the first of these cases the Court held that under S. 165 of the English Companies Act, 1862, in order to make a person liable under the section he must be shown to have been guilty of misconduct by which the company has suffered loss. The section was not for punishing a man who had been guilty of misfeasance, but for compensating the company for the loss suffered. In that case it had not been shown that there was any loss. This interpretation of the section was accepted by the House of Lords in the second case. There is, however, a great difference between S. 165 of the English Companies Act, 1862 and S. 235 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, as amended by Act XXII of 1936. S. 165 of the English Act reads as follows:

"Where, in the course of the winding up of any company under this Act, it appears that any past or present director, manager, official, or other liquidator or any officer of such company, has misapplied or retained in his own hands or become liable or accountable for any moneys of the company, or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the company, the Court may, on the application of any liquidator, or of any creditor or contributory of the company notwithstanding that the offence is one for which the offender is criminally responsible, examine into the conduct of such director, manager, or other officer, and compel him to repay any monies so misapplied or retained, or for which he has become liable or accountable, together with interest after such rate as the Court thinks just, or to contribute such sums of money to assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of such misapplication, retainer, misfeasance, or breach of trust, as the Court thinks just."

S. 235 of the Indian Companies Act reads as follows:

"Where in the course of winding up of a company it appears that any person who has taken part in the formation or promotion of the company or any past or present director, manager, or liquidator, or any officer of the company has misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money or property of the company, or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the company, the Court may, on the application of the liquidator, or of any creditor or contributory (made within three years from that date of the first appointment of a liquidator in the winding up or of the misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust, as the case may be, whichever is longer) examine into the conduct of the promoter, director, manager, liquidator or officer, and compel him to repay or restore the money or property or any part thereof respectively with interest at such rate as the Court thinks just, or to contribute such sum to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of the misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust, as the Court thinks just.

(2) This section shall apply notwithstanding that the offence is one for which the offender may be criminally responsible."

Under this section the Court may compel an officer of a company against whom a misfeasance summons has been taken out (1) to repay the money, or (2) to restore the property, or (3) to pay compensation. The difference between the two sections is that under S. 165 of the English Act the Court was not given the power to compel an officer of a company to restore property. He could only be compelled to make payment either by way of refund or compensation, and this was the position in England until the Companies (Winding up) Act, 1890, was passed. There power was given to the Court to order the restoration of property and the corresponding sections of the English Acts of 1908 and 1929 have been drafted on the same lines.

The appellant is in possession of two books belonging to the company and therefore he is in possession of property of the company. It is true that S. 235 contemplates a loss to the company before an order can be passed under the section. This was pointed out by Maugham, J., as he then was, in *In re Etic, Limited*¹, where he stated:

"The conclusion at which I have arrived is that S. 215 (the corresponding section of the English Act to S. 235 of the Indian Act) is not applicable to all cases in which the company has a right of action against an officer of the company. It is limited to cases where there has been something in the nature of a breach of duty by an officer of the company as such which has caused pecuniary loss to the company. Breach of duty of course would include a misfeasance or a breach of trust in the stricter sense, and the section will apply to a true case of misapplication of money or property of the company, or a case where there has been retention of money or property which the officer was bound to have paid or returned to the company."

The liquidator says that the retention of these two books by the appellant is likely to lead to considerable loss to the company. That has not been found, but obviously these books must have some value and their retention by the appellant means a loss to the company. There being a loss the learned Judge had the power to pass an order for the delivery of the books to the liquidator, and it was a proper order to pass.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Leach, C.J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The petitioner is a manufacturer of beedis and has been carrying on business in Madras for 25 years. As the result of his industry he has succeeded in building up a very substantial concern. The business is carried on in five buildings in Sembudoss Street, George Town, Madras. In No. 41, Sembudoss Street, he stores the tobacco required for the making of his beedis. He stores beedi leaves in No. 59 and uses Nos. 48, 57 and 58 for the handling and storage of the finished products. Sembudoss Street is in a residential part of Madras. It is a very narrow street and it is said that the growth of petitioner's business has resulted in a grave nuisance and a menace to health. On the 19th August, 1938, thirteen people living in the neighbourhood presented a petition to the Commissioner of Police, complaining of the nuisance and asking that action be taken. The Commissioner of Police had no jurisdiction to interfere, and the petition was forwarded to the Commissioner of the Corporation of Madras. The Commissioner inquired into the complaint and considered it to be well founded. As the result the Corporation refused the petitioner a license to carry on his business in the premises in Sembudoss Street from 1st April, 1939. S. 287 of the Madras City Municipal Act, as amended by Act X of 1936, requires a person to take out a license before he uses premises for the storage, packing, pressing, cleansing, preparing or manufacturing by any process whatever, tobacco, which the Act states shall include cigars, cigarettes and beedis. The petitioner asks this Court to direct, either by certiorari or mandamus, the Corporation to issue a license permitting him to carry on his business in these premises as heretofore. He alleges that the Corporation in refusing to grant him a license has acted arbitrarily and he says that inasmuch as a license was granted to him in respect of the previous year, the Corporation is not entitled in law to refuse to renew it. For the Corporation, it is said that the refusal to grant the petitioner a license is fully justified by the facts and that it cannot be compelled to renew the license.

On the evidence before the Court it must be held that the carrying on of the petitioner's business in Sembudoss Street does constitute a nuisance and a danger to health. The process of broiling to which the tobacco leaves are subjected creates an offensive smell, and the storage of large quantities of tobacco results in tobacco dust being carried by the wind to adjoining houses and causes the inhabitants to cough and sneeze. The business involves the attendance at the premises of large numbers of coolies and other people for whom there is no proper accommodation or sanitary arrangements. The noise also adds to the discomfort of the residents. The Commissioner of the Corporation in an affidavit states that he has been advised by the Health Officer of the Corporation that the continuance of the business in this locality will positively endanger the health of the residents. The Health Officer of the Corporation has sworn an affidavit in which he confirms the advice given to the Commissioner. In addition, Mr. B. W. Batchelor, a director of Messrs. Binny & Company and a member of the Standing Committee of the Corporation, took part in the inspection and has endorsed the opinion of the Commissioner in a separate affidavit. The petitioner denies that there is any nuisance, but his denial is only supported by his own affidavits, and they cannot be accepted in view of what the Commissioner, the Health Officer and Mr. Batchelor have said. It has not been suggested that these gentlemen are not speaking the truth. There is a suggestion that they have perhaps exaggerated the situation, but I am not prepared to accept it. In any event, there is ample evidence on the record to show that the Corporation in refusing to renew the petitioner's license has not acted arbitrarily, but in the interest of the health of the residents of the locality.

The question then resolves itself into this. Has the Corporation the power under the Act to refuse the license? Before the Act was amended in 1936, no license was required; but by reason of the amendment of S. 287 and Sch. VI, a license is now requisite. Sub-S. (1) of S. 287 says:

"No place within the limits of the City shall be used for any of the purposes mentioned in Sch. VI without a license obtained from the Commissioner and except in accordance with the conditions specified therein."

Sub-S. (3) says:

"The owner or occupier of every place for the use of which for any purpose a license is required shall apply to the Commissioner not less than thirty days before the place is used for such purposes."

Sub-S. (5) says:

"The Commissioner may grant a license subject to such restrictions and regulations as may be specified by him therein or he may refuse to grant the license."

Sub-S. (6) states that every license shall expire at the end of the year for which it is granted, or at such earlier date as the Commissioner may, for special reasons, specify in the license. By reason of sub-S. (7), an application for renewal of a license must be made not less than thirty days before the commencement of the year for which renewal is sought. Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar on behalf of the petitioner has conceded, as he must, that, when S. 287 was amended by Act X of 1936 the Commissioner had the power to refuse to issue a license, notwithstanding that the business had been carried on in the same premises for a quarter of a century. But he says that inasmuch as sub-S. (7) does not state that the Commissioner may, if he so chooses, refuse a license, it cannot be withdrawn once it has been issued, and must be renewed, although on renewal conditions may be imposed. Where there is a power to grant a license, there is power to refuse, and where an Act requires a person to apply for the renewal of a license at the expiry of the period for which it is granted, it must, in my opinion, necessarily imply a right to refuse to renew, unless there is indication to the contrary in the statute.

In Haji Ismail v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay, *Ahmed Moosa v. The Municipal Commissioner of Bombay*¹, the Bombay High Court held that the power of the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay to grant a license under S. 394 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888) included the power to refuse it. It was also held that unless it was clear that the Commissioner had used his authority with some indirect motive and for a collateral purpose, not for the purpose for which the legislature had armed him with the power, the Court could not interfere with his discretion. There is nothing in S. 287 of the Madras Act which indicates an intention on the part of the legislature to withhold from the Commissioner the power of refusing to renew a license when the circumstances demand it. Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar has laid great stress on the provisions of S. 282 of the Act which requires the owner or occupier of a stable, veterinary infirmary, stand, shed, yard or other place in which quadrupeds are kept or taken in for purposes of profit, shall take out a license in the first month of every year. Sub-S. (2) of that section says that the Commissioner may, by an order and under such restrictions and regulations as he thinks fit, grant or refuse to grant the license. Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar argues that because there is no special power given under S. 287 to refuse renewal, it must in view of the terms of S. 282 be taken that the legislature intended a license for the carrying on of a business to be on a different basis. In this connection he has also drawn attention to the provision of S. 284 which states that if any stable, cattle-shed or cow-house is not constructed or maintained in the manner required by or under the Act, the Commissioner may by notice direct that it shall no longer be used as a stable, cattle-shed, or cow-house.

The argument here is really met by the provisions of S. 304. That section says that no person shall, without or otherwise than in conformity with an annual license granted by the Commissioner continue to keep open a private market.

Application for the renewal of the license shall be made not less than thirty days before the commencement of the year for which the license is sought. The Commissioner may by an order grant or refuse to grant or renew the license or withhold the license until the owner or occupier executes such works as may be specified in the order. Then follows the important proviso that the Commissioner shall not refuse or withhold the license for any cause other than the failure of the owner or occupier to comply with some provision of the Act or some regulation made under S. 308 or some by-law made under S. 349, or without the approval of the Standing Committee. The proviso indicates that where the legislature intended that there should be no power to refuse to renew, or intended to limit the exercise of such power, it has used appropriate language. The argument which S. 304 provides for the respondent Corporation is certainly as strong, if not a stronger one, than the argument which can be based for the petitioner on Ss. 282 and 284. In my judgment S. 287 must be construed according to the words used therein and when it is so construed, I consider that there is no room for reasonable doubt that the Commissioner has in a proper case the power to refuse a renewal. I say in a proper case, because if the refusal were arbitrary or prompted by some ulterior motive, the position would be different. That cannot be said to be the case here. There is no ground for suggesting that the Commissioner has acted in any way contrary to his duty. For the reasons indicated the petition will be dismissed with costs, and we fix the Advocate's fee at Rs. 250.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—I am of the same opinion. I agree that a consideration of the language of not only S. 304 but also of S. 285-C, cl. (3) gives a clear indication that where the statute intends that the Commissioner is not to have the power of refusing a renewal, it has said so. The effect of the refusal is not to prohibit the petitioner from carrying on his business altogether but only to prohibit it in the premises in which it is now being carried on. There is nothing inherently wrong in the legislature placing a restriction upon the right of an individual in the interests of the residents in general of the locality.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Pandrang Row, J.—This appeal comes before us as a result of the order made by Burn, J., to the effect that an important question is raised in this appeal arising out of the Malabar Tenancy Act which frequently comes up for decision and on which there is no authority. This question is whether the renewal in respect of a part of the original holding by an intermediary in favour of the tenant in actual possession of that part is not permitted under the Malabar Tenancy Act, XIV of 1930. Before dealing with this question a few necessary facts have to be stated. The first plaintiff in the suit is the jenmi of the properties and the second plaintiff is an assignee of his in whose favour the plaintiff prays for a decree. Five items of properties were demised on kanom tenure by the first plaintiff in favour of the tarwad of defendants 1 to 20 under Ex. A of 11th September, 1911. One of these five items was set apart in favour of the third defendant whose assignee subsequently got a renewal from the jenmi in respect of that item. We are therefore not concerned with that item in this case. The 31st defendant purchased the tarwad's kanom right in the remaining four items in a Court sale. The twenty-seventh defendant is the sub-kanomdar of a part of one of these four items, namely, of item 3. The plaintiff filed a suit for redemption of Ex. A and while the suit was pending the twenty-seventh defendant put in an application purporting to be under Ss. 22 and 23 of the Act for a renewal in respect of the portion of item 3 in his possession and making the plaintiffs as well as the thirty-first defendant party respondents. This application after several adjournments came on for hearing on the 5th September, 1935, the very day on which the suit itself came on for hearing and was actually tried. It is clear from the order of the trial Court made on this date on the petition as well as from the statement contained in para. 19 of the judgment of the trial Court that the parties agreed to the following course being adopted, namely, the twenty-seventh defendant was content with getting a renewal only from the thirty-first defendant and the question whether such a renewal granted by the thirty-first defendant would be of any force as against the plaintiff, was left to be decided in the suit which was to proceed on the basis that the renewal had already been granted by the thirty-first defendant to the twenty-seventh defendant. Having regard to the course taken during the trial of the suit and the hearing of the petition based on the agreement of the parties, it is not possible in our opinion to allow either party now to resile from the position then agreed to, that is, on the 5th September, 1935, by the parties concerned. It is therefore not open in our opinion to the appellant, that is, the second plaintiff, to contend in this second appeal that the renewal as between the defendants 27 and 31 must be deemed to be regarded as invalid even as between the parties thereto, either because it was a renewal granted during the pendency of the suit, or on the ground that it was actually granted after the suit had been disposed of. No such objection is available to the appellant in view of his agreement at the trial to proceed on the basis that a renewal had been granted already by the thirty-first defendant to the twenty-seventh defendant. The only question therefore which remains is what has been mentioned at the outset, namely, whether the renewal of a portion of item 3 by the intermediary in favour of the tenant in actual possession is binding on the plaintiffs, that is, on the jenmi; in other words, whether S. 26 of the Malabar Tenancy Act of 1930 which expressly provides what effect renewal should have on the rights of the landlords, applies to cases where the renewal is of only a portion of the original holding and does not take in the entire original holding. In S. 26 itself there is nothing to show that the provisions thereof are limited to cases where the renewal granted by the intermediary in favour of the tenant in actual possession must be in respect of the entire original holding created by the jenmi in favour of the intermediary. The relevant words are: "and the tenant in actual possession of the holding". It is not disputed that the word 'tenant' found in this section would include a sub-kanomdar like the twenty-seventh defendant. If he is a tenant in actual possession of the holding, the holding can only refer to his holding, that is, the holding or parcel of land included in the engagement to which he was a party and cannot be taken to mean the holding created by the engagement entered into by his landlord with the superior landlord or jenmi. As the section also clearly provides—and indeed the section seems to have been enacted expressly for the purpose—for cases where the grantor intermediary for his own part does not obtain a renewal for any reason; in other words, the section is an exception to the general rule that a person cannot grant what he does not possess himself; and it was intended to guard or protect the interests of sub-tenants or sub-kanomdars who get a renewal only from their immediate landlord and not from the ultimate jenmi. It is clear from S. 26 that such sub-tenants or sub-kanomdars do derive a valid interest under such renewal obtained from the intermediary though subject to certain conditions which are contained in that section, one of which is that the landlord is to be free to evict the tenant on the ground specified in S. 20 other than the ground of non-payment of renewal fee. Unfortunately in the present case the ground on which eviction is sued for is the ground of non-payment of renewal fee, and the right to evict on this ground is not saved by S. 26. Some stress was placed before us on sub-S. 2 of S. 26 which provides for the recovery of the proportionate share of renewal fee by the jenmi from the grantor of the renewal, but we are of opinion that this does not affect the amplitude of the provisions of sub-S. (1) of S. 26. There may be, as suggested by the appellant's advocate, a misprint in the words 'such grantee of interest' in sub-S. (2), the misprint being 'grantee' for 'grantor' and it may be there may be some difficulty in exactly calculating the proportionate share of the renewal fee in certain given cases. But we do not feel called upon to decide these matters in the present case in which they do not arise. We are satisfied, however, that these matters do not affect the decision of the general question whether S. 26 (1) does apply to a case of this kind, that is, to a case of renewal of only a portion of the original holding which had been demised on sub-kanom in favour of the tenant in actual possession. This point must therefore be answered against the appellant, that is to say, S. 26 (1) does apply to such renewals of even parts of the original holding. As this is the only ground on which the decrees of the Courts below are attacked it follows that this second appeal must fail. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), Ss. 43 and 78—Suit filed by the legal representative of deceased insolvent impleading the Official Receiver—Subsequent annulment of adjudication—If can give retrospective validity to the suit.

Practice—Decisions on preliminary issues which are not decisions of the whole suit—When interfered with in revision.

The subsequent annulment of adjudication cannot give validity to a suit filed by an insolvent or his legal representative during the pendency of the insolvency when the property is vested in the Official Receiver. Such a suit should be dismissed.

Ordinarily the High Court will not entertain revision petitions against decisions on issues which are not decisions of the whole suit. But where such a decision relates to the question of jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit and it relates to a matter which if decided wrongly would result in an elaborate trial, which would otherwise be unnecessary, the High Court will interfere in revision.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was the first defendant in a suit for recovery of money collected by the first defendant as a result of a decree which is alleged to be the property of the plaintiff's husband. The facts are rather peculiar. The decree in question was transferred from a third party to the name of the first defendant and it is alleged that the real owner was the plaintiff's husband who is now dead. The plaintiff's husband was adjudged an insolvent in 1930. He died in June, 1934, at or about the time when the first defendant effected a sale of the properties acquired in execution of the decree in question. It would appear that at the time of his death the plaintiff's husband had failed to carry out the Court's orders in prosecution of his insolvency and had not applied for a discharge. It would also appear that the debts due to creditors in the insolvency were the subject of an extra judicial composition. In June, 1937, the plaintiff, widow of the deceased insolvent sued the first defendant for the sale proceeds of the property acquired under the decree which she asserts forms part of her husband's estate. She impleaded in her suit the Official Receiver and alleged that the Official Receiver had taken no action to get possession of this money for the estate. At the time when she filed this suit, she was taking steps for the annulment of the adjudication of her husband but she does not in her plaint specifically pray that the money claimed in the suit should be made payable to the Official Receiver. She claims it for herself, possibly anticipating that the annulment of the adjudication would intervene before the suit was decreed. The adjudication was eventually annulled in an appellate order of the District Judge. At the time of the annulment the suit was barred as regards one item but was still within time as regards the other item. The learned District Judge annulled the adjudication knowing of the extra judicial composition since, having regard to the death of the insolvent and all the circumstances, he thought it unnecessary to endeavour to undo this composition.

A preliminary issue was framed in the suit on the question whether the suit was maintainable when the plaintiff's husband's estate had vested in the Official Receiver. Ordinarily this Court will not entertain revision petitions against decisions on issues which are not decisions of the whole suit, but in the circumstances of the present case it seems to me that the matter should be decided in revision. It essentially relates to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit and it relates to a matter which, if decided wrongly in favour of the plaintiff, may result in an elaborate trial which would otherwise be unnecessary.

The question is by no means free from difficulty. Ordinarily, speaking the provisions of S. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act, regarding the annulment of an adjudication for the default of the debtor will scarcely apply to the estate of a dead man, and one would think that the proper order to pass would be one under S. 17, merely terminating the administration; the debtor being dead and no further administration being necessary in the interests of the estate. However, it does appear in this case that before the death of the insolvent there was a default from which annulment would normally result. I am not therefore prepared to say that the annulment order was improper. In any case we are not now concerned with its correctness. It has been made and is binding.

What is the effect of a subsequent annulment order upon a suit filed by the legal representative of a deceased insolvent impleading the Official Receiver, which suit should strictly have been filed by the Official Receiver himself? There is no clear authority on the subject. The Court below relies on a decision in *Lingappa v. Official Receiver*¹, which itself is rather an unusual case. It purports to follow *Ramasami Kottadiar v. Murugesu Mudali*² and to decide that the effect of the dismissal of an insolvency petition is to revest the debtor's property in the debtor as from the date of the order of adjudication, so that a transfer by the insolvent made after his adjudication and before the order of dismissal would be a good transfer upon which the transferee can sue. The case in *Ramasami Kottadiar v. Murugesu Mudali*² was a case under the old Act which had no provision for the annulment of adjudication for the default of the insolvent. The case in *Lingappa v. Official Receiver*¹, which the learned Chief Justice was considering was under the Act of 1920 and presumably the order terminating the insolvency must have been in effect one of annulment, though the word 'dismissal' is used in the judgment. I have examined the papers in that case and find that they contain very little information. It arose from a suit filed originally by the transferee from the insolvent, who impleaded the Official Receiver as a co-plaintiff apparently after the suit had become barred by limitation. The trial Court overlooking the difficulty of limitation gave a decree in favour of the Official Receiver. The defendant filed a revision petition raising the question of limitation. The learned Chief Justice called for a report from the District Judge and as a result of what was contained in the report, ascertained that the original adjudication was an ex parte order, subsequently reconsidered on the intervention of the insolvent with the result that the petition was dismissed. One would have thought that the order should have been one not of dismissal but of annulment under S. 35 of the Act and it must be regarded as having the same effect. The learned Chief Justice holds that the decisions in *Ramasami Kottadial v. Murugesu Mudali*¹, is authority for the position that the effect of an order setting aside an adjudication is, subject to the protection of the receiver for the acts done by him, to re-vest the debtor's property in the debtor as from the date of the vesting order. The learned Chief Justice infers that if the property is re-vested in the debtor as from the date of the vesting order, a transfer made by the debtor during the continuance of the insolvency acquires a validity by the subsequent cancellation of the insolvency, so that the title of the transferee is good and sufficient to support a decree in his favour. It is to be noted that this is not a case of a suit filed by an insolvent during the continuance of the insolvency but a case of a suit filed by a transferee from an insolvent on the strength of a title alleged to have been created by the insolvent during the continuance of his insolvency.

1. A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 717.

2. (1897) 7 M.L.J. 229; I.L.R. 20 Mad. 452.

Muthusami
Chettiar
v.
Periyal Achi.

There is no statutory prohibition of a suit by an insolvent during the continuance of his insolvency, but it seems to follow from the fact that all the properties of the insolvent vest in the receiver, that the insolvent will during his insolvency have no such title in any part of the estate vested in the receiver as would form a basis for a suit regarding that property, and so much has been repeatedly held (vide *Subbaraya Chettiar v. Lakshmi Ammal*²). If the insolvent cannot maintain a suit regarding the property vested in the Official Receiver so long as the insolvency enures, it is difficult to see how the insolvent can take advantage of the Court's delays in disposing of that suit so as to clothe a suit, which in its inception was bad, with a validity due only to the subsequent annulment of the insolvency. If the insolvent or his legal representative had no right of suit when the suit was filed, that suit should have been dismissed.

It is suggested that the action of the insolvent's legal representative in impleading the Official Receiver as a defendant and disclosing to the Court the full facts of the insolvency makes that suit substantially one on behalf of the estate. I find it difficult to accede to the proposition that the failure of the Official Receiver to get in a particular property makes it open to the insolvent or any one else to file a suit which should legitimately have been filed by the Official Receiver and give to that suit an appearance of regularity by impleading the Official Receiver as a defendant. The Act specifically prohibits suits against an insolvent without the leave of the Court and it has been held that when a suit is filed without leave against the insolvent during the pendency of the insolvency, a subsequent annulment of that insolvency does not give a retrospective validity to the suit (*vide Ponnuswami v. Kaliaperumal*¹) and this decision has been quoted with approval in a Full Bench decision reported in *Davood Mohideen v. Sahubdeen*². If the subsequent annulment of an insolvency does not take away the necessity for leave in respect of a suit against an insolvent filed before the annulment, it is difficult to see how a subsequent annulment can give validity to a suit filed by an insolvent or his legal representative during the pendency of the insolvency when the property vested in the Official Receiver.

Another argument which has been advanced is that the effect of S. 78, Provincial Insolvency Act, makes it clear that though an annulment in one sense puts the insolvent back to the position which he occupied before the adjudication, it is not the intention of the legislature to give a retrospective sanction to unauthorized suits filed in respect of the insolvent's estate during the pendency of the abortive insolvency. Under this section the whole of the period occupied by the abortive insolvency may be ignored for the purpose of limitation in respect of any suit which might have been brought but for the order of adjudication. It is true that this section will not enure to the benefit of the insolvent himself, for a suit can be brought by the Official Receiver on behalf of the insolvent and the adjudication does not prevent the assertion of rights for or on behalf of the insolvent. Still there is a suspension of limitation operating on behalf of the creditors who have proved their debts and it is clearly contemplated that to this extent at any rate the legislature does not contemplate the filing of suits during an insolvency with a view of a prospective annulment of the adjudication. This is in fact what has happened in the present case. The plaintiff hoping to get the adjudication annulled has filed this suit at a time when she had no vested interest in the estate presumably in order to save limitation.

1. A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 480.

I come to the conclusion that she had no legal basis for her suit at the time when it was filed. As however the suit was within time so far as the second item is concerned when the adjudication was annulled the suit with reference to this item is maintainable. With reference to the first item the suit will have to be dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had no cause of action when the suit was filed, the property being vested in the Official Receiver and the suit for this item being time barred before the adjudication was annulled. The petition is therefore allowed to this extent. The petitioner will be entitled to three-fourths of his costs in revision.

who is generally sought to be made liable for mesne profits; but it does not follow that one who is not in actual wrongful possession cannot be made liable, for, if the dispossession of the plaintiffs which is the basis of the claim of mesne profits is one in which a person who did not actually take possession or continue in possession participated, or in other words, if the dispossession can be regarded as a joint act of several persons, every person who takes part in such dispossession would be liable for mesne profits even though actual profits were received only by some of the persons who took part in the dispossession. They would be regarded in such circumstances as joint tort-feasors. But the mere grant of a patta or lease by itself is not sufficient to constitute the grantor of the patta a joint tort-feasor in respect of any tort that the lessee or pattadar may think of perpetrating.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam dated 26th November, 1936 and made in I. A. No. 1357 of 1936 in O. S. No. 82 of 1931.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang
Row, J.

Pandrang Row, J.—This appeal has been preferred under rather peculiar circumstances. There was a suit instituted in 1930 (O. S. No. 9 of 1930) on the file of the District Court of Kishna which was subsequently transferred to the Subordinate Judge's Court of Masulipatam for disposal in which the plaintiffs four in number sued for a declaration of their right to certain property as against the defendants five in number and also for recovery of possession thereof from defendants 1, 2, 4 and 5 in case the Court found that the plaintiffs were not in possession and also for mesne profits as against all the five defendants. The third defendant was the zamindar under whom the plaintiffs claimed to hold the properties as part of their holding. Defendants 1 and 2 obtained a patta from the third defendant in respect of the plaint property and they were found to have been in possession of the property along with their sub-tenants defendants 4 and 5. The suit was not resisted by the third defendant who allowed it to proceed ex parte. The judgment in the suit was pronounced on the 22nd November, 1932. The only question that was really decided therein was that the plaintiffs had title to the suit property and that defendants 1 and 2 had none. Then followed the usual direction that there would be a decree as prayed for by the plaintiffs with costs. The decree that was actually drawn up and dated 22nd November, 1932, said nothing as to who should pay the mesne profits to the plaintiff though a direction was given for an enquiry being held as to the amount of mesne profits during a certain period mentioned therein. Though in the earlier part of the decree it was only defendants 1, 2, 4 and 5 that were directed to put the plaintiffs in possession of the property nevertheless in the later portion of the decree relating to the enquiry about mesne profits there was a reference to the relinquishment of possession by defendants 1 to 5. The inclusion of the third defendant in this part of the decree was objected to by the third defendant in his petition dated 6th November, 1936. that is to say, nearly four years afterwards. He applied that instead of the words defendants 1 to 5 found in this part of the decree the words defendants 1, 2, 4 and 5 should be substituted and this application was allowed by the lower Court in its order dated 26th November, 1936, but at the same time that order made another amendment in the decree which had the result of making the third defendant also liable for the mesne profits along with the other four defendants. In other words for the first time by this amendment made by the Court either suo motu or at the instance of the plaintiffs in the suit a liability in respect of mesne profits was fixed upon the third defendant, and it is from this amended decree making him liable for mesne profits that the present appeal has been preferred. A Civil Revision Petition has also been filed apparently in accordance with the usual practice of observing abundant caution. The question for determination in this appeal seems to be comparatively simple, namely, whether there is any basis for making the third defendant liable for mesne profits. No doubt he allowed the suit to proceed ex parte but that does not absolve the plaintiffs from the necessity of adducing some prima facie evidence which would be sufficient in law to establish a liability in respect of mesne profits on the third defendant. The evidence is absolutely silent as to any part taken by the third defendant in the dispossession of the plaintiffs. All that is said therein is that the third defendant granted a patta in respect of the properties in favour of defendants 1 and 2. Now can the mere grant of a patta by the third defendant to defendants 1 and 2 taken along with the subsequent actual dispossession by defendants 1 and 2 be regarded as a sufficient basis for coming to the conclusion that the dispossession of the plaintiffs was dispossession by the third defendant acting jointly with defendants 1 and 2; or to put it in other words could it be said that the third defendant took an active part in the dispossession of the plaintiffs? No doubt ordinarily a liability to pay mesne profits goes with the actual possession of the land or in other words it is the person in wrongful possession who is generally sought to be made liable for mesne profits, but it does not follow that one who is not in actual wrongful possession cannot be made liable, for, if the dispossession of the plaintiffs which is the basis of their claim for mesne profits is one in which a person who did not actually take possession or continue in possession participated, or in other words if the dispossession can be regarded as a joint act of several persons every person who takes part in such dispossession would be liable for mesne profits even though the actual profits were received only by some of the persons who took part in the dispossession. They would in such circumstances be regarded as joint tort-feasors. But we are not aware of its having been decided in any case that the mere grant of a patta or a lease by itself is sufficient to constitute the grantor of the patta a joint tort-feasor in respect of any tort that the lessee or the pattadar may think of committing later on. Such a contention is in our opinion opposed to all principles and really finds no support in any of the decisions that have been quoted to us on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents. The case which gives them the most assistance is the one reported in *Mudun Mohun Singh v. Ram Doss Chuckerbutty*¹. But even in that case there was an actual finding that all the persons who were sought to be made liable for mesne profits had joined together in keeping the plaintiffs out of possession, and because these were the facts reliance was placed on the decision in *Doe v. Harlow*². Their Lordships of the Privy Council who had to express an opinion as regards *Doe v. Harlow*² in *L. P. E. Pugh v. Ashutosh Sen*³ after stating the facts of that case, namely *Doe v. Harlow*² pointed out that that case settled no principle at all as the Court merely held in that case that there was evidence on which a jury might properly find that Warren had made himself a party to the tort. It follows therefore that there is no basis in the evidence to support any finding that the third defendant is also liable for mesne profits in this case. As mentioned already the evidence connecting the third defendant with the trespass is really nil. It is not stated in the evidence that either he himself or his servants took part in the trespass. All that is elicited in the evidence is that he had granted a patta. That does not mean that he even encouraged the pattadars defendants 1 and 2 to take possession wrongfully or forcibly. There is no presumption in law of the commission of any wrong, and a tort cannot be presumed. The abetment of a tort being itself a tort it cannot be presumed; and if a liability arises only by reason of the abetment of a tort or the taking part in a tort it must be established by some kind of evidence just like any other fact and there is no presumption which can be availed of in this case by the plaintiffs-respondents. It follows from this that our finding on the only point for determination in this appeal must be in favour of the appellant, namely, that he is not liable for mesne profits.

The appeal is therefore allowed and the decree of the lower Court modified by deleting the third defendant from the defendants who are made liable for mesne profits. The appellant will be entitled to his costs of this appeal from the plaintiffs-respondents.

framing a scheme operating as estoppel—Consent if can confer jurisdiction on the board to frame a scheme for an excepted temple—Trustees' consent, if can estop the institution.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 1, r. 10—Application to be brought on record as additional plaintiffs—Dismissal after dismissal of suit—Propriety.

On a petition to the Board against the trustees of a temple (which had already been decided by the Board to be an excepted temple) the Inspector of the Board held an inquiry. One of the trustees stated in the course of his examination "I have no objection to a dittam being settled by the Board for the management of the aforesaid temple. Nor do I have any objection to the appointment of a responsible man from our caste as interim trustee or to any other order being passed until the dittam is framed." In a suit by the trustees under S. 63 of the Religious Endowments Act for setting aside a scheme settled by the Board it was contended by the Board that the plaintiffs were estopped from questioning the scheme by reason of the statement to the Inspector.

Held, the Board having settled a scheme in a judicial capacity after hearing the parties and taking evidence, cannot be said to have been prejudiced so as to attract the doctrine of estoppel.

Assuming such a plea of estoppel can be raised the word 'dittam' could only mean the scale of expenditure in the temple and could not have meant a scheme for management. The statement cannot be regarded as being consent given to the framing of a regular scheme for the administration of the temple.

Even otherwise any consent given to the framing of a scheme would not cover a scheme which it would be beyond the jurisdiction of the Board to frame, as the temple was decided to be an excepted temple.

In any event consent by trustees must be deemed to have been given by the trustees in their personal capacity and could not operate as an estoppel against the institution of which they were the trustees or even against the trustees themselves when suing or being sued in the capacity of trustees.

Yasim Sahib v. Ekambara Aiyar, (1919) 37 M.L.J. 698, followed.

Certain persons applied under O. 1, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, to be brought on record as additional plaintiffs. The lower Court disposed of the suit on the preliminary ground of estoppel and then dismissed the application on the ground that the scheme framed by the Board had become final by reason of the dismissal of the suit. In revision,

Held, the application ought to have been allowed without further question and the ex post facto method of disposing of applications of this kind must be condemned unreservedly.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Coimbatore in O. S. No. 2 of 1937 and petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Coimbatore dated 7th February, 1938 and passed in I. A. No. 46 of 1938 in O. S. No. 2 of 1937.

V. C. Viraraghavachari for Appellant. •

Y. Govindarajulu, K. V. L. Narasimham, N. Subramanyam and K. E. Rajagopalachariar for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang Row, J.—This appeal is from the decree of the Additional District Judge of Coimbatore in O. S. No. 2 of 1937 dismissing a suit instituted under S. 63 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act for setting aside a scheme settled by the Board, on the preliminary ground that the plaintiffs who were the trustees of the religious endowment in question, namely, Sri Kannikaparameswari Amman temple at Peria Nagaman in Pollachi Taluk were estopped from questioning the scheme. This defence of estoppel was raised by the Board (first defendant) though the right of recourse to a Civil Court from the order of the Board settling a scheme was intended to be negatived in this manner. It is difficult to understand how the Board which dealt with this matter of settling a scheme in a judicial capacity after hearing the parties and taking evidence can be said to have been prejudiced so as to attract the doctrine of estoppel. Assuming however that the Board is under no disability, so to say, of putting forward a plea of this kind in respect of a matter decided by it judicially, or at least quasi-judicially the question remains whether the Court below was right in deciding this plea in favour of the Board. Reliance is mainly placed on a certain statement made by one of the plaintiffs Bala Venkatarama Chettiar before the Inspector of Religious Endowments on the 24th November, 1935, in the village itself in the course of an inquiry which he was holding into the petition presented by certain persons against the trustees of the temple. At the end of a long statement recorded from this plaintiff by the Inspector, an addition is made to the following effect:

"I have no objection to a dittam being settled by the Board for the management of the aforesaid temple. Nor do I have any objection to the appointment of a responsible man from our caste as interim trustee or to any other order being passed until the dittam is framed."

The word 'dittam' which is found in the above statement has been taken to be equivalent to the word 'scheme' in the lower Court's judgment, but without any sufficient justification, it would appear, for the ordinary meaning of the word 'dittam' is certainly not the same as that of the word 'scheme'. A scheme for the management of a temple is one thing, whereas a dittam for the conduct of affairs in a temple is different. Unfortunately in this note the word 'dittam' is applied to the management of the temple, but this does not mean that the word was used in the sense of a scheme. 'Dittam' is a word which is found used in the Hindu Religious Endowments Act itself (vide S. 55) where 'dittam' is described as the scale of expenditure in the temple, and that is the sense in which it is, so far as we are aware, used with reference to temples and indeed that must be the sense in which it must have been used by a man like the person who made this statement, namely, a trustee of the temple. In other words, when a trustee of a temple speaks of dittam, he could only mean the scale of expenditure which is fixed for the conduct of necessary services, etc., in the temple and certainly could not have meant a scheme for management of the temple affairs involving the appointment or election of trustees and so on. It is therefore clear to us that this statement cannot be regarded as being a consent given to the framing of a regular scheme for the administration of the temple or the religious endowment. The other evidence relied upon in support of this alleged consent is quite inconclusive. Certain notes made by two Commissioners during the inquiry have been pointed out to us as showing that the parties agreed to a scheme being settled. But if the words are to be construed strictly, as the plaintiffs were not present before the Commissioners in person, they could not have agreed, and if, as is now alleged, it was the Vakil, who appeared for the plaintiffs, who gave the consent, the note should have been to this effect. If, as a matter of fact, the Vakil who appeared for the plaintiffs before the Board had consented to the framing of a scheme, it would have been quite possible to prove this fact either by examining the Vakil or at least the Vakil who appeared on the opposite side, if it was thought that it would not be consonant with the dignity of the Commissioners for one of them to give evidence in the case. The best evidence on this point has not been put before us and we are unable to regard the statements made in the notes as being sufficient to show in a matter of this importance that the plaintiffs had unreservedly given their consent to the framing of a scheme just as the Board pleased. The evidence of D.W. 1 on this point is really irrelevant being substantially nothing more than hearsay evidence. We are therefore not satisfied that in this case there was any real consent given to the Board's framing a scheme as it pleased.

Even otherwise, any consent given to the framing of a scheme would not cover a scheme which it would be beyond the jurisdiction of the Board to frame. The temple in question was decided by the Board itself to be an excepted temple, and in view of S. 84 of the Act that decision is final as no one objected to that decision. So far as the powers of the Board to frame schemes in regard to excepted temples are concerned, they are to be found in S. 63 of the Act, and as it now stands, it provides, no doubt, for the fixing of the number of non-hereditary trustees, for the appointment of new trustees, in addition to the existing trustees or for associating persons with the trustees, but not for appointing new trustees in the place of existing trustees and in effect for the removal of the existing trustees and replacing them by others. Whether this has been done in this case or not does not seem to be established as clearly as it might have been, and we do not therefore propose to decide this point, because for other reasons we have decided that the case should go back to the Court below for disposal on the merits, and it will be left to the Court below to decide this point, namely, whether any portion of the scheme settled by the Board is beyond the jurisdiction of the Board.

A further attack on the judgment of the Court below is based on the contention that even if consent had been given to the framing of the scheme and the scheme were not beyond the jurisdiction of the Board, nevertheless the consent must be deemed to have been given by the trustees in their personal capacity and could not be said to operate as an estoppel against the institution of which they were the trustees or even against the trustees themselves when suing or being sued in the capacity of trustees. For this proposition several authorities have been quoted. It is enough to refer to the decision in *Yasim Salih v. Ekambara Aiyar*¹ and the cases therein quoted. The decision is clearly in point and we intend to say no more than that we agree with the decision therein. It would thus follow that the finding of the Court below that the plaintiffs are estopped from maintaining the suit is not correct.

The revision petition raises the question whether the order of the Court below dismissing the application of certain other persons claiming to be brought on record as additional plaintiffs under O. 1, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, is wrong. These persons, who are petitioners in the revision petition, desired to come in as supplemental plaintiffs in the suit in order to avoid any possible prejudice to the institution by reason of the previous conduct of the old trustees (plaintiffs in the suit). The lower Court instead of passing an order on this petition before disposing of the suit on the preliminary ground of estoppel, chose to adopt the extraordinary course of waiting till the suit itself was dismissed on the preliminary ground of estoppel and then dismissing the petition made under O. 1, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that as the scheme framed by the Board had become final by reason of the dismissal of the suit filed by the plaintiffs, the application under O. 1, r. 10, was not maintainable. This ex post facto method, so to say, of disposing of applications of the kind must be condemned unreservedly. It is a denial of justice to refrain from passing orders on petitions like this till the suit is itself dismissed on some ground or other and then to say that as the suit had been dismissed there was nothing pending in the Court to which the petitioners could be made parties. Obviously having regard to the nature of the ground on which the suit was dismissed, namely, the ground of estoppel which was available only against the plaintiffs in the suit, this was an eminently fit case for the favourable consideration of the Court in the interests of the institution. We have no doubt that the lower Court erred, and erred grievously in dealing with this application in the manner it did. We have no doubt that the application ought to have been allowed without further question, especially having regard to the lower Court's own view that the suit would have to be dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs were in effect estopped from bringing it. We therefore allow the petition, set aside the order of the Court below and direct that the petitioners in the revision petition be made additional plaintiffs in the suit. The parties will, however, bear their own costs in this revision petition.

In view of our opinion that there is no estoppel standing in the way of the plaintiffs the decree of the Court below dismissing the suit is set aside and the lower Court is directed to restore the suit to its original number on the file and dispose of it according to law. The appellant's cost of this appeal must be paid by respondents two to four; the first respondent's (Board's) costs will in accordance with law come out of the endowment. As regards costs in the suit already incurred in the Court below and to be incurred in future, they will abide the result and should be provided in the revised decree of the lower Court. The Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded to the appellant.

Sm and his four sons A, R, S and L formed a joint Hindu family carrying on business in various places. In 1919 they entered into an arrangement in and by which each of the sons was to get Rs. 51,000 and the father to have some businesses absolutely for himself and with respect to the other properties the family should continue undivided. The father carried on business at Jaffna and Rangoon. Few months after the arrangement R died and the businesses of the brothers were amalgamated and were carried on by the father on behalf of the sons till 1923 when the father died. The father was carrying on his Jaffna and Rangoon businesses separately till his death in 1923 and afterwards they were continued by the sons till August, 1925. On 15th August, 1925, the sons A and S were adjudicated insolvents in Madras and on 25th August, 1925, the firm carried on by the sons at Colombo was adjudicated insolvent in Colombo. Before insolvency A and S had applied for letters of administration to the estate of their father treating him as intestate and they were granted to E. A suit was filed by one P in 1926 against E as administrator of the estate of Sm for Rs. 1,61,127 and 22 cents on the ground that the moneys were lent to Sm (father). The father had in fact left two wills. In 1929 the Official Assignee executed a power-of-attorney to T and H empowering them to apply for letters of administration with the wills annexed to Jaffna Court and they were issued in May, 1930, to T and H constituting them administrators. T and H then applied to be added as defendants to P's suit in Colombo and after a contest a decree was passed for Rs. 1,61,127 and 22 cents. Against that decree an appeal was preferred on the ground that P was not a creditor of the father Sm but only a creditor of the sons and could not claim any moneys from and out of the exclusive property of the father and therefore P was not entitled to claim any monies from and out of the Jaffna assets. A compromise was entered into by which P's son C (P having by then died) was "to share pro rata with all the other creditors the assets of the deceased" and to be "entitled to proceed for the recovery of any balance, that may be due to him in action No. 18800 D. C. Colombo (that is P's Colombo suit) from assets that may exist out of Ceylon", and a decree followed in terms of it. C received his pro rata share in Jaffna and for the balance preferred a claim before the Official Assignee, Madras and claimed that "so far as it is the liability of the joint estate the same has to be paid before the creditors of the insolvents are paid".

Held, (i) that the consent decree passed against T and H must be taken to have been passed against them as agents of the Official Assignee, Madras and was binding on him;

(ii) that though a son could not be adjudicated an insolvent on a debt of the father as there is no personal liability therefor, yet it can form a debt provable in the insolvency of the son, if on the date of the order of adjudication, the insolvents (sons) were under a liability to pay the same from and out of the joint family property in their hands or from out of the separate property inherited by them from their father;

(iii) that though the decree was passed against the administrators who were administering the assets in Ceylon, still a creditor will be entitled to come and claim in the administration of the assets in British India, from the administrator who would be functioning in British India;

(iv) that as a result of the compromise the Official Assignee agreed to C proving his claim for the balance before him and sharing in the assets being administered by him pro rata with the other creditors entitled to share in the insolvency of the sons.

Held, further, (v) that even as a matter of law, apart from the compromise decree, an ordinary creditor of a father can prove in the insolvency of the son but cannot claim any priority over the sons' creditors both as regards separate property of the father and the joint family property. The separate property of the father devolving on the son and the joint family property owned by the son at the date of the insolvency, which has been augmented by the father's share devolving upon the son by survivorship on account of the father's death before the insolvency, will be property which belonged to the insolvent.

(vi) the claimant is not entitled to interest from the date of the insolvency of the sons, as the effect of the compromise is only to allow him to prove his claim in insolvency and as such it is not open to the Official Assignee to disregard the provisions of the Act and consent to interest.

On appeals from the judgment and order of the Honourable Mr. Justice Wadsworth dated 23rd August, 1937 and 21st July, 1937 and passed in the exercise of the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the High Court in Petition No. 264 of 1925, Application No. 453 of 1936.

K. Raja Aiyar for N. T. Shamanna for Appellant.

T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar for T. V. Ramiah for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Venkataramana Rao, J.—These two connected appeals are against the order of our learned brother Wadsworth, J., on the application made by Pr. N. Sm. Chokkalingam Chettiar the appellant in O.S.A. No. 68 of 1937 to recover a sum of Rs. 1,61,127 and 22 cents and interest thereon less a sum of Rs. 47,573 and 80 cents from and out of the estate of the insolvents in the hands of the Official Assignee of Madras. The learned Judge allowed the said Chokkalingam Chettiar to prove the balance of his debt as claimed by him subject to certain limitations specified in para. 2 of the order disallowing all claims to priority in respect of any portion of the assets in the hands of the Official Assignee. O.S.A. No. 68 of 1937 is by the said Chokkalingam Chetti against the order in so far as it disallowed his claim to priority and O.S.A. No. 82 of 1937 is by the Official Assignee against the order allowing the said Chokkalingam Chetti to prove the claim in the insolvency. Before dealing with the contentions advanced in the appeals the relevant facts may be stated.

One Ar. Ar. Sm. Somasundaram Chettiar and his sons Arunachala, Ramanatha, Sundaresa and Lakshmana were members of a joint family and doing extensive business in money-lending and rice in British India, Burma and Ceylon. In 1919 an arrangement was entered into between them in and by which it was agreed that each of the sons should get a sum of Rs. 51,000 that with the sum so obtained they should establish separate businesses of their own and that the father himself should be entitled to certain businesses exclusively. It was further stipulated that Arunachala should be the guardian of Lakshmana and Ramanatha should be the guardian of Sundaresa. In regard to the rights and obligations with respect to the rest of the properties no change was effected and the family must therefore be deemed to have continued undivided. In pursuance of the said arrangement, Ramanatha and Sundaresa carried on business at Colombo and Kumbakonam; so also Arunachala and Lakshmana together in those two places. The joint family ceased to do any business in Colombo except rice business at Bankshall. The father carried on business exclusively in Jaffna and Rangoon. Ramanatha died in November, 1919, and thereupon the two businesses at Colomb^o which were carried on by the two sets of brothers were amalgamated into one and an arrangement was come to providing that the combined businesses should be carried on by the father on behalf of the sons and it was accordingly carried on until the date of his death in July, 1923. It is also in evidence that the businesses at Jaffna and Rangoon which were carried on by the father were carried on by the adult sons until August, 1925, when they were adjudicated insolvents both in Madras and in Colombo. On the 15th July, 1925, Arunachala and Sundaresa were adjudicated insolvents in Madras. On the 25th August, 1925, the firm which was carried on by the sons at Colombo was adjudicated insolvent in the Colombo District Court. Arunachala and Sundaresa before they were adjudicated insolvents applied through their Attorneys Messrs. Subbayya Naidu and Lakshmanan Chettiar for letters of administration in regard to the estate of their father in Ceylon on the basis that the father died intestate whereas in fact he had left two wills dated 2nd October, 1922 and 23rd October, 1922. The District Court of Jaffna to which the application was made issued letters of administration on 9th June, 1925, to Messrs. Subbayya Naidu and Lakshmanan Chettiar and they were therefore constituted administrators of the Ceylon assets of the father Somasundara. As these were not properly functioning, one B. Emmanuel, Secretary of the District Court of Jaffna was later appointed administrator to act with them and he seemed to have administered the assets solely until 1929 when he was transferred to another Court. On the 17th August, 1925, P. R. R. S. M. Somasundaram Chetti, the father of the said Chokkalingam Chetti filed a suit in the District Court of Colombo against all the sons of Somasundara for recovery of a sum of Rs. 1,60,531 and 47 cents alleging that that sum was borrowed by them between the 4th January, 1923 and 9th August, 1925. On the 29th August, 1925, the said Somasundaram Chetti got an affidavit filed before the Official Assignee of Madras through his son claiming a sum of Rs. 53,367-0-3 in respect of the transactions had with the insolvents at Madras and a sum of Rs. 1,60,501 and odd as due from them at Colombo. On 4th February, 1926, the plaintiff withdrew the suit which he filed in the District Court of Colombo with liberty to bring a fresh action. Even before the said suit was withdrawn, Somasundaram filed a suit on 19th January, 1926, against the said Emmanuel, Secretary of the District Court of Jaffna as official administrator of the estate of Somasundara for Rs. 1,61,127 and 22 cents on the ground that the money was lent to the father Somasundara between 4th January, 1923 and 30th June, 1923 and that the said defendant as administrator was bound to pay the said sum. (See Plaint No. 18800, District Court, Colombo, dated 19th January, 1926, subsequently amended on 12th October, 1926.) His Proctor also wrote to the Official Assignee informing him that he withdrew his claim against the insolvents for the sum of Rs. 1,60,531 as it was misconceived and as the said debt was contracted by Somasundaram Chetti, the father of the insolvents. By reason of the insolvency of the sons Arunachala and Sundaresa, all the property which they were possessed of vested in the Official Assignee. The properties which they were possessed of on the date of the insolvency would be their shares in the entire joint family properties of the family in addition to their separate property. But the share of Lakshmana and the shares of the sons of Arunachala and Sundaresa were not vested in him but by a compromise entered into with the latter all the property possessed by the joint family became vested in the Official Assignee by an order dated 6th August, 1928. It is rather extraordinary that such an order should have been passed especially when there were minors but it is unnecessary to go into the validity or otherwise of the said order because it must be taken for the purpose of these appeals that the entire joint family property and the separate property of the sons in so far as they were situate within British India vested in the Official Assignee. It must also be stated that by an order passed on 3rd August, 1925, by this Court in insolvency the District Court of Jaffna and the District Court of Colombo were directed to act in aid of the Madras Insolvency. The Colombo Court agreed but the Jaffna Court did not, so that the Official Assignee had control over all the assets of the insolvents whether in British India or at Colombo but in regard to the other Ceylon assets left by Somasundara they were under the control of the administrator of the Jaffna Court. According to the Roman-Dutch law it is stated that the property standing in the individual name of Somasundara must be taken to belong to him absolutely, and neither the theory of joint family nor the rights and obligations which flow out of that status including the pious obligation of the sons for payment of their father's debts are recognised by that law. The position therefore was that so far as, at any rate, the immovable property which stood in the name of Somasundara was concerned, the widow was entitled to a half and the children of Somasundara, that is, the three sons Arunachala, Sundaresa and Lakshmana and four daughters left by him were entitled to the remaining half and each of them thus had 1/14th share. The three sons of Somasundara according to that law would only be entitled to a 3/14th share in the immovable property standing in the name of Somasundara in Ceylon subject to the payment of his debts. But as a fact both the movables and immovables appear to have been treated by the Jaffna Court on the same footing. Under the will of Somasundara of the 23rd October, 1922, Somasundara purported to divide all the properties which he was possessed of barring a few exceptions into four shares to be taken by the sons after his death and if that will were to be given effect to, the sons would be entitled to get the entire property to the exclusion of the widow and daughters. The Official Assignee of Madras apparently wanted to get at the assets of the Jaffna Court and in order to enable him to do so, he applied to this Court for letters of administration with the two wills of Somasundara annexed to that on the strength of the letters so obtained he might get himself appointed administrator of the Ceylon assets of Somasundara in the Jaffna Court. Letters were issued by this Court on the 15th November, 1928. On the 18th February, 1929, the Official Assignee made an application through his power of attorney agent one M. J. Harding for the grant of letters of administration in respect of Ceylon assets and the allegations in the paras. 4 and 5 of that petition were as follows:

"4. That the deceased A. R. A. R. S. M. Somasundaram Chetti left behind properties in Ceylon to the value of Rs. 84,18,848 according to the papers filed by the administrator in this case.

5. That for the purpose of administering the estate of the said deceased in Ceylon, it is necessary that letters of administration should be taken out."

But the application was rejected by the District Court of Jaffna on the ground that a probate of a foreign Court could not be accepted under S. 3 of the Ceylon Ordinance VII of 1921. This order was passed on the 21st May, 1929. An appeal was preferred against the said order. On the 25th July, 1929, the Official Assignee executed a power of attorney in favour of Messrs. H. D. Thornton and M. J. Harding empowering them to apply for letters of administration in Jaffna after complying with the formalities of Ceylon law. By that time Mr. Emmanuel who was functioning as administrator seems to have been transferred to another District Court and on the 16th September, 1929, Messrs. Harding and Thornton as attorneys of the Official Assignee made an application for an interim grant of letters to them pending decision of the appeal which they had preferred. Para. 6 of the petition runs thus:

"The petitioner as Official Assignee as aforesaid is not only a representative of the said heirs but is also a creditor to the extent of seven lakhs due to the said heirs from the late A. R. A. R. S. M. Somasundaram Chettiar."

By an order dated 16th December, 1929, it appears that letters of administration with copies of the will annexed were directed to be issued to Messrs. Thornton and Harding as attorneys of the Official Assignee of Madras, if before the 19th December, 1929, nobody shows sufficient cause to the contrary. This order was passed by Mr. Rock the District Judge but it also appears from another order passed by him on 16th April, 1930, wherein it was stated that he saw no objection to the granting of a limited power of probate to the Official Assignee. At any rate, it is clear that letters of administration were actually issued on the 19th May, 1930, to Messrs. Thornton and Harding constituting them administrators. There can be no doubt that it was issued to them as agents of the Official Assignee of Madras and they were functioning as such. After obtaining the letters they seemed to have applied to the District Court of Colombo in the suit brought by Chokkalinga Chetti's father and got themselves substituted as defendants in the place of the original defendants on record. After contest a decree was passed against them in the said suit and the decretal portion runs thus:

"It is ordered and decreed that the substituted defendants as administrators of the intestate estate of the late A. R. A. R. S. M. Somasundaram Chettiar deceased do pay to the substituted plaintiff as administrator of the estate of the late P. R. N. S. M. Somasundaram Chettiar, deceased, the sum of Rs. 1,61,127 and 22 cents with interest thereon at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum from 20th January, 1926, till payment in full and costs of suit."

So far as the scope of this decree is concerned there can be no doubt that Chokkalinga Chetti who was substituted as plaintiff in the place of his father who had died in the meanwhile obtained a decree against the administrators Messrs. Thornton and Harding as administrators of the Ceylon assets of Somasundara. Though the decree is against the said administrators it may be taken that it was against the Official Assignee of Madras as administrator of the Ceylon assets of Somasundara. We are not inclined to agree with the view taken by our learned brother Wadsworth, J., that the decree in the Colombo District Court is a decree which binds the sons represented by the Official Assignee with personal liability to the extent of the assets of the father in their hands. Against the said decree an appeal was preferred to the Supreme Court of Ceylon. In the meantime Chokkalinga applied to execute the decree in his favour by attaching a sum of Rs. 2 lakhs in the District Court of Jaffna and applied for a transfer of the said moneys to the credit of the suit. This was opposed by the Official Assignee as the creditor of the estate of Somasundara on the ground that the firm of the plaintiff was not registered according to Ceylon law and was not entitled to the relief claimed in the application. The ground on which the said attorneys of the Official Assignee preferred the appeal against the decree was that the case was disposed of by the trial Judge without giving sufficient opportunity to adduce necessary evidence in support of his plea. The plea that was raised by the Official Assignee in the trial Court was that Chokkalinga's father was not a creditor of the father but a creditor of the sons and he was entitled to prove only in the insolvency of the sons and could not claim any moneys from and out of the exclusive property of the father and therefore he was not entitled to claim any moneys from and out of the Jaffna assets. One object of the Official Assignee was to get as much money as possible for the son's creditors in the Jaffna Court as the estate of Somasundara was indebted largely to the firm of the sons whose property had been vested in the Official Assignee. A compromise was arrived at and the terms of the settlement were as follows:—

"Substituted plaintiff is to be paid his taxed costs incurred in 18800, District Court, Colombo, such costs not to exceed Rs. 9,000. He agrees to share pro rata with all the other creditors the assets of the deceased. He is entitled to proceed for the recovery of any balance that may be due to him in action No. 18800, District Court, Colombo, from assets that may exist out of Ceylon. The Official Administrator undertakes to withdraw his appeal in 18800, District Court, Colombo."

Thereupon a decree was passed on 17th November, 1933, by the Supreme Court of Ceylon as follows:

"Of consent it is considered and adjudged that the decree made in this action by the District Court of Colombo and dated the 12th January, 1933, be and the same is hereby affirmed and this appeal is dismissed subject to the terms of settlement arrived at between the parties and filed herewith. And it is further ordered and decreed that each party do bear his costs of this appeal."

The appellant Chokkalingam Chetti received from the Administrator Jaffna a sum of Rs. 47,573 and 80 cents as his pro rata share and after receiving the said sum he preferred a claim before the Official Assignee, Madras, for the balance due to him under the decree and the claims made on the basis of the compromise arrived at with the Official Assignee. The grounds of his claim are set out in paras. 7 and 8 of his affidavit dated 12th September, 1936, thus:

"By an arrangement however come to on or about the 21st October, 1933, and sanctioned by the District Court of Jaffna with the Official Administrator and the said defendants, it was agreed that I should take a share pro rata with all the other creditors of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the said Official Administrator, Jaffna and that I should be at liberty to recover the moneys due to me under the said decree from the assets that may exist out of Ceylon. The Official Administrator of Jaffna paid me as my share out of the assets then in his hands Rs. 47,573 and 80 cents. The said assets in the hands of the Official Administrator of Jaffna never formed and do not form part of the assets of the above-mentioned insolvents and did not and could not vest in the Official Assignee. I say that so far as it is the liability of the joint estate the same has to be paid before the creditors of the insolvents are paid."

The Official Assignee rejected the claim and the reasons for doing so were stated by him thus in his order dated the 16th November, 1936:—

"The debt was contracted by Ar. Ar. Sm. Somasundaram Chetti in Ceylon and is repayable in Ceylon from out of the said Somasundara in the hands of the administrators. Under the Ceylon law the sons are not liable for the debts contracted by the father. Further the claimant having elected to proceed against Somasundara's estate in the hands of the administrators and obtained a decree against the said estate should be deemed to have waived his right to proceed against the sons' estate assuming he had the right which I do not admit. This claim is therefore disallowed."

Thereupon Chokkalingam Chetti preferred an appeal to the Court for rescinding the order of the Official Assignee. In the report submitted by the Official Assignee to the Court he denied that he was a party to the action in the District Court, Colombo and submitted that the consent decree passed by that Court could not have any validity and binding force so far as he was concerned. He went so far as to say that the letters were issued to Messrs. Harding and Thornton by the Jaffna Court in their individual capacities, that is, as assignees of the Ceylon insolvency of the firm Ar. Ar. Sm. and not in their character as his attorneys. It is rather surprising that the Official Assignee should have taken the stand which he did. The various affidavits and reports filed in the case conclusively show that Messrs. Harding and Thornton were appointed by Mr. Wilson as his attorneys for the specific purpose of getting letters of administration on his behalf with the wills annexed of Somasundara in the Jaffna Court. In fact the judgment of Mr. Rock dated the 16th April, 1930, makes it clear that it was intended by him that the letters of administration should be issued to Mr. Wilson though the letters were actually issued to Messrs. Harding and Thornton. Therefore it must be taken that Messrs. Harding and Thornton were functioning as administrators in the Jaffna Court as agents of Mr. Wilson. He obtained letters of administration in this Court with the wills annexed for the purpose of getting letters of administration in the Ceylon Court, so that he could get at the Ceylon assets which were being administered by the Court at Jaffna. In fact the petition on which final orders for letters of administration were issued was filed by Mr. Wilson through his attorneys Messrs. Harding and Thornton and as already stated Mr. Wilson in that petition applied as Official Assignee as representing the heirs and creditors of the sons. The power-of-attorney issued to Messrs. Harding and Thornton gave them complete power to compromise and settle all claims against the estate. Therefore it does not lie in the mouth of Mr. Wilson to say that he was not a party to the action in the Ceylon Court and that the consent decree does not bind him. There can be no doubt that Messrs. Harding and Thornton were acting as the agents of Mr. Wilson in entering into a compromise in the capacity of administrators. It must also be said that Mr. Wilson in his capacity as the Official Assignee opposed the application of Chokkalingam Chetti to have the moneys attached by him transferred to the Jaffna Court. Therefore though it does not appear on record that the Official Assignee was a pro forma party to the compromise, the compromise could not have been entered into without reference to the Proctor who was functioning on his behalf and without the Official Assignee being apprised of the terms on which the consent decree was passed by the Supreme Court of Ceylon. I think it is in view of this that the concession which appears to have been made before Wadsworth, J., should be considered. The concession which is alleged to have been made by Mr. Wilson is thus stated by the learned Judge in the judgment under appeal:

"It was first contended that this decree against the administrator of the estate of the deceased Somasundara was not in fact a decree against the sons to the extent of the assets of their father in their hands nor a decree against the Official Assignee to the extent to which he was in possession of those assets. This contention has now been abandoned."

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar on behalf of the Official Assignee says that the concession was not made in the manner stated by Wadsworth, J.; but that the second part of the concession as recorded by the learned Judge was confined to the separate assets. We will have to examine the scope and effect of the compromise decree and the nature of the concession that was made by the Official Assignee at some length, but it is sufficient at this stage to say that the consent decree passed against Messrs. Harding and Thornton must be taken to have been passed against them as the agents of the Official Assignee and it is not open to Mr. Wilson to say that he was not a party to the consent decree at all. The learned Judge on a consideration of the entire evidence on record and on a construction of the compromise decree and in view of the concession made by the parties before him came to the conclusion that Chokkalingam Chetti must be placed in the same position as any of the creditors of the insolvent's father (Somasundara) in British India in proceeding against the assets, whether joint family assets or the separate assets of the father, in the hands of the Official Assignee as representing the sons but that Chokkalingam Chetti was not entitled to priority either in respect of what are deemed to be the separate assets of the father or the joint family assets wherein Somasundara and his sons were interested and the proper course according to him would be to treat the creditors of the father to the extent of the father's assets in the hands of the sons as creditors of the sons entitled to rank rateably to that extent with the son's subsequent creditors. As we have already said, both the Official Assignee and Chokkalingam Chetti have preferred appeals.

The contentions on behalf of the Official Assignee are thus formulated by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar: (i) The claim of Chokkalingam Chetti is a claim made by him as a creditor of the father of the insolvents and such a claim cannot be proved in the insolvency of the sons and his application was therefore incompetent. (ii) Assuming that an application lies, he could only prove his claim to the extent to which he could establish a personal liability of the sons, that is, a liability which could be enforced against the sons' entire property including their separate property. (iii) Assuming that such personal liability could be established there must be an inquiry as to how much of the debts that were subsisting on the date of the death of the father were binding on the joint family and were discharged by the insolvents and to that extent so much of the property as represented the value of the debts which have been discharged or taken over by the sons must be eliminated in coming to a conclusion as to what property would be available for distribution among the creditors. (iv) In any event Chokkalingam Chetti cannot claim any interest and the interest must be taken to have ceased to run from the date of the order of this Court adjudging the sons insolvents. The appeal on behalf of Chokkalingam Chetti was mainly on the ground that the learned Judge ought to have allowed priority in respect of his debt in preference to the creditors of the sons both in respect of the separate assets of the father and in respect of the joint family assets.

The first question therefore that falls to be decided is whether the application of Chokkalingam Chetti was competent. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar's contention is that on a debt of the father which under the Hindu Law the son may be under a pious obligation to pay the son could not be adjudicated insolvent because under the law of insolvency whether in British India or in England a person can be adjudicated insolvent in respect of any debt only if he was under a personal liability to pay it, that is to say, personal liability is a necessary foundation for an order of adjudication and if therefore a debt could not be made the foundation for an order of adjudication it is not a provable debt in insolvency. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar relied strongly on *Nagasubramania Mudaliar v. Krishnamachariar*¹, *In re Lynes: Ex parte Lester & Co.*² and *In re Hewett: Ex parte Levene*³. In *Nagasubramania Mudaliar v. Krishnamachariar*¹, Odgers and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., took the view that where a decree has been passed against a person as the legal representative of another (in that case the decree was against the son for the debt of his deceased father to the extent of the assets in his hands) he could not be adjudged insolvent unless a personal decree was obtained under S. 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Venkatasubba Rao, J., in the course of the judgment remarked thus:

"The proposition that any person who happens to be a debtor in his representative capacity is liable to be adjudicated an insolvent, cannot be seriously argued, for in that case any executor or administrator may be so adjudicated by reason of his occupying that limited capacity."

Then he concluded as follows:

"If the debts could not be personally enforced the debtor could not be adjudicated an insolvent."

A similar view was taken in English cases, namely, that if the debtor could not be called upon personally to pay, bankruptcy notice cannot be issued. (*Vide In re Hewett: Ex parte Levene*¹.) This position is canvassed by Mr. Rajah Aiyar for the appellant (Chokkalingam Chetti) and he went to the length of contending that the view taken in *Nagasubramania Mudaliar v. Krishnamachariar*² is wrong but it seems to us that it is not necessary to deal with this contention because a debt, though it may not be made the foundation for an order of adjudication, may still be a debt provable in insolvency. In other words, though a personal liability is a necessary foundation for an order of adjudication, it is not a necessary condition for a debt provable in insolvency. It is enough if there is a 'proprietary liability' to use the language of Lord Bown, in *Scott v. Morley*³, that is, a liability in respect of property. Under S. 46 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1883, which is word for word, S. 37 of the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883:

"All debts and liabilities, present or future, certain or contingent, to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent, or to which he may become subject before his discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the date of such adjudication, shall be deemed to be debts provable in insolvency."

What is therefore required is there must be a debt or liability to which the debtor was subject on the date of the receiving order or order of adjudication. 'Subject' means 'liable', that is, liable personally or in respect of property. Therefore if the debtor is liable to pay a debt or satisfy a liability from and out of the property in his hands, it would be a provable debt in insolvency. In *re O'Gorman: Ex parte Bale*⁴,

Wright, J., held that the damages awarded to a petitioner in a Divorce Court against a co-respondent, though they will not support a bankruptcy petition against the co-respondent, are nevertheless a debt provable in insolvency. The same view was taken in *The Official Receiver, Tinnevely v. Krishna Pillai*¹, unreported judgment of 4th May, 1938, in Applications Nos. 294 and 295 of 1938 in C.S. No. 79 of 1936, High Court by Beasley, C.J. Therefore if on the date of the order of adjudication the insolvents were under a liability to pay a debt from and out of the joint family property in their hands or from and out of the separate property inherited by them from their father, such a liability would be a debt provable in insolvency. We understand that our learned brother Gentle, J., has taken the view that a father's debt can be proved in the insolvency of the son. (Vide Application Nos. 294 and 295 of 1938 in C. S. No. 79 of 1936.) We are therefore of opinion that the father's debt is provable in the insolvency of the son under S. 46 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and that the application of Chokkalingam Chetti is competent. In this view the contention of Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar that there should be a personal liability on the part of the son before a debt can be proved in insolvency must be negatived.

The next contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar is that assuming that the father's debt can be proved in the son's insolvency, in this case the joint family property which vested in the Official Assignee on the order of adjudication could not be deemed to be assets against which Chokkalingam Chetti could have any right. The contention is that the debts were incurred in Ceylon where the Roman-Dutch Law prevails and that that law does not recognise the theory of pious obligation and therefore the debt could not be enforced against the sons. Further, Chokkalingam Chetti's father, having elected to obtain a decree against the administrators of the estate of the insolvents' father, could not now seek to recover any monies from and out of the joint family properties in the hands of the sons as the assets of the father available for the payment of his debt. The contention of Mr. Rajah Aiyar is that the Roman-Dutch Law must be treated as applicable only with reference to immovable property situated in Ceylon and cannot apply to any movable property left by the deceased either in Ceylon or in British India, that any creditor, foreign or British Indian, can realise his debt from and out of such property which can be made available for the payment of the debt and therefore the remedies available to a foreign creditor for realising the debt from and out of the property of a deceased which is situated in British India are not taken away by the Roman-Dutch Law. It seems to us that it is unnecessary to go into the contentions based on the Roman-Dutch Law in the view we take of the consent decree passed by the District Court of Colombo. Though the decree was passed against the administrators who were administering the assets in Ceylon, still a creditor will be entitled to come and claim in the administration of the assets in British India from the administrator who would be functioning in British India. In the light of this principle the consent decree that has been passed by the Supreme Court of Ceylon must be considered. The first portion of the compromise is that Chokkalingam Chetti should share pro rata with all the other creditors the assets of the deceased. Prima facie that would apply to the assets of the deceased in Ceylon. The next portion of the compromise decree is that he is entitled to proceed for the recovery of any balance that may be due to him from the assets that may exist out of Ceylon. On the date of that order the assets of the deceased out of Ceylon must be said to have been in the hands of the Official Assignee whether as the administrator of the estate of Somasundara or as Official Assignee in the insolvency of the sons of Somasundara. If the agreement is deemed to relate to assets in the hands of the Official Assignee as administrator of British India assets by virtue of the grant of letters of administration to him by this Court, it means that the right of Chokkalingam Chetti to prove in the administration here is recognised, that is, he will be entitled to recover pro rata from the assets of the father in the hands of the administrator, the Official Assignee. In this connection it must not be forgotten that when the Official Assignee made an application to this Court for letters of administration with the wills annexed of Somasundara, he appeared to treat the joint family properties in the hands of the insolvents as the assets of Somasundara. In the affidavit filed by him in this Court dated the 19th December, 1928, he deposed as follows:

"So far as I am able to gather, the position of the estate of the late Ar. Ar. Sm. Somasundaram Chettiar is this. The assets that were in the hands of the insolvents at the time of their adjudication aggregate to Rs. 60,08,399-7-8 in British India and Burma, Rs. 4,74,807-15-9 in Colombo and Rs. 7,17,067-4-0 in Jaffna, thus totalling Rs. 72,00,274-11-5.

As against the said assets, according to the account books of the insolvents and according to their valuation, the liabilities amount to as follows:—Rs. 54,71,782-5-2 in India and Burma, Rs. 17,65,846-0-10 in Colombo and Rs. 3,78,065-6-0 in Jaffna, thus totalling Rs. 76,15,693-12-0.

The above is an estimate as per the insolvents' schedule. Whatever that may be, the said estate of Ar. Ar. Sm. Somasundaram Chettiar is insolvent and I have so far declared a dividend of an anna in the rupee and I am declared a further dividend of two or three annas. I therefore state that for the purpose of the above petition the net assets are nil."

It is clear from this that he purported to treat the property which vested in him by virtue of the order of adjudication in the insolvency of the sons as the assets of Somasundaram, that is, not only the joint family property but also the separate property of the sons is treated as the assets of the father. Whether the Official Assignee was in law right in so treating such assets is another matter. The fact remains that he was not administering such assets as the administrator of the father because before any grant was made to him in the testamentary matter such property vested in him by virtue of the provisions of the insolvency law and he was only administering such assets in the capacity of Official Assignee. Therefore the question arises whether "assets" in the compromise petition should not be understood as meaning assets in the hands of the Official Assignee in insolvency. It may be contended that the power of Messrs. Harding and Thornton to settle any debt could only be in their capacity as administrators and that any compromise arrived at by them beyond the scope of the power conferred upon them may not be binding upon the Official Assignee in his capacity as Assignee or upon the creditors of the sons in the insolvency of the sons. But it seems to us that the letters of administration were obtained both here and in the Ceylon Court by the Official Assignee not only as representing the insolvents but also the creditors of the insolvents in his capacity as Official Assignee, and no distinction was made by him between the father's assets and his liabilities and the sons' assets and liabilities. Further he must be deemed to have been a party to the compromise because he was a party to the proceeding in the Supreme Court which resulted in the compromise. It is hardly likely that without reference to him any compromise was entered into. Therefore it must have been the understanding between the parties, that after getting such amount as he could get from the assets in the Jaffna Court, the claimant Chokkalingam Chetti should be allowed to proceed to recover the balance from the British Indian assets in the hands of the Official Assignee in whatever capacity he might hold them. If this was the understanding, it could only be on the footing that Chokkalingam Chetti should share pro rata with all the creditors who are entitled to participate in the assets in the hands of the Official Assignee without any preference. The word 'proceed' can only be understood in the light of the circumstances then existing as referable to a claim to be made before the Official Assignee. In the light of these facts one can understand the concession alleged to have been made by the Official Assignee before Wadsworth, J. and we are not inclined to accept that the concession was only confined to the separate assets. Whether the Official Assignee and his agents were within their powers to enter into such a compromise so as to bind the son's creditors in the insolvency of the sons is another matter; but what we have to decide is whether the Official Assignee has agreed to the terms of the compromise in the Supreme Court and thus agreed to Chokkalingam Chetti proving in the insolvency of the sons. On the evidence on record we hold that he did agree. In this view the concession alleged to have been made by the Official Assignee may be understood. The decree certainly does not bear the interpretation which the concession of the Official Assignee as stated by our learned brother Wadsworth, J., seems to suggest. The concession warrants the inference that he agreed to Chokkalinga proving his claim before him and sharing in the assets being administered by him. Therefore in the circumstances of this case, Chokkalingam Chetti must be allowed to prove for the balance of the debt, after crediting the amount realised by him in the Jaffna administration, in the insolvency of the sons.

Now we shall deal with the question of priority. In the view we have already expressed of the terms of the compromise arrived at between Chokkalinga and the administrators in Ceylon and the Official Assignee, it would not be open to Chokkalinga Chetti to contend that he ought to be given a priority over the other creditors. The understanding seems to us to be that he should share pro rata along with other creditors entitled to share in the insolvency of the sons. Having regard to the first portion of the compromise where pro rata distribution was agreed to, it must also be taken that the understanding between the parties then was that pro rata distribution was the foundation and essence of the agreement irrespective of the fact against which assets the applicant would be entitled to put forward his claim for the recovery of the amount due.

Apart from the compromise, the question is whether as a matter of law Chokkalingam Chetti is entitled to claim priority on the ground that he was the father's creditor and was therefore entitled to be paid in preference to the creditors of the sons in the insolvency of the sons from and out of the separate property of the father which devolved on the sons by inheritance and from and out of the joint family properties which vested in the sons by survivorship.

The separate property in British India left by the father was the business in Rangoon and its assets. The rest of the properties were owned by the father and sons as joint family property. It was the contention of Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar on behalf of the Official Assignee that the father died heavily indebted and that the sons discharged a major portion of the father's debts before they became insolvents, so that on the date of the insolvency no property of the father was available for payment to any creditor who was not paid and that an account should be directed on the debts which the sons discharged for ascertaining from what assets the claimant could get his claim satisfied.

In regard to the separate property of the father inherited by the sons there is no difference between the nature of the obligations imposed on them and any other heir inheriting the property from his ancestor. The heir would take the property subject to the obligation of paying his ancestor's debts and in so far as he is unable to satisfy that he has applied the property in discharge of the ancestor's debts, he will be personally liable. The theory is that he takes only the residue after payment of the debts. (Kasim Ali v. Sadiq Ali and *Fakhr Jahan Begum v. Sadiq Ali*¹.) But the debts do not form a charge on the estate so that if the heir alienates it to a bona fide purchaser for value or if a creditor of the heir seizes and sells it, the ancestor's creditor cannot reach it. So far as the Hindu Law is concerned, this principle is undoubted. It was thus stated in a very early case:

"We do not find nor can the pleader show us from any text of Hindu Law, that the property of a deceased person is so hypothecated for his debts, as to prevent his heir from disposing of it to a third party or to allow a creditor to follow it and take it out of the hands of a third party who has purchased in good faith and for valuable consideration. The creditor may hold the heir personally liable for the debt if he has alienated the property but he cannot, we think, follow the property." (*Unnopoorna Dassea v. Gunga Narain Paul*¹.)

Thus there is nothing to prevent a creditor of the son getting satisfaction out of the father's property which devolved on the son. Therefore questions have arisen both under S. 73, Civil Procedure Code and the law of insolvency in regard to the preferential claims of a father's creditor. Where there was a decree against a son as a legal representative of his father and also a decree obtained against the son personally by a creditor of his, our High Court took the view that the holders of both decrees are entitled to share rateably *Vadlamany Venkatesam v. Mangipudi Visvanathan*², though a different view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court, *Bhola Nath v. Maqbul-un-nissa*³. In *Gade Lakshmi Narasimham v. Pillalamarri Jagannadha Rao*⁴, under the law of insolvency Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., took the view that a father's creditor must only share rateably with a creditor of the son. But a different view was taken in *Shankar Lal v. Muhammad Ismail*⁵, where an ancestor's creditor was held to have priority over the creditor of the heir. Mr. Rajah Aiyar laid considerable emphasis on the later decision. In that case the parties were governed by Muhammadan Law and the learned Judges took the view that under that law a creditor of a deceased Muhammadan has a general charge upon the assets left by the deceased and that it partakes of the nature of an equitable lien, so that in effect he becomes a secured creditor in the insolvency of the heir. How far this view is tenable under the Muhammadan Law is open to doubt, but at any rate it is not the Hindu Law. Even with reference to Muhammadan Law our High Court has adopted the view that no such charge exists and that the creditor of the deceased is not a secured creditor but must share rateably along with the creditors of the heir. (Vide the observations of Odgers and Madhavan Nair, JJ., in *Nainar Rowthen v. Kuppai Pichai Rowthen*¹.) The learned Judges followed the decision of Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., decided with reference to the Hindu Law and reported in *Gade Lakshmi Narasimham v. Pillalamarri Jagannadha Row*². In that case a creditor of a Hindu father obtained a decree against his sons for an amount payable by them from and out of the assets of the father in their hands. Before any proceedings were taken to realise the money, the sons became insolvents and the entire property owned by them including the property which once belonged to their father vested in the Official Receiver. Subsequently the creditor who had obtained the decree wanted to attach the said property in the hands of the Official Receiver. It was contended on the creditor's behalf that he being a creditor of the father was entitled to attach and sell the property and that the son's insolvency could not affect him. Dealing with this contention the learned Judges remarked:

"The property of a deceased Hindu is not so hypothecated for his debt as to prevent his heir disposing of it or to allow a creditor to follow it in the hands of a third party. There is therefore no question of respondent's right to a lien or charge on Balarama Doss's (the ancestor) property in the first and seventh defendants' (the sons) hands or in those of the Official Receiver who derived it from them—Balarama Doss's estates must accordingly be treated as having vested in the Official Receiver like the first and seventh defendants' other assets and as being immune from execution proceedings under S. 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, respondents being left to prove their debts like other unsecured creditors," that is, just like any other unsecured creditor of the sons. The view is, as we shall presently show, in strict accordance with the provisions of the Insolvency Acts both Provincial and Presidency. This principle if adopted with reference to the separate property of the father devolving on his sons would apply with greater force to the joint family property which has devolved on the son by survivorship. Under the Mitakshara law by which the parties in this case are governed, the cardinal principle is that the ownership of the father and the son is equal in every item of joint family property possessed by them. The son has by birth an interest in the said property and he can deal with and dispose of it for value. On the death of the father his interest in the property becomes augmented, but the nature of the rights possessed by him as owner thereof remains unchanged. No doubt the interest of the son during his father's lifetime is liable to be dealt with by the father or seized by a father's creditor for the satisfaction of the father's debt because by virtue of his relationship the Hindu Law casts upon the son a pious obligation to discharge his father's debts but it is not a personal liability and is only incidental to the property. So long as such property remains in the hands of the son, the same obligation continues even after the death of the father. The son who was owner of an undivided share during the lifetime of his father becomes on the latter's death the sole owner of the whole and not merely of the net residue of the property after deduction of the debts as in the case of inherited property. There can be therefore no question that the property is the individual property of the son and a creditor of his can seek satisfaction of the debt from the entire property possessed by the son, that is, his interest in the joint family property after it has been augmented by the death of the father. If such a creditor therefore in execution of a decree seized that property and got it sold, the alienee would get a complete title and it would not be open to any creditor of the father to come and say that the alienee is liable to pay his debt. It cannot be contended that there is any charge on the joint family property for the father's debt in the sense that it is hypothecated for the debt so as to make a father's creditor a secured creditor. The pious obligation does not fasten any such charge on the property so that he who takes the property takes it subject to that charge. It is one thing to say that a son is under an obligation to discharge the debt; it is quite another to assert that the property is charged in the sense that it is hypothecated for the debt. Where after the father's death the son becomes the sole owner of the property and the creditor becomes entitled to get satisfaction from it, it seems to us on principle that no distinction can be drawn between a father's creditor and a son's creditor. It is sufficient for our present purposes to note that neither during the father's lifetime nor after his death the son's interest in the joint family property can be said to be charged for the father's debt. Mr. Rajah Aiyar relied upon certain authorities for the position that the father's debts constitute a charge upon the inheritance and relied on the following passage in Mayne's

Hindu Law :

"A father's debts are a first charge upon the inheritance and must be paid in full before there can be any surplus for the division" (Para. 339.)

He also relied upon the decision in *Venku Reddi v. Venku Reddi*¹, for the position that before partition can be effected the father's debts must be provided for and only the residue after making such provision can be divided. But neither the passage in Mayne's Hindu Law, nor the decision in *Venku Reddi v. Venku Reddi*¹ supports the contention of Mr. Rajah Aiyar. It is no doubt true that before a partition of joint family property can be effected, the obligations imposed by law on all the members must be provided for and one of such obligations relates to the father's debts. The theory is that if it were not so done the father would continue to be a debtor and it is incumbent upon the sons to see that he does not and thus save his soul from unhappiness in the next world. This is what Narada says :

"What remains of the paternal estate after paying off the debts of the father shall be divided among the brothers. Otherwise the father continues a debtor." (Vyavasta Chandrika, Vol. 1, p. 238.)

It is in this sense of obligation that the word 'charge' is used in the passage in Mayne's Hindu Law and not in the sense of the properties being hypothecated for the debt. It is one thing to say that before partition the debts of the father shall be provided for and it is another thing to say that when the son becomes the sole owner on the father's death entitled to dispose of the property as his own, there is any restriction imposed on his powers for disposing it for his own debts though he is equally under an obligation to satisfy the demand of his father's creditors. Again the obligation imposed by the Hindu Law being incidental to the property so long as the property remains in the hands of the son the property cannot escape liability, whether there is a charge or no. But once the property has been alienated to a bona fide alienee, the obligation cannot be pursued against the property. It seems to us that the same principle would apply where the son is divested of his ownership therein by operation of law. Bankruptcy is an involuntary alienation and by the provisions of the insolvency law there is a statutory conveyance or alienation of the said property in favour of the Official Assignee in trust for the creditors for distribution among them according to the provisions of the said law. Having regard to these principles the question of priority has to be viewed. Under S. 52 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act all property as may belong to or be vested in the insolvent at the commencement of the insolvency will vest in the Official Assignee. The principle is the same under the Provincial Insolvency Act and under the English Law. It cannot be denied that the separate property of the father devolving on the son and the joint family property owned by the son at the date of the insolvency, which has been augmented by the father's share devolving upon the son by survivorship on account of the father's death before the date of the insolvency, will be property which belonged to the insolvent. But once that property vests in the Official Assignee, it would have to be governed by the provisions of the Insolvency law. One of the provisions of that law is S. 49 (5) which provides that subject to the provisions of the Act all debts proved in insolvency shall be paid rateably according to the amounts of such debts respectively and without any preference. Of course under S. 49 certain unsecured debts have to be paid in priority and it is in respect of them that a preference is accorded by the Act. The insolvency law is a special law having for its object the distribution of the insolvent's available assets among his creditors pro rata. The father's debt is not one to which a right of priority is given by the Act. The Official Assignee can only administer the assets and distribute them in accordance with the provisions of the Act. If a father's creditor chooses to prove in the insolvency of the son as a provable debt of the son, he must submit himself to the provisions of the Act which does not recognise any priority in his favour. In a recent decision reported in *Thimmiah v. Official Receiver, Bellary*¹, our learned brother Abdur Rahman, J., took this view and held that the unrealised debts of the father and the debts of the son stood on the same footing and that a father's creditor would not get priority over the son's creditor. In the course of the judgment the learned Judge observed thus:

"If one looks to the provisions contained in S. 61 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, it would be found to provide in sub-cl. 5 that all debts entered in the schedule have to be paid rateably according to the amount of such debts without any preference except to those which have been otherwise specified by the Provincial Insolvency Act. . . . The learned counsel for the petitioner has not been able to point to any provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act under which he could claim priority for the debt in question and so far as proceedings in insolvency are concerned, the petitioner, as provided in sub-cl. 5, share rateably without any preference. It is obviously the policy of the insolvency law to distribute the estate among the creditors fairly and unless a preference was given by the Act to any particular debt, it must necessarily be held to fall within the sub-clause and no priority can legitimately be claimed in regard to the same. Viewed in the light of this section the unrealised simple debts of the father and that of the son would stand on the same footing."

If we may say so with respect we think that this view is sound. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in *Shankar Lal v. Muhammad Ismail*¹, on which Mr. Rajah Aiyar relied would seem to support their decision as to priority on S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. We are unable to understand how it can be done because that section itself says "subject to the provisions of this Act." S. 49 is one such provision. So long as a debt is not a charge upon a particular property and the obligation to pay the debt out of a particular property is imposed on the owner personally, an obligation which is not transmissible to his alienee except when the alienation is not in good faith, it cannot be said that the Official Assignee who is a statutory alienee of the property can be bound by any such obligation. Such priority if any must be deemed to have been abrogated by the provisions of the Insolvency Act. We are therefore of opinion that the contention of Mr. Rajah Aiyar that his client must be paid in preference to the creditors of the sons must be overruled.

The next question relates to the contention raised by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar that an account should be directed in regard to the question of separate assets and joint family properties available to satisfy the claim of the said Chokkalingam Chetti. Though this question was argued before our learned brother Wadsworth, J., it was not raised in any of the reports of the Official Assignee, nor did he allege and prove the facts to enable the Court to pronounce an opinion thereon. We therefore do not propose to go into it. Further, in the view we have taken of the scope of the compromise decree and Chokkalingam Chetti's right to priority, this question does not arise.

1. A.I.R. 1930 All. 552.

There remains only the question relating to interest. The contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar on behalf of the Official Assignee is that from the date of the insolvency of the sons the claimant is not entitled to claim any interest. It is conceded by Mr. Rajah Aiyar that if the provisions of the Insolvency Act were to be applied, his client would not be entitled to interest. But what Mr. Rajah Aiyar says is that under the compromise it was stipulated that his client should get the balance of the amount under the decree in the Colombo District Court after giving credit to the amounts received by him in the Jaffna Court and therefore it was agreed that he should get interest on the decree amount. We are not inclined to agree with him in this contention. As we have already remarked, what was agreed to by the Official Assignee was that Mr. Rajah Aiyar's client could prove his claim before him. The amount payable in respect thereof must be subject to the provisions of the Insolvency law by which the Official Assignee is governed and it is not open to him to disregard the provisions of the Act and consent to anything which is contrary to the Act. We must therefore hold that interest on the claimant's debt will cease from the date of the adjudication of the sons.

In the result, we confirm the decree of our learned brother Wadsworth, J., subject to the modification as to interest as declared above and dismiss both the appeals with costs.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the decree passed by us in O. S. A. No. 68 of 1937. This appeal was preferred by the petitioner against the decision of our learned brother Wadsworth, J., disallowing the claim to priority of the petitioner in regard to the amount claimed by him. We affirmed the decision of our learned brother Wadsworth, J., and dismissed the appeal. The decree passed by us is a decree of affirmance within the meaning of S. 110, cl. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is contended by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar that there is one decree issued in this case and, when leave to appeal is granted in regard to the question of interest, his client is entitled as a matter of right to leave to appeal also in regard to the question of priority, because the claim is one composite claim and the decree is one decree. We are not inclined to agree with this contention. Though one decree was issued in this case, it is in essence a document which embodies two decrees. Against the decision of our learned brother Wadsworth, J., two appeals were preferred, one by the Official Assignee in so far as the decision went against him and the other by the petitioner herein in so far as the decision went against him. Therefore, in effect, we passed two decrees.

In *Ramanathan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti*¹, the question which we have now to decide arose for consideration. In that case an appeal and the memorandum of objections were preferred against the decree of the lower Court and the High Court passed one decree by which the appeal was dismissed and the memorandum of objections was partly allowed. The question was whether the appellant in that case was entitled to leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the memorandum of objections was partly allowed and, as one decree was issued in the case, it must be taken that there was a modification of the decree as a whole and that it was not a decree of affirmance. This contention was negatived. In dealing with this contention, Phillips, J., observes on page 297:—

"Does the mere fact of an order on the memorandum of objections modifying the decree of the lower Court give the plaintiff the right to reopen the whole of the case? It was held in *Chiranji Lal v. Behari Lal*², that when there had been two cross appeals against the decree of the Court of first instance and one cross appeal had been allowed and the other dismissed, there was no right of appeal against the decree dismissing the appeal, whereas an appeal lay against the decree allowing the appeal. The Court proceeded on the view that in cross appeals the decree in each was a separate one. . . . In effect there are two orders of this Court, one dismissing the appeal and affirming the decree of the lower Court and the other allowing the memorandum of objections or cross appeal and modifying the decree of the lower Court. So far, then, as the decree affirming the decree of the lower Court is concerned, no appeal would lie to the Privy Council."

We entirely concur in this view because it is in consonance with the plain language of S. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. Reliance was placed by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar on the decision in *Venkitaswami Chettiar v. Sekkutti Pillai*³, but that decision does not help him. On the other hand we find the following observation of Venkatasubba Rao, J., on page 583 which is not in his favour:

"As a question of construction, we fail to see why, when there are several decisions in respect of several subject-matters, the decree embodying those decisions should, by some fiction, be regarded as one and entire."

Again, reliance was placed by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar on the decision in *Perichiappa Chettiar v. Nachiappan*¹ of Reilly and Anantakrishna Aiyar, JJ. That decision gave a very wide interpretation to the decision of the Privy Council in *Annapurna Bai v. Rup Rao*²; but that decision, if we may say so with respect, was rightly dissented from in *Venkitaswami Chettiar v. Sekkutti Pillai*³.

Lastly Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar submitted that, even if we take the view that the decree is one of affirmance, leave may be granted on the ground that there is a substantial question of law involved in the appeal. It will be seen from a perusal of our judgment that we came to a decision on a question of fact, namely, that under the compromise entered into with the Official Assignee by the petitioner, the petitioner is entitled only to a pro rata distribution whatever be the nature of the assets held by the Official Assignee, whether the assets be taken to be those of the father or those of the son. That was enough to dispose of the appeal; but, as the question of law, namely, that apart from the compromise the petitioner is entitled to claim priority, was also argued, we proceeded to deal with it. We therefore cannot say that a substantial question of law is involved in the appeal in order to enable us to exercise our discretion and grant leave under S. 110.

We therefore see no reason to grant leave to appeal in this case and the application is therefore dismissed with costs of the respondent, which we fix at Rs. 100.

Where, towards a promissory note, an open payment is made in August, 1937, towards the debt generally and it had not been appropriated by the debtor or creditor towards principal or interest, the creditor is not entitled, after the debtor has sought relief under the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act to treat the payment as appropriated towards interest. The payment is to be appropriated towards principal.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wadsworth, J.—This petition raises a question regarding the working of S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. The petitioners were some of the defendants in the suit on a promissory note for Rs. 1,900. This note was dated the 20th April, 1935 and it renewed an earlier note which was admittedly executed on 19th April, 1926, for a sum of Rs. 1,000, though this earlier note has not been exhibited. On 2nd August, 1937, a payment of Rs. 1,000 was endorsed "towards this promissory note in the matter of the sale of a house." The lower Court has held that this payment was made towards the promissory note generally, that is, towards the entire amount due including principal and interest and he has rejected the plea of actual appropriation. The petitioners are admittedly agriculturists and the lower Court has scaled down the debt by the simple process of treating the debt as one borrowed on the earlier date 19th April, 1926, doubling the original principal, subtracting the admitted payments amounting to Rs. 1,005 and giving a decree for the balance of Rs. 995 as on 1st October, 1937, with interest as from that date at 6½ per cent. under S. 12 of the Act. That is, to say the learned District Munsif has ignored cl. (1) of S. 8 and has scaled down the debt on the basis that cl. (3) of that section provides a minimum rather than a maximum which the creditor may claim. It seems to us that the method adopted by the lower Court of scaling down this debt cannot be justified. It is, however, by no means easy to lay down what is the correct way of applying this difficult section.

It is contended for the respondent that the payment on 2nd August, 1937, must be deemed to have been appropriated in the manner most favourable to the creditor and that the scaling down process must be applied only after making such an appropriation. We do not think that this contention can be upheld. Granting that when the Court is adjusting accounts between debtor and creditor, the ordinary rule is that unappropriated payments are first to be applied towards interest; this is more a rule for the guidance of the Court than a presumption of law regarding what has in fact been done. In dealing with the subject of appropriation as affecting S. 20 of the Limitation Act, the Privy Council in a recent case *Rama Shah v. Lal Chand*¹ had occasion to consider whether, when there is an open payment towards a debt, a mere notional appropriation, such as is contemplated in the rule just referred to, can take the place of an actual appropriation for the purpose of saving limitation and their Lordships held that it could not. It seems to us that the same principle applies in dealing with the present facts. Here we have an open payment of Rs. 1,000 made towards the debt generally, but not appropriated by the debtor or creditor towards principal or interest. We do not consider that the creditor should be entitled, after the debtor has sought relief under Act IV of 1938, to treat this payment as having been theoretically appropriated towards interest when in fact it was not appropriated at all. We must therefore regard the debt as one in which there has been a payment, but that payment has not been appropriated either to principal or interest. Our attention has been drawn to a decision of Horwill, J., reported in *Narayana-swamy Naidu v. Rajamanickam Pillai*², where the learned Judge drew a presumption that a similar payment not expressly appropriated was at once applied in the reduction of the debt for interest. We doubt whether such theoretical appropriation can properly be postulated in order to nullify the effect of S. 8 (1) of the Act. Although there must have been an intention in due course to adjust the lump sum payment against the outstanding dues for interest and principal until such adjustment has in fact been made, it cannot in our opinion be said that there is no interest outstanding so as to bring into effect S. 8, cl. 1.

2. (1940) 1 M.L.J. 225: 51 L.W. 237.

Now on this basis we have to see what is the actual result. With reference to the proviso to S. 9 (1), the promissory note of 1935 must be deemed to be a debt contracted in 1926 and must be dealt with under the provisions of S. 8, that is to say, all interest outstanding on the 1st October, 1937 must be cancelled. If the interest is so cancelled, the unappropriated payment of Rs. 1,000 made on 2nd August, 1937, is sufficient to discharge the debt in full. The revision petition is therefore allowed with costs and the debt will be scaled down in the manner indicated with the result that the plaintiff's suit will be dismissed with costs.

A purchaser of a hypotheca executed a promissory note to the mortgagee for the balance due under the mortgage. The mortgagor obtained a decree on the promissory note against the maker and his sons as members of a joint family. In an application by the son for scaling down the decree, Held, when a member of a joint family executes a fresh document for a pre-existing liability binding on the family, but incurred on its behalf by another member such previous debt can be regarded as renewed or included in a fresh document within the meaning of the explanation to S. 8 of the Act as the debtor in each case is the same person, namely, the joint family.

The liability to the plaintiff which the applicant seeks to scale down is not a liability in respect of which a charge is provided under S. 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act. Wadsworth, J.—This Civil Revision Petition raises questions arising out of the explanation to S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. The petitioner was the third defendant in a suit on a promissory note and he applied to scale down the decree under S. 19. The promissory note relates back to a mortgage of 1922 executed by one Samiappa in favour of Pakkiri for a sum of Rs. 500. In 1929 Pakkiri assigned the mortgage to the plaintiff. Before this assignment, a payment of Rs. 250 had been made towards the mortgage. On 25th August, 1930, the first defendant, father of defendants 2 and 3, purchased the land covered by the mortgage from the sons of Samiappa and agreed to pay Rs. 755 in discharge of the mortgage. On 21st March, 1934, the first defendant paid Rs. 830 towards the mortgage and on the same date he and his son the second defendant executed a promissory note for Rs. 150 in favour of the mortgagee and the mortgage was thereby discharged. The plaintiff sued on the promissory note alleging that it was a family debt binding on all the coparceners and impleading the third defendant as a coparcener. On this basis he got a decree on 28th September, 1936. The third defendant applied under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938 to scale down the debt on the basis that the promissory note was in effect a renewal of the mortgage executed by Samiappa. The trial Court held that it was not a renewal and it is this decision which is now under consideration.

Now in view of our decision in *Neelappa Reddiar v. Solaimuthu Udayan*¹ approving the decision of Somayya, J., in Ramaswami Chettiar, In re², we must hold that the explanation to S. 8 contemplates the renewal of a debt or its inclusion in a fresh document by the same debtor. But it does not necessarily follow that the parties to the first debt and the second debt must be absolutely identical. There may be cases in which a debt due jointly and severally from A and B is included in a fresh document executed by A alone or cases in which a debt due solely by A is included in a fresh document executed by A and B. But we are not really concerned in the present case with either of these cases. In so far as there is a mortgage by Samiappa discharged by a promissory note executed by the first and second defendants it cannot be said that the promissory note is a renewal of the mortgage or an inclusion of the amount of that debt in a fresh document. But this does not dispose of the question. When the first defendant who must be deemed in view of the decree to have been acting as manager of the joint family, purchased this land and undertook to discharge the mortgage on it, although there was no obligation to the creditor which the creditor could directly enforce by suing for the money from the first defendant, there was a liability towards that creditor which the creditor could enforce indirectly by suing on his mortgage for the sale of the hypotheca which the first defendant had purchased and this liability is a debt within the meaning of Madras Act IV of 1938. So much follows from the decision of Varadachariar and Abdur Rahman, JJ., in *Perianna v. Sellappa*¹. It also seems to follow from that decision that the liability of the purchaser being traceable to the original mortgage must be scaled down with reference to the date of the mortgage. On the basis of this decision we must hold that when the first and second defendants executed the suit promissory note they were in fact renewing a pre-existing liability which bound the family; or at all events, having regard to the strict definition of the term 'renewal' in *Barber v. Macknell*², they were including this pre-existing liability in a fresh document binding on the same debtor. It seems to follow therefore that the third defendant who is under S. 19 entitled to scale down the joint family debt embodied in the decree can ask that this debt be treated as a renewal of the pre-existing liability which dates back to the mortgage of Samiappa.

1. (1940) 2 M.L.J. 517.

2. (1939) 2 M.L.J. 609.

It has, however, been contended that the liability in question is one in respect of which a charge is provided under S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act and that therefore it cannot be scaled down, having regard to the provisions of S. 10 (2) (ii) of Madras Act IV of 1938. It seems to us that this argument involves a certain confusion of ideas. There cannot be a liability except it be due to a person. When we speak of 'the same liability' we must necessarily mean the liability to the same person. It is true that the liability to the plaintiff under the promissory note was co-extensive with the outstanding liability of the first defendant to his vendor, in respect of which it might be contended the vendor's lien existed. But it was not identical with that liability. The liability to A may be measured by the extent of the liability to B, but when the two liabilities are due to different persons they are not, the same liability. It seems to follow that the liability to the plaintiff which the applicant seeks to scale down is not a liability in respect of which a charge is provided under S. 55 (4).

It has also been contended that S. 4 (f) applies; but we are unable to see how, assuming that this liability had its origin in a trust, there has been any breach of trust.

In the result therefore we are of the opinion that the decision of the lower Court is erroneous and that the third defendant is entitled to scale down the decree on the basis that the promissory note is a renewal of a pre-existing liability which dates back to the original mortgage. The effect of the payment of Rs. 250, made by the original mortgagor, on the questions arising under S. 8 (2) and (3) will depend on the answer to the question whether the original mortgagor was or was not an agriculturist. If he was an agriculturist this payment will have to be taken into account in calculating the amount paid towards the debt.

The revision petition is allowed with costs. The application is remitted to the trial Court which will scale down the debt in the light of this judgment.

In his plaint filed before 1st October, 1937, the plaintiff appropriated payments by his debtor, towards interest.

Held, these appropriations cannot be ignored for the purpose of S. 8 (1) of the Act, and scaling down must be on the basis of the amount claimed in the plaint as principal.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff having appropriated all the payments towards interest in his plaint which was filed before 1st October, 1937, these appropriations cannot be ignored for the purpose of S. 8 (1). The most favourable way of scaling down the debt is to adopt the reduced principal of Rupees One hundred and seventy-one, annas two and pies six (Rs. 171-2-6) arrived at according to the plaint, cancel the interest remaining as on 1st October, 1937 and credit to the debt the balance of the part decree payment of Rupees Fifty-four, annas three and pies nine (Rs. 54-3-9) minus Rupees Forty and annas eight (Rs. 40-8-0) due for costs and give to the plaintiff a decree for the balance with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from 1st October, 1937. The petition is allowed with costs and the decree will be scaled down accordingly.

The plaintiff's case was that irrigation works in his occupation situate within the Hyderabad state received their customary supply of water from the overflow of tanks belonging to the defendant situate in British India. The suit was for a series of injunctions restraining the defendant from carrying out projected works, which it was alleged, will endanger the customary flow of water to the plaintiff's tank.

Held, (1) a suit to establish a right of easement can be maintained by the occupier of the dominant tenement and no question as to the nature of the plaintiff's title in the estate which he occupies arises.

(2) If the right of easement is established by the evidence, there is no legal impediment which has to be removed before the injunction protecting that right will be granted; and whether the plaintiff has or has not sued for a declaration, it is not necessary for him to pay court-fee on the footing that the finding which he seeks as to his title is really a declaration necessarily required as a preliminary to the grant of the injunction. The plaintiff falls under S. 7 (iv) (d) of the Court-Fees Act and the plaintiff is entitled to place his own valuation on the injunctions which he seeks and however inadequate it may be the Court has no jurisdiction to revise that valuation.

(3) The suit being one for injunctions against the defendant residing in British India, to protect a right of easement which though appurtenant to property in Hyderabad, had a local existence only in British India is cognizable by the British Indian Court.

(4) The easement in question being localised in British India must be determined according to the law of British India.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition arises out of an order giving findings on three preliminary issues in a suit for an injunction restraining the defendant from doing certain acts with reference to his tanks over which the plaintiff claims a right of easement. The three issues are as follows:

"1. Whether the suit claim is not cognizable and triable by the municipal Courts and whether the same is determinable only by treaty between the British Government and H. E. H. the Nizam's Government.

2. Whether any cause of action arose within the territorial jurisdiction of this Court and whether this Court has jurisdiction.

3. Whether the reliefs are properly valued for purposes of jurisdiction and has this Court pecuniary jurisdiction to try this suit."

In order to determine these issues, it is necessary first to have a clear idea of the true nature of the plaint. The plaint as originally framed sought an injunction restraining the defendant from diverting the water flowing out of his tanks and from increasing the full tank level of those tanks, an injunction restraining him from diverting water to a newly dug channel, an injunction restraining him from closing the surplus weirs and diverting the water through a new canal into another tank and lastly a fixation of the full tank levels and the levels of the weirs of a number of the defendant's tanks. There was a long-fought battle on the court-fee question as affecting the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court in which the suit was filed. After the case had come up twice to this Court in revision, it was finally decided by the order of Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J., in C. R. P. No. 1318 of 1937 that the last prayer relating to the fixation of the levels had been properly deleted from the plaint and that the District Munsif would have to consider the question of jurisdiction on the footing of the plaint as thus amended.

It seems to me that this finally decides the question regarding the necessity for valuing the suit on the basis of the averments in the plaint as to the necessity for fixing the levels of the defendant's tanks. It is, however, contended for the first time in this Court that though the plaintiff has not prayed for a declaration of his right of easement, the suit is in substance one for a declaration and injunction and should be valued under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act and not under S. 7 (iv) (d) and it is desirable to decide this contention in the first instance. For, if S. 7 (iv) (c) applies and a declaration is in substance and of necessity sought, the case would undoubtedly fall outside the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court, for the easements claimed operate over a large number of tanks and the injunctions sought will, according to the averments in the plaint, affect the income of the defendant to the extent of thousands of rupees annually, whereas the refusal of the injunction would have a proportionately adverse effect on the income of the plaintiff. Moreover, the decision of the question regarding the necessity for a declaration of the plaintiff's right has a material bearing on the first issue regarding the jurisdiction of the British Indian Court to try the suit.

I may observe that the anxiety of the plaintiff to pay the minimum court-fee on this suit has led to much avoidable litigation and has involved both parties in a great deal of entirely unnecessary expense. Such short-sighted parsimony is very ill-advised. The position is now complicated owing to the existence of a temporary injunction which would cease to operate if the plaint were returned for presentation to a Court of higher jurisdiction, so that the question of the frame of the suit is no longer one merely of court-fees and may have an important bearing on the practical position of the parties to the suit.

The plaintiff's case is that irrigation works in his occupation, situate within the Hyderabad State, receive their customary supply of water from the overflow of tanks belonging to the defendant and situate in British India and that the plaintiff has a right to require that the defendant should do nothing to the tanks in his possession which will adversely affect the customary flow of water to the tanks of the plaintiff. Consequently, he demands a series of injunctions restraining the defendant from carrying out projected works which, it is alleged, will endanger the customary flow of water to the plaintiff's tanks. Now, it is not disputed that the plaintiff is the occupier of this estate in which the tanks which form the dominant tenement are situate. It is true that the defendant has put in issue the nature of the plaintiff's title to this estate. But seeing that a suit to establish a right of easement can be maintained by the occupier of the dominant tenement, it is difficult to see how any question as to the nature of the plaintiff's title in the estate which he occupies really arises. It is however necessary to determine whether rights of easements such as are claimed do exist in favour of the plaintiff's estate and the determination of these rights is undoubtedly a necessary preliminary to the grant or refusal of an injunction to protect those rights. The question is whether this determination of the plaintiff's rights is to be regarded merely as a finding on evidence forming the basis of the substantial relief of an injunction or whether it is to be regarded as an essential relief which is sought in this suit. Now it is well established that in matters of court-fee and pecuniary jurisdiction, one must look to the real substance of the suit and not the form in which it has been clothed. If, therefore, there is any legal necessity for the plaintiff to get a declaration of his right of easement before he can get an injunction to protect it, the suit would have to be filed under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act, even though he has sought this declaration by means of averments in the body of the plaint and not by praying for a declaration specifically amongst the reliefs at the end of the plaint. On this part of the case the safe rule is that when there is some legal obstacle which has to be removed before a consequential relief can be granted, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to pray for a declaration which will have the effect of removing that obstacle. But if the plaintiff merely avers a title which can be established without the cancellation of a document or the nullification of any adverse title and only claims the relief which would naturally flow from the establishment of the title which he avers, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to pray expressly for a declaration of that title. So much seems to me to follow from the decisions of the Privy Council in *Bijoy Gopal Mukherjee v. Krishna Mahishi Deb*¹ and of the Full Bench of this Court in *Ramasami Aiyangar v. Rangachariar*². It is true that the first of these decisions related to a question of limitation, but the principle on which the decision is based applies equally, to my mind, to a question of court-fee. The decision of the Full Bench just quoted related to a suit by a minor challenging alienations in seeking possession. The question raised was expressly one of court-fee and I find it difficult to distinguish this case merely on the ground that the substantial relief is one for possession and not one for an injunction. A similar case is reported in *Maung Shein v. Ma Lon Fon*³. It is not necessary for me to decide what would be the position if the plaintiff had in fact prayed for a declaration as well as for an injunction, as is the case in *Venkatakrishna Pathar, In re*⁴, where Jackson, J., held that the suit fell under S. 7 (iv) (c) and that the subject-matter was not the land but the value of the easement. It seems to me that on the frame of the present suit, all that the plaintiff has to do is to prove by evidence that he has a subsisting right of easement to the extent and of the nature claimed. If the evidence establishes the existence of this right, there is no legal impediment which has to be removed before the injunction protecting that right will be granted; and whether he has or has not sued for declaration, it is not necessary for him to pay court-fee on the footing that the finding which he seeks as to his title is really a declaration, necessarily required as a preliminary to the grant of the injunction. It follows that the plaint as now amended falls only under S. 7 (iv) (d) of the Court-Fees Act and that the plaintiff is entitled to place his own valuation on the injunctions which he seeks. No doubt the valuation which he has placed upon these injunctions is palpably inadequate, but the Court has no power to revise that valuation. It follows therefore that the suit is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsif.

The more difficult question is whether having regard to the fact that the suit seeks to protect an easement alleged to exist in favour of land situate outside the limits of British India, the British Court has jurisdiction to try the suit. This is a question on which in spite of the elaborate researches of learned Counsel on both sides, no British or Indian authority has been discovered. There are American decisions to which I shall refer. But so far as British Courts are concerned, one is taken back to the general principles enunciated in the text books, together with such light as may be derived from somewhat analogous decisions. Dicey in his 'Conflict of Laws', Fifth Edition, lays down, as his third general principle that the Courts of any country have jurisdiction over any matter with regard to which they can give an effective judgment and have no jurisdiction over any matter with regard to which they cannot give an effective judgment. R. 53 at page 203 prescribes that subject to certain exceptions, the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an action for the determination of the title to or the right to the possession of any immovable situate out of England or the recovery of damages for trespass to such immovable. The exception states that where the Court has jurisdiction to entertain an action against a person under either r. 59 or under any of the exceptions to r. 60, the Court has jurisdiction to entertain an action against such person respecting an immovable situate out of England on the ground of either—

(a) a contract between the parties to the action; or

(b) an equity between such parties with reference to such immovable. R. 59 states that when the defendant in an action in personam is, at the time for the service of the writ, in England, the Court has jurisdiction in respect of any cause of action, in whatever country such cause of action arises. Under r. 60, when the defendant in an action in personam is, at the time for the service of the writ, not in England, the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the action. Except for the fact that they are imported into r. 53, we are not concerned with the exceptions to r. 60, for here we are dealing with a suit against the defendant who is a resident within the jurisdiction of our Courts. But it is to be remembered that one of the exceptions to r. 60 gives the English Courts jurisdiction even over a non-resident defendant when any injunction is sought as to anything to be done in England or any nuisance in England is sought to be prevented or removed. This is a clear indication that jurisdiction in respect of injunctions resides in the Court of the country in which the injunction is to operate.

Now, in the present suit, it is necessary to determine the title to an easement operating over land in British India, but appurtenant to land in Hyderabad State. In one aspect of the matter, it may be said that the right of easement forms part of the title to the land in Hyderabad. But in reality that which has to be determined is not the existence of any right in Hyderabad but the existence of a right in British India attached to another right situate elsewhere. It seems to me quite clear that the Hyderabad Court according to the principle enunciated by Dicey could not entertain the suit for the issue of an injunction in respect of a right of easement over property in British India or grant a decree in respect of that right against a defendant residing in British India. Not only would a decree for such an injunction be futile and unenforceable but it would in fact be a decree for the protection of immovable property situate in another State.

It is however contended that even assuming that the Hyderabad Court has no jurisdiction over a suit such as the present, it does not follow that the British Court has jurisdiction and that this may well be a case of a conflict between sovereign rights such as can only be solved by international arbitration or treaty. Now in form, there is at present no conflict between the State of Hyderabad and the Province of Madras. We have to deal with a conflict of a private owner of land in Hyderabad claiming rights in favour of his land over other land situate in British India and belonging to a British Indian resident. The Governments of the two territories have so far not intervened. It seems to me unprofitable to consider in detail the cases which were cited before me on questions such as the right of an English Court to entertain a suit for damages for trespass upon real property in a foreign state or concerning the inability of an English Court to grant an injunction against a defendant residing in England for the protection of a foreign title. Here, we are in substance concerned with a suit for an injunction brought against a defendant residing in British India to protect a right of easement, which, though appurtenant to property in Hyderabad, has a local existence only in British India; and moreover the suit seeks an injunction the operation of which is only over property in British India and which affects the person of the defendant who resides in British India. It seems to me that in such circumstances, it being conceded that the plaintiff is the occupier of the Hyderabad land in favour of which the right of easement is claimed, the suit must be regarded essentially as one to establish a right to immovable property in British India and to protect that right by an injunction. A right of easement is itself immovable property. That right restricts the user of other immovable property and the mere fact that it operates in favour of land situate outside the jurisdiction should not, to my mind, on the principles enunciated by Dicey, prevent the Courts having jurisdiction over the property in respect of which an injunction is sought, from deciding whether or not that injunction is to be granted.

Even if this suit is to be regarded as one to establish a foreign title, I am of opinion that it would come within the exception to r. 53 in Dicey on the ground that it is a suit to establish the existence of an equity which the plaintiff has a right to demand as against the defendant. A right to an injunction is a right which forms part of the old Chancery jurisdiction. "Equity" is defined by Ashburner as 'a claim to the interposition of the Court of Chancery' and it is no less an equity because the aid of chancery is sought to protect a legal right.

It has been suggested that the British Courts cannot exercise jurisdiction over this suit because the determination of the plaintiff's right to an easement will necessarily involve the decision of a Hyderabad title subject to Hyderabad law. This seems to me to be an erroneous contention; for a right of easement is itself an immovable and all questions concerning property in immovables are decided according to the lex situs. The easement in question here is localised and it is localised in British India and the right to that easement must be determined according to the law of British India.

Questions relating to rights of easement operating in one State in favour of land in another State seems to be of more frequent occurrence in America than in most parts of the British Empire. Washburn on Easements, Fourth Edition at page 738 summarises the law as follows:—

“ If an action be for obstructing a water-course, it is local in its nature. * * * In respect to the jurisdiction which should take cognizance of this injury, the Court held that an injury to an easement by acts done in one State may be sued for in that State, though the principal estate be in another, as for obstructing a way in A, which is appurtenant to an estate in B. In this case, therefore, as the owner on the Connecticut side was injured by the act done by the other party on the Rhode Island side, the former may bring his action in Rhode Island for the injury thereby done. If, for instance, the owner on the Connecticut side instead of this were to obtain an injunction against the owner on the other side in the Courts of that state in respect to the canal by which he diverts the water, it would be inoperative and could not be enforced in Rhode Island, it being a proceeding quasi in rem. And it seems that one who is injured by such an act may have his action, either where the act is done, or the consequential injury is suffered, at his election.”

The learned author was dealing with a case in which there was a stream dividing two States and the owner of the land in one State diverted the water to the detriment of the owner of the land in another State situate lower down the stream. Thus in America, at any rate, the principle which I have endeavoured to set forth seems to have been recognised, namely, that an action may be maintained to prevent an injury to a right of easement operating in one State in favour of land situate in another State by proceeding in the Court having jurisdiction over the land upon which the right of easement operates. The same result is achieved by applying r. 53 in Dicey along with the exception to r. 60 relating to suits for an injunction.

In the result, therefore, I hold that the suit as framed is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsif and that it is one cognizable by a British Indian Court in respect of which the Court of the District Munsif has territorial jurisdiction. I also hold that the court-fee paid is correct. The revision petition is therefore dismissed with costs. In view of the time taken by the arguments in the case and the research Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 8, Explanation—Creditor—Meaning of—If includes a person beneficially entitled to the money.

For interest due on a mortgage of 1926 in favour of A, a promissory note was executed in favour of A's son B, on 12th April, 1932, and the debtor claimed that the promissory note debt representing interest on the earlier mortgage must be deemed to be wiped out by reason of the Explanation to S. 8 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act IV of 1938.

Held, that it can be scaled down only as a debt of 1932 and not as one of 1926 because the creditor under the mortgage and the creditor under the promissory note are different persons, as by virtue of Ss. 8 and 78 of the Negotiable Instruments Act the father could not be regarded as the creditor, though as between the family of A and the son B, the family may be beneficially entitled to the money and further by a decree having been passed in favour of B, neither A nor the family can be regarded as the decree-holder. Creditor for purposes of the Act does not include a person beneficially entitled to the amount.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Chidambaram dated 20th September, 1938 and made in I. A. No. 594 of 1938 in O. S. No. 775 of 1932.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—This Civil Revision Petition arises out of an application by the petitioner under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act to amend the decree in O. S. No. 775 of 1932 on the file of the lower Court by scaling it down in accordance with the provisions of that Act. The decree was passed on a promissory note for Rs. 2,350 executed in favour of the respondent on 12th April, 1932. The sum represented the interest due on an earlier mortgage for Rs. 10,000 executed by the petitioner in favour of the respondent's father on 1st September, 1926. The respondent applied for execution of the decree by attachment and sale of the mortgaged properties but the application was resisted by the petitioner on the ground that by virtue of O. 34, r. 14, Civil Procedure Code, the mortgaged property could not be brought to sale as the claim was one arising under the mortgage and the decree-holder must be deemed to be the mortgagee himself as the respondent obtained the decree as well as the promissory note on which it was based as a mere benamidar for his father for interest due on the mortgage. This dispute was carried to this Court in C. M. S. A. No. 59 of 1938 and was decided by King, J., in favour of the respondent in the decision reported in *Varadarajam Pillai v. Krishnamurthi Pillai*¹, where the learned Judge observed:

Patanjali
Sastri, J.

"It has been strenuously urged that both the mortgagee and the decree-holder are in essence the joint family consisting of the father and the son, and that therefore the mortgagee and the decree-holder are identical, and then it is argued that the son can be described as the mortgagee as he has some interest in the mortgage or that the father can be described as the decree-holder because it is found as a fact that the promissory note was really taken benami for him. It seems to me impossible to accept any of these propositions."

A Letters Patent Appeal (No. 100 of 1938) was preferred against this decision and it was dismissed on the ground that the decree based on the promissory note could not be regarded as having been obtained on a claim arising under the mortgage, the learned Judges expressing no opinion on the point decided by King, J. On these facts, the Court below held that it was not open to the petitioner herein to contend that the creditor under the promissory note or under the decree was not the respondent whose name appears as the payee on the note and the decree-holder on the decree, and that therefore the promissory note could not be regarded as a renewal in favour of the same creditor of the earlier liability to pay interest on the mortgage-debt. It accordingly amended the decree by awarding the interest only from 1st October, 1937, at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

Learned counsel for petitioner contended before us that neither the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act nor those of the Civil Procedure Code which precluded a debtor from showing that a person other than the one whose name appeared as payee or decree-holder was the real creditor were applicable to proceedings for scaling down debts under the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, that a person beneficially entitled to a debt was also a 'creditor' within the meaning of the latter Act and that there was nothing in its provisions to bar an enquiry as to who is the real creditor. The respondent on the other hand attempted to support the decision of the Court below on an alternative ground also, namely, that even if the creditor under the promissory note and the mortgage were to be regarded as the same person, the promissory note should be treated as a distinct debt in respect of which the sum of Rs. 2,350 should be regarded as the principal, and as the application to scale down related only to this debt, the interest alone payable under the note could be scaled down under S. 8 of the Act. We may state at once that this point is covered by our judgment in C. R. P. No. 1729 of 1938 and must be rejected for the reasons there indicated.

Turning to the petitioner's contention, we are of opinion that it is untenable. The debt in question having been incurred before the 1st October, 1932, it has to be scaled down in accordance with S. 8 of the Act. Under sub-S. (1) of that section, all interest outstanding on the 1st October, 1937, 'in favour of any creditor' of an agriculturist, has to be wiped out. This applies, of course, to the interest payable under the promissory note. But the petitioner also claims to be relieved from liability in respect of the sum of Rs. 2,350 for which the promissory note was given. It was said that the promissory note was but a renewal of the original liability to pay interest on the mortgage and the explanation to S. 8 applied. But was it a renewal 'in favour of the same creditor?' 'Creditor' is not defined in the Act except as including 'his heirs, legal representatives and assigns.' It has to be noted that it does not include persons beneficially entitled to the sum lent. 'Creditor' in the ordinary sense of the term signifies a person to whom money is due. The creditor under the mortgage is the respondent's father or the joint family of which he was the manager. But the creditor in respect of the promissory note, having regard to Ss. 8 and 78 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, is and can be only the respondent. The family or its manager could not sue to recover the amount due on the note even assuming that the respondent took it on behalf of the family (see *Subba Narayana Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹) and therefore could not be regarded as the creditor though, as between the family and the respondent, it may be beneficially entitled to the amount. This position has become still more emphasised by a decree having been passed in favour of the respondent. Under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, it is only the decree-holder or other persons specifically empowered in that behalf (for example under O. 21, r. 16 and r. 53) that can recover the decree amount by execution but not others although they may be beneficially interested in the amount. It is therefore difficult to see how the creditor under the mortgage and the promissory note can be said to be the same person.

Petitioner's learned Counsel placed reliance on the decision of Pandrang Row, J., in *Anandam v. Muthukumaraswami Mudali*² and of Stodart, J., in C. R. P. No. 963 of 1939 which no doubt lend support to his contention, but with all respect we are unable to agree with them. In the former case, the learned Judge laid stress on the words 'in a suit thereon' in Ss. 120 and 121 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and held that the special rule of exclusion or estoppel laid down therein operates only in suits on the negotiable instrument and should not be extended to applications by debtors to obtain relief under Act IV of 1938. In the first place, it is difficult to see what bearing Ss. 120 and 121 have on the point under consideration. They enact a rule of estoppel against denying the original validity of the instrument in the one case and the capacity of the payee to endorse in the other, and do not relate to the question who, is entitled to sue on the instrument and can thus be regarded as the creditor under it. The important and relevant provisions are those of Ss. 8 and 78 of that Act. The learned Judge does not explain why these provisions or the decision in *Subba Narayana Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹ should be ignored in determining who is a 'creditor' in an enquiry under the Agriculturists Relief Act. He observes:

"The object of the new Act was to give relief to agriculturist debtors and it did not matter for the purpose of granting that relief whether the original debt was incurred under a negotiable instrument or otherwise."

This is true, but is no justification, in our view, for ignoring the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act or those of the Civil Procedure Code in interpreting the term 'creditor' or 'the same creditor' in relation to a promissory note or a decree debt. In the case before Stodart, J., a mortgage was originally taken by an uncle in his own name in respect of moneys belonging to his minor nephew and it was renewed in favour of the nephew after the latter attained majority. The learned Judge thought that it was 'not unreasonable' to hold that the renewal was, in those circumstances, in favour of 'the same creditor'. This decision favours an extended interpretation of the term 'creditor' as including a person beneficially entitled to the amount lent, which is not warranted by the definition in S. 3.(v) of the Act. As we had occasion to point out in *Kotayya v. Venkata Punnayya*¹, the Act is designedly expropriatory in its effect and the scope of its provisions ought not be extended under the guise of what is sometimes called a benevolent construction.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs as purchasers of the equity of redemption of two mortgages dated 22nd June, 1914 and 12th November, 1918. The mortgage of 22nd June, 1914, is usufructuary and that of 12th November, 1918, is simple. The plaintiffs sued for redemption of the mortgages and for recovery of possession of the lands mortgaged thereunder. The right to redeem is not denied. The amount due and payable under the mortgages is not disputed. But the point in controversy between the parties is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover vacant possession of the lands or are only entitled to the melvaram interest therein. The contention of the defendants is that on the date of the mortgage in 1914 they were cultivating tenants in possession of the lands and had occupancy rights therein and that what was mortgaged was only the melvaram interest. The plaintiffs said in answer that under the terms of the mortgage what was mortgaged was the entire land and not merely the melvaram interest and that the tenants had no occupancy rights but were only tenants at will and that even assuming they had occupancy rights they were precluded from asserting such rights. So the substantial questions which fell to be decided were (1) whether the defendants had occupancy rights on the date of the usufructuary mortgage in 1914 and (2) assuming they had occupancy rights whether they are estopped from contending that they had such rights. The learned District Munsif of Parvatipur who tried the case was of the opinion that as the lands were dharmima inam lands and the defendants' father was a cultivating tenant on the date of the mortgage the defendants were entitled to occupancy rights and they were not estopped from resisting the plaintiffs' right to claim possession. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held against the defendants on both the points and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs as prayed for. It is against this decision that this second appeal has been preferred by the defendants. It seems to me that on both the points the view of the learned Judge is wrong.

Ex. IV (a) which is the deed of mortgage dated 22nd June, 1914, Ex. IV which is dated 12th November, 1918, and two other deeds of mortgage which were filed by the plaintiffs themselves (Exs. B and C) relating to the suit land describe the nature of the land as dharmilla inam. Ex. IV (a) clearly states that the land was under the cultivation of the defendants' father on that date; and as the learned Subordinate Judge observes it was conceded before him that the defendants were in possession as tenants on the date of the mortgage. The recitals are prima facie evidence as regards the nature of the tenure of the land and the learned District Munsif who came to the conclusion on those recitals that it was dharmilla inam land was perfectly warranted in doing so. What Mr. Jagannatha Das contends is that those recitals ought not to be taken as evidence against his clients because on the date of the document the executant (the plaintiffs' predecessor in title) was a minor and those recitals were made by the guardian and that an opportunity should be given to his clients for placing more evidence on record in regard to the nature of the tenure. The question whether the defendants had occupancy rights was specifically put in issue in issue 4. The plaintiffs themselves filed Ex. C which contain recitals as to the land being dharmilla inam and Exs. IV and IV (a) under which the mortgages were created describe the land as dharmilla inam. As I have already observed the recitals in the deeds would be prima facie evidence against the plaintiffs. The fact that the recitals were made by the guardian is not a reason for not taking them as prima facie evidence unless it can be shown that those recitals were made under a mistake or misapprehension of the nature of the tenure in regard to which the burden would certainly be on the plaintiffs. In the face of these recitals it was obviously the duty of the plaintiffs to have put before the Court other evidence to show that these recitals ought not to be acted upon. The absence of any such evidence coupled with the fact of long possession by the defendants certainly warrants the finding of the District Munsif. Once it is found that the land was dharmilla inam there can be no question of the defendants having occupancy rights as settled by a Full Bench of this Court in *Brahmayya v. Achiraju*¹ and affirmed by the Privy Council in *Narayanaraju v. Suryanarayudu*². This is not disputed by Mr. Jagannatha Das. I am therefore of the opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge ought not to have brushed aside the recitals in the documents and should have given effect to them. I set aside the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge and hold that the lands are dharmilla inam lands and that the defendants' father was entitled to occupancy rights on the dates of the mortgages in question.

The next question is whether the defendants are estopped from denying the right of the landlord to claim possession of the land. Mr. Jagannatha Das contends that under the deed of mortgage Ex. IV (a) the defendant's father undertook to deliver possession of the land at the end of the period stipulated for in the deed, that the mortgage proceeds on the footing that he had no occupancy right therein and that the plaintiff's predecessor in title was entitled to get possession of the land at the end of the term. There can be no doubt that on the date of the mortgage Ex. IV (a) neither the plaintiffs' predecessor in title nor the defendants' father was aware of their respective rights. The plaintiffs' predecessor in title thought that he was entitled to possession and the defendants' father thought that he had no occupancy right or at any rate was not conscious of it and he believed he was bound to deliver possession at the end of the term. The question is not what the plaintiffs' predecessor in title thought or what the defendants' father thought but if in law the tenant had occupancy right and he was under a statutory incapacity to enter into any contract to give up his occupancy right and if the landlord wants to claim possession of the land free of that right, would the tenant be estopped from denying the right of the landlord to claim possession? The policy of the Legislature as enacted in S. 187 of the Act is to protect the tenant against himself and prevent him from entering into any contract by which he can deprive himself of the protection afforded by the statute. S. 143 of the Estates Land Act or by adopting the procedure prescribed in S. 151 of the Act a tenant cannot be deprived of possession of land wherein he has occupancy right. The contention of Mr. Jagannatha Das is that S. 187 (g) would not be applicable to the case of a mortgage but must be strictly applied only to cases where the landlord seeks to eject the tenant from possession of the land. It seems to me that so to construe the section would make the provision illusory. The landlord and the tenant have only to resort to the device of having a mortgage executed by which at the end of a particular period the tenant undertakes to give up possession to render the statute futile. In this connection I would like to refer to the observations of Lindley, M. R., in *Bateman (Lady) v. Faber*¹, where the question was whether it was competent for a married woman who was entitled to property for her separate use without power of anticipation to get rid of the restraint even by telling an untruth. The observations are to this effect:

"A married woman cannot by hook or by crook—by any device, even by her own fraud (the cases go to that length)—deprive herself of the protection which the restraint on anticipation throws around her. About the policies of the law I will say nothing, but it has been sanctioned by the Married Women's Property Act."

I would apply the above principle to this case where the tenant acts in ignorance of his rights and hold that the defendants in this case are not estopped from denying the right of the plaintiffs to claim possession of the land.

I would therefore set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and restore that of the District Munsif with costs throughout.

Substantially the provisions of S. 72 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act are analogous to those of S. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the Insolvency Court should give notice to the insolvent before directing his prosecution and a decision directing the prosecution for the offence of obtaining credit without disclosing his bankruptcy is a decision against which the insolvent as the aggrieved party has a right of appeal similar to that provided by S. 476 of Criminal Procedure Code. The correctness of the dismissal of such an appeal by the District Judge can be canvassed in revision.

Pursingh v. Aladkhan, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 9, referred to.

Where the Court had declined to proceed with a prosecution under S. 72 owing to the absence of the person who laid the information and subsequent proceedings are taken when the Court had before it more materials no question of res judicata arises and if it is a mere question whether the order of the Court is wise or unwise it is not a matter that should be gone into in revision. Where a prosecution is launched and the appellate Court declines to stop it the discharge of the insolvent before the appeal was dismissed cannot make those proceedings void.

Petition under S. 75 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the District Court of Guntur dated 7th March, 1939 and made in C. M. A. No. 89 of 1938 preferred against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tenali, dated 7th July, 1938 and made in O. P. No. 4 of 1937.

JUDGMENT.—This Civil Revision Petition is preferred against a decision in appeal against an order directing the prosecution of an insolvent for an offence under S. 72 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

A preliminary objection was taken by the respondent on the ground that the appeal itself was incompetent. The objection is based on English decisions—vide *In re Marsden*¹ and Ex parte Brown: *In re Appleby*², where it is held that under the corresponding provisions of the English Bankruptcy Act, no notice should be given to the bankrupt before directing the trustee to prosecute for the offence of obtaining credit without disclosing the fact of bankruptcy and no right of appeal exists in favour of the person to be prosecuted. It seems to me that the above decisions throw very little light on the question which I have to decide. The provisions of the English Bankruptcy Act, though similar, are not identical with those of the Provincial Insolvency Act and the main reason which influenced the English Courts in denying a right of appeal or a right of notice to an insolvent are that the concession of such rights would be contrary to English criminal procedure and would imply that the person to be prosecuted had to state his defence and submit to decisions in appeal before his case was heard in the Criminal Court. It cannot be urged that such a procedure is foreign to criminal procedure in India. Substantially the provisions of S. 72 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act are analogous to those of S. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code and there is nothing unreasonable in supposing that the Insolvency Court should ordinarily give notice to the insolvent before directing his prosecution or in holding that the decision to prosecute is a decision against which the aggrieved party has a right of appeal similar to that provided by S. 476-B of the Criminal Procedure Code. I note that S. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act gives a right of appeal to a person aggrieved not merely by an order made but by a decision come to. When the Court decides to prosecute an insolvent for an offence under S. 72 of the Act, does it not make decision which aggrieves the person to be prosecuted? Whether the creditor who moves the Court to prosecute has a grievance is another matter. There is a Nagpur decision reported in *Pursingh v. Aladkhan*¹, to the effect that he has no right of appeal. But it is unnecessary for me to go into that question though it may be noted as a matter of interest that in the present case there had been a prior refusal to prosecute reversed on appeal at the instance of the creditor. However that may be, I hold that there was a right of appeal to the District Judge by the insolvent against the order of the Court directing his prosecution. It follows therefore that the correctness of the dismissal of the appeal by the District Judge can be canvassed in revision.

Two main grounds have been urged in revision. The first is that the application of the creditor is barred by res judicata by reason of the previous decision. On 6th September, 1935, the creditor moved the Court to prosecute the insolvent for obtaining credit without disclosing that he was an undischarged insolvent. The then Subordinate Judge refused to prosecute, directing the creditor first to establish the fact of his debt in a Civil Court. The creditor appealed to the District Judge. As I have indicated, it is doubtful whether such an appeal lay. Nevertheless, it was entertained and the District Judge took the reasonable view that the Subordinate Judge should himself have found out whether there was a prima facie case on the facts before refusing to order prosecution. The matter was therefore remanded to the Subordinate Judge who was directed to hold an enquiry into the facts. On the day when the enquiry should have been commenced, the creditor was absent and on the insolvent denying his indebtedness, the petition was dismissed. An application for restoration was made by the creditor but was rejected with an observation that perhaps it is open to the creditor to file a fresh petition. The creditor did file a fresh petition and the Subordinate Judge held that there was no bar by reason of the previous order which was one for default. The reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge is perhaps defective, but his conclusion is, I think, sound. It was upheld by the District Judge in appeal.

Seshayya
v.
Sait
Hirachand
Chunilal
Firm.

The point, as I understand it, is not whether the previous application was dismissed in default or dismissed on the merits. Under S. 72 (2), there is a power given, not to the interested party, but to the Court itself on being satisfied that an offence of the kind contemplated had been committed, to send the case to the Magistrate. This is a power conferred not in the interests of this or that party but in order that the Court itself may prevent an offence against the insolvency law. Presumably a creditor who has been wrongfully induced to give credit could himself complain to the Magistrate under S. 72 (1) without obtaining the leave of the Insolvency Court. We are not therefore concerned with the question whether there is a bar of res judicata against the individual who gives the information on which the Insolvency Court acts, but whether the Court should or should not reconsider a decision of its own not to prosecute in the light of further information. There can be no question of a bar of res judicata operating against the Court. The most that can be said is that the Court cannot prosecute for an offence of which an accused person has already been acquitted and the Court will not ordinarily prosecute on the strength

v.
Sait
Hirachand

of information on which it has previously declined to act. In the present case, owing to the absence of the person who laid the information, the Court declined to proceed with the prosecution.¹ On the subsequent occasion, the Court had before it far more materials and reasonably came to the conclusion that a prosecution was desirable in the interests of the maintenance of the insolvency law. It is no longer a question whether the creditor should succeed or the insolvent should succeed. It is the question whether the Court had materials before it which placed upon it a duty to take action. In such circumstances, no question of res judicata arises and if it is a mere question whether the order of the Court is wise or unwise, it is not a matter that should be gone into in revision.

The second contention is based on a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in *W. D. Jordon v. Mahadeolal*¹, to the effect that after an insolvent has obtained a discharge, the Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to direct prosecution under S. 72 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Assuming that this decision is correct, though there are criticisms which might be urged against the reasoning with which it is supported, it has to my mind no bearing on the present case. When the Insolvency Court directed this complaint to be filed, the present petitioner was an undischarged insolvent over whom the Insolvency Court certainly had jurisdiction. The complaint therefore was filed by the Court empowered to institute proceedings. When the insolvent appealed to the District Judge, there was presumably a complaint pending before the Magistrate and that complaint had been regularly instituted. During the pendency of the appeal before the District Judge, the insolvent obtained his discharge. It is argued that the judgment of the District Judge dismissing the appeal amounts to an order under S. 72 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act directing the filing of a complaint and that, having been passed after the discharge of the insolvent, that order is without jurisdiction. I cannot accept this contention. We are not here concerned with a decree of the trial Court becoming merged in the decree of the appellate Court. We are concerned with the act of the Insolvency Court in filing a complaint which act is subject to review by an appellate Court under S. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It cannot be contended that when the appellate Court declines to stop the proceedings instituted by the Insolvency Court, it is for the first time instituting those proceedings. The proceedings have already been instituted and all that has happened is that an attempt to get them stopped has failed. They were instituted when the Court directing them had jurisdiction and the subsequent discharge of the insolvent before the appeal was dismissed cannot make those proceedings void.

In the result therefore I dismiss the civil revision petition with costs.

the decree, opposed the applications of A. The decree of one of such creditors was of another Court and the attachment was effected by a letter of request under O. 21, r. 53 (1) (b).

Held, (1) A is not precluded from obtaining an order under O. 21, r. 18, Civil Procedure Code, for set-off, by the absence of an actual attachment at the time when his applications for execution were made.

(2) The right given to the holder of a decree by O. 21, r. 18 of setting off a cross-decree for the same or a lesser amount cannot be defeated by the attachment of the cross-decree by third parties. There is no right of rateable distribution as the set-off will extinguish the decree and no assets representing the decree will ever come into the possession of the Court. *Rajman Ram v. (4) The decree is capable of execution by the Court that passed it in spite of and before the fulfilment of the conditions in the 'request' issued by another Court. The object of the 'request' is only to ensure that the holder of the decree does not himself proceed to execution without the leave of the Court making the attachment. It is not intended to prevent other attaching creditors from asking for execution of the decree.

30th May, 1940. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord
 Romer.

Lord Romer.—This is a consolidated appeal against the orders, dated the 2nd October, 1934, and the 1st February, 1935, of the High Court of Madras affirming two orders, dated the 23rd December, 1931, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura. The appeal arises out of certain execution proceedings, and the principal question to be determined is whether in the case of cross-decrees for money the right of the party holding the decree for the larger amount to set off the smaller decree against him is defeated by reason of the smaller decree having been attached by third parties.

The facts that give rise to the appeal are not in dispute and can be stated with reasonable brevity.

On the 27th November, 1911, the appellant's father, one Ramanathan Chettiar, obtained a decree for a sum of Rs. 46,253 odd with further interest and costs against the first respondent and his father Subrahmanyam Chettiar in O. S. No. 77 of 1911 in the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad. On the 12th September, 1917, the first respondent's father the said Subrahmanyam obtained a decree in Suit No. 153 of 1910 against the said Ramanathan Chettiar in the same Court for Rs. 33,068-0-9 and further interest. This decree was affirmed by the High Court on the 26th April, 1928. Thereupon, namely, on the 25th July, 1928, the appellant's father applied for execution of his decree in Suit No. 77 of 1911 by execution petition No. 109 of 1928. He asked (1) that the decree obtained against him by the first respondent's father in Suit No. 153 of 1910 should be attached; (2) that the decree so attached should be executed by him as attaching decree-holder, and (3) that the amount realized by execution of the attached decree should be set-off against the decretal amount due to him in Suit No. 77 of 1911.

The decree in Suit No. 153 of 1910 was accordingly attached by order of the 14th November, 1928. The two decrees having been passed by the same Court the order was made under r. 53 (1) (a) of O. 21. By virtue of sub-S. (3) of the same rule the attaching creditor thereupon became the representative of the holder of the attached decree. By this time, however, both the father of the appellant and the father of the first respondent had died and the appellant and the first respondent had become the respective holders of the two decrees.

On the 2nd November 1928, the appellant filed in the execution proceedings execution application No. 518 of 1928, which is one of the subjects of this appeal. By it he asked that execution should be ordered for the balance due to him from the first respondent after deducting the amount due from him under the decree in Suit No. 153 of 1910. The appellant also on the same date filed a memorandum of satisfaction of the decree in Suit No. 153 of 1910. This memorandum is the other subject-matter of this appeal.

The application for set-off and for execution of the balance of the decree in Suit No. 77 of 1911 and an application by the appellant to have the memorandum of satisfaction recorded came on for hearing together before the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad. The applications were opposed both by the first respondent as the judgment-creditor in Suit No. 153 of 1910 as well as by the respondents 2 to 10 inclusive. These last mentioned respondents as judgment-creditors of the first respondent's father had attached the decree in the last mentioned suit on varying dates of which the 26th August, 1918, would appear to have been the earliest. The attachment of that date had been obtained by the holder of a decree that had been passed in another Court in Suit No. 110 of 1915. The attachment had therefore been effected under the provision of r. 53 (1) (b) of O. 21 by the issue to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura by the Court effecting this attachment of a notice in the words following:—

"You are therefore requested to stay the execution of the decree of your Court until you receive an intimation from this Court that the present notice has been cancelled or until execution of the said decree is applied for by the holder of the decree now sought to be executed or by his judgment-debtor."

Before continuing this narrative of the facts it will be convenient to set out the relevant part of O. 21, r. 18 upon which the appellant relied in support of his applications, and the relevant part of S. 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon which the opposition of the respondents was based. They are as follows:—

"R. 18. (1) Where applications are made to a Court for the execution of cross-decrees in separate suits for the payment of two sums of money passed between the same parties and capable of execution at the same time by such Court, then—

(a) if the two sums are equal, satisfaction shall be entered upon both decrees; and

(b) if the two sums are unequal, execution may be taken out only by the holder of the decree for the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered on the decree for the larger sum as well as satisfaction of the decree for the smaller sum."

"S. 73. Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons."

The two applications were dismissed by the Subordinate Judge by orders of the 23rd December, 1931. He appears to have taken the view that all the attaching creditors were interested in the smaller decree and that without their concurrence it could not be set-off against the larger decree.

The appellant thereupon preferred two separate appeals to the High Court, the one against the order refusing to execute for the balance in Suit No. 77 of 1911, after allowing a set-off of the smaller decree, and the other against the rejection of the memorandum of satisfaction of the smaller decree. The appeals came before Madhavan Nair and Pandrang Row, JJ., who on the 2nd October, 1934, delivered judgment dismissing both appeals. They rightly pointed out that O. 21, r. 18 only applies where both the decrees are before the Court for execution. But they considered that as the decree in Suit No. 153 of 1910 had not been actually attached by the appellant's father when he filed his execution petition on the 25th July, 1928, he was not at that time entitled to execute that decree. They further held that even if this objection—which they agreed was an extremely technical one—was got over, the decree could not be said to be before the Court for execution as it had been attached by other decree-holders and without their concurrence or except on their behalf, the appellant alone could not have the right to execute it. They were also of opinion that the decree was not "capable of execution" in view of the fact that it had been attached by amongst others the decree-holder in Suit No. 110 of 1915 at whose instance a request had been directed to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura in the terms that have been referred to earlier in this judgment. "This notice," they said, "has not been cancelled and execution of the decree has not been applied for by the holder of the decree in O. S. No. 110 of 1915 or by his judgment-debtor." They accordingly held that the appellant was not entitled to claim the set-off in question, and his appeal against the refusal of the Subordinate Judge to allow it was dismissed by order, dated the 1st February, 1935. It necessarily followed that the appeal against the refusal to record the memorandum of satisfaction was also dismissed, and the formal order to this effect was dated the 2nd October, 1934.

Lord

From these two orders an appeal has now been brought before His Majesty in Council.

It will be seen from this narrative of the facts that the appeal raises questions of considerable general importance. But before considering these questions it is necessary to dispose of a preliminary question that is peculiar to the present case. It is the question whether the appellant is precluded from obtaining an order under O. 21, r. 18 by reason of the fact that neither at the time when his father presented his execution petition, No. 109 of 1928, nor at the time when the appellant filed his execution application, No. 518 of 1928, the decree in Suit No. 153 of 1910 had actually been attached. The objection is a highly technical one without any merits and their Lordships are reluctant to allow it to prevail. The execution petition sought execution of the decree in Suit No. 77 of 1911 by attaching the decree in Suit No. 153 of 1910 and also execution of the latter decree. It is obvious that relief under the second head could not have been granted at the request of the appellant's father until he had attached the latter decree. But when the appellant's execution application came before the Subordinate Judge on the 23rd December, 1931, the decree had been attached for over three years. There was therefore at that time an application for the execution of the two decrees by the decree-holder in the one case and the representative of the decree-holder in the second. The fact that this state of affairs did not exist and could not have existed at the time when the execution petition was filed should not, in their Lordships' opinion, be regarded as fatal to the appellant's case.

The other questions arising on the appeal are however both substantial and of general importance. They are the following:

- (1) Is the right given to the holder of a decree by O. 21, r. 18 of setting off a cross-decree for the same or a lesser amount defeated by the attachment by third parties of the cross-decree?
- (2) Where a decree has been attached by more than one judgment-creditor, can one of them apply for execution of the decree without the concurrence or consent of all the others?
- (3) Where a judgment-creditor has attached a decree under the provisions of r. 53 (1) (b) of O. 21, is that decree 'capable of execution' by the Court that passed it before Condition (i) or Condition (ii) mentioned in the request addressed to that Court by the Court making the attachment have been fulfilled?

As to the answer to be given to the first of these questions their Lordships are unable to entertain any doubt. The moment that cross-decrees such as are mentioned in r. 18 are in existence the decree-holders become entitled to the right of set-off. It is true that effect cannot be given to the set-off until applications are made to the Court for the execution of the two decrees. The right nevertheless is there, and this right of the holder of one decree cannot be defeated by an attachment in favour of a third party of the other decree made after the right of set-off has arisen. Whatever may be the true position in law of an attaching creditor, it is plain that he can have no higher rights in respect of an attached decree than were possessed by his judgment-debtor. If at the time of the attachment of a decree the decree-holder is liable to have his debt extinguished by being set-off against a cross-decree against him, the attaching creditor is subjected in respect of the decree to the same liability. The contention that this is not so is founded upon a misapprehension of the true effect of S. 73 of the Code. The right of having the assets of a judgment-debtor rateably distributed amongst the executing creditors therein mentioned is confined to assets held by the Court. Where one of the judgment-debtor's assets is a decree for the payment to him of a sum of money which is liable to be extinguished by being set-off against a cross-decree against him, no assets representing that decree will ever come into the possession of the Court if the right of set-off be exercised. This was the view taken by Sulaiman, C.J. and Bennet, J., in the recent case of *Rajman Ram v. Sarju Prasad*¹. In the judgment in that case it was said:

"Where there are cross-decrees under O. 21, r. 18, a smaller decree must always be set-off against the larger decree, and if the smaller decree is attached by some other decree-holder, that other decree-holder has no greater right than the decree-holder whose decree has been attached, and the attaching decree-holder cannot claim that he has a right to execute the smaller decree in spite of the existence of a larger decree held by the judgment-debtor. In other words the rule laid down by O. 21, r. 18 must be first applied before any question can arise for rateable distribution under S. 73."

With these observations their Lordships desire to express their respectful agreement. But they express no opinion as to what would be the result if the larger decree was passed after the attachment of the smaller one.

The two remaining questions can be dealt with more shortly. Their Lordships can see no reason for thinking that a judgment-creditor who has succeeded in attaching a decree is unable to apply to the Court for execution of the decree without obtaining the concurrence or consent of other attaching creditors. On the contrary, r. 53 (3) of O. 21 provides in terms that an attaching creditor shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and to be entitled to execute the attached decree in any manner lawful for the holder thereof. The fact that there may be other attaching creditors in the same position is immaterial. Any money recovered by the execution creditor will be held by the Court and be subject to the provisions of S. 73 of the Code. Any payments made out of Court to the attaching creditor as representative of the holder of the attached decree would be avoided as against the other attaching creditors by S. 64 of the Code. The other attaching creditors are therefore adequately protected, and their concurrence in or consent to the execution is unnecessary.

The third question mentioned above must, in their Lordships' opinion, also be answered in favour of the appellant. To answer it otherwise would be tantamount to saying that though one of several attaching creditors may apply for execution of the attached decree, he can never obtain any practical result, if any one of the other attaching creditors has obtained his own decree in a Court different from the one that passed the attached decree and does not join in the application. In their Lordships' judgment a request made under r. 53 (1) (b) does not have this effect. It is a mere request. The rule does not purport to prohibit the Court to which it is addressed from executing the decree unless the conditions contained in the request are fulfilled. The object of the request is to ensure that the holder of the decree does not himself proceed to execution without the leave of the Court making the attachment. It is not intended to prevent other attaching creditors from asking for execution of the decree.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal should be allowed. The orders of the 23rd December, 1931, the 2nd October, 1934, and the 1st February, 1935, should be discharged, and an order made as asked by the appellant's execution application. No. 518 of 1928, and as asked by his application to have recorded the memorandum of satisfaction of the decree in Suit No. 153 of 1910. The costs of the appellant in the Courts below and his costs of this appeal must be paid by respondents 1 to 10 inclusive. In the case of the 11th respondent, who was added merely as a formal party for the purposes of this appeal, there will be no order as to costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Ramaswami Aiyar.

A mortgage was executed by S on 16th August, 1917, in favour of the plaintiffs. On 13th December, 1923, the wife and daughter of S (defendants 1 and 2) executed a fresh mortgage in renewal of the earlier one by S. On 27th December, 1933, defendants 1 and 2 sold the hypotheca to the 4th defendant who undertook to discharge the mortgage by payment of Rs. 2,500 out of the purchase price. Then a suit on the mortgage resulted in a compromise decree by which defendants 2 and 4 were enabled to satisfy the decree by paying Rs. 1,500 by 24th August, 1935 and Rs. 2,050 by 16th July, 1936, but in default of such payments the decree was to be a final decree for the full plaintiff claim (Rs. 4,348-8-0) with interest and costs. Towards the decree Rs. 500 was paid on 1st March, 1936; Rs. 1,000 on 13th July, 1936; and Rs. 1,000 on 5th January, 1937. The fourth defendant filed an application under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938 for scaling down.

Held, (1) as the liability sought to be scaled down is not the liability of the applicant to her vendors but the liability to the mortgagee S. 10 (2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938 has no applicability.

(2) The liability under the compromise decree was a renewal of the previous mortgage liability and must be deemed to be a liability of the purchaser, which he, being an agriculturist, can seek to scale down as against the mortgagee, the original mortgagor being also an agriculturist.

(3) When both the original mortgagor and his purchaser are agriculturists, the purchaser can claim to have the debt scaled down on the basis that the mortgage debt for which the purchaser of the hypotheca became liable is itself a renewal of an earlier debt in favour of the same creditor.

(4) The provisions of S. 11 like those of S. 19 relate only to costs originally decreed and do not cover costs of execution.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore dated 19th August, 1938 and made in E. A. No. 592 of 1938 in E.P.R. No. 341 of 1937 in O. S. No. 214 of 1934.

Wadsworth, J.—This petition is preferred by the fourth defendant in a mortgage suit, who filed an application under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act to scale down the decree. The application was unsuccessful to the extent of Rs. 2,500 which the learned Subordinate Judge held to be protected by the provisions of S. 10 (2) (ii) of the Act and it is this decision which the petitioner seeks to revise. The suit was based on a mortgage dated 13th December, 1923, executed by defendants 1 and 2 in favour of the plaintiff. This mortgage is alleged to be a renewal of an earlier mortgage dated 16th August, 1917, executed in favour of the same creditor by Subbaraya Goundar, who is said to have been the husband of the first defendant and the father of the second defendant. After the execution of the mortgage of 1923, the mortgagors on 27th December, 1933, sold the hypotheca to the petitioner (fourth defendant) under a sale deed in which she specifically undertook to discharge the mortgage by payment of Rs. 2,500 out of the purchase price. She did not pay and the mortgagee filed a suit which resulted in a compromise decree, by the terms of which defendants 2 and 4 were enabled to satisfy the decree by paying Rs. 1,500 by 24th August, 1935 and Rs. 2,050 by 16th July, 1936, but in default of such payments the compromise decree was to be a final decree for the full plaint claim (Rs. 4,348-8-0) with interest and costs. This default clause became operative, for the only payments made were Rs. 500 on 1st March, 1936; Rs. 1,000 on 13th July, 1936; and Rs. 1,000 on 5th January, 1937.

The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge that the decree is protected to the extent of Rs. 2,500 under S. 10 (2) (ii) cannot be upheld in view of our decision in C. R. P. No. 602 of 1939. The liability which the petitioner seeks to scale down is not the liability to her vendors, in respect of which the charge is provided, but the liability to the mortgagee.

The plaintiff-respondent has, however, sought to resist the scaling down on the basis that the decree is a compromise decree under which for the first time a direct liability is placed upon the purchaser. We are unable to see how the fact that the decree is on a compromise can affect the position of the petitioner having regard to the facts of the case. We have held in C. R. P. No. 2010 of 1939 that when it can be shown that the liability under the compromise is a renewal of a pre-existing liability to the same creditor, the debt must be scaled down under S. 8 (if this section applies) on the basis of the principal amount originally advanced together with the amount of any subsequent advances. There is no difficulty on the present facts in holding that the whole of the liability under the compromise was nothing else than a renewal of the previous mortgage liability. Provided that this debt was the debt of an agriculturist, the liability is one which must be deemed to be a liability of the purchaser which he, being an agriculturist, can seek to scale down as against the mortgagee. (Vide *Perianna v. Sellappa*¹.)

There has been some discussion before us of the question whether the fact that the purchaser is under a liability which can be traced back to the liability under the mortgage, makes available to the purchaser the plea which would be open to the original mortgagors that the mortgage debt is itself a renewal of an earlier debt. The question is not free from difficulty and we have been referred to no previous decision directly covering this question. But the judgment of Varadachariar, J., in *Perianna v. Sellappa*¹ assumes that an heir-at-law is under the same liability as the person to whom he inherits and is entitled to the same remedy under the Act and the learned Judge treats the purchaser of mortgaged property as under the same liability as his vendor. It would appear to follow that if the debt for which the purchaser is liable is essentially the same debt as the debt of the original mortgagor and the latter debt is a renewal of an earlier debt in favour of the same creditor, the purchaser will be entitled to claim that the liability which he has incurred is a renewal and that the principal must be the principal originally advanced together with the amounts subsequently advanced as principal. We must point out that this is not a case of a novatio by a different debtor such as we had before us in C. R. P. No. 223 of 1939. The compromise is a renewal of the pre-existing liability of the purchaser, which liability is traceable to the mortgage debt, which debt is itself a renewal. We are of opinion that when both the mortgagor and the purchaser are agriculturists, the purchaser can claim to have the debt scaled down on the basis that the mortgage debt for which he became liable is itself a renewal of an earlier debt in favour of the same creditor. The plaintiff-respondent has contended that by reason of S. 11, the costs of execution can be recovered in addition to the amount recoverable under the provisions of Ss. 8 and 9. We are of opinion that the provisions of S. 11, like those of S. 19, relate only to costs as decreed and do not cover costs of execution.

In the result the petition is allowed with costs as against the plaintiff-respondent and the application is remanded to the lower Court for fresh disposal in the light of this judgment.

An insurance company had its head office at Calcutta and a branch office at Madras which did everything in connection with the company's business, except entering into formal contracts of insurance and authorizing payments in respect thereof. The power to accept proposals for policies was reserved entirely to the head office which alone had power to issue policies and authorize payments in respect thereto. In a suit in Madras in respect of a policy effected by a person in the Chingleput District, Held, it is settled by judicial decisions that a company 'carries on business' where it enters into contracts relating to its business, and not at places where it may have canvassers or agents for the purpose of obtaining offers of business and attending to matters ancillary thereto.

JUDGMENT.—The question which falls for decision in this appeal is whether the respondent company, the Hindustan Co-operative Insurance Society, Limited, carries on business in Madras within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of this Court. The first appellant is the widow and the second appellant is the daughter of one C. T. Subramania Mudali, who died on the 31st May, 1926. The deceased lived at Little Conjeevaram in the Chingleput District and therefore outside the limits of this Court's original jurisdiction. He insured his life with the company for a sum of Rs. 5,000, payable at the age of sixty years. According to the pleadings the policy was issued on the 6th August, 1925 and the assured died on 31st May, 1926. The company repudiated liability on the ground that the assured had failed to disclose that he was suffering from certain diseases when he made the proposal. The suit was filed on the Original Side of this Court by the appellants, who claimed that the Court had jurisdiction because the company was carrying on business in Madras. In its written statement the company raised the question of the Court's jurisdiction and its contention that the Court had no jurisdiction was upheld by Mockett, J., who accordingly dismissed the suit. The appeal is from that decision.

It is common ground that if the company cannot be deemed to be carrying on business in Madras the present suit cannot be maintained, because no part of the cause of action arose here. As a matter of fact the leave of the Court to file the suit was neither sought nor given. The head office of the company is in Calcutta and it has branch offices in many places in India. In Madras the company has a very large branch office. The Madras office employs about 400 canvassing agents and its establishment charges amount to Rs. 67,000 a year. The supervision of the canvassers employed in the Madras Presidency rests entirely with the Madras office. When a proposal is made in the Madras Presidency it is forwarded to the head office at Calcutta through the Madras office, which arranges for the medical examination of the person making the proposal. Although premia may be paid to the head office they are usually paid to the Madras office. The payments here made in respect of premia amount to over Rs. 6,00,000 a year. The Madras office, however, has no power to accept proposals for policies. That power is reserved entirely to the head office and it alone has power to issue policies and to authorize payments in respect of policies. Therefore so far as the Madras Presidency is concerned the position is this. The Madras office does everything in connection with the company's business, except entering into formal contracts of insurance and authorizing payments in respect thereof. The appellants claim that in these circumstances it is contrary to common sense to say that the company is not carrying on business in the City of Madras. When considered without regard to authority this assertion does not appear to be unreasonable, but what is meant by carrying on business has been the subject of much judicial discussion and it must now be regarded as settled that a company only carries on business where it enters into contracts relating to its business, not at places where it may have canvassers or agents for the purpose of obtaining offers of business and attending to matters ancillary to its business.

The question of what is meant by carrying on business has frequently been discussed in England in cases relating to liability to income-tax, but it is not necessary to refer to all the cases which have been cited in arguments in this connection. It will be sufficient to refer to the well-known case of *Grainger & Son v. William Lane Gough*¹ and to two later decisions. In *Grainger & Son v. William Lane Gough*¹, the House of Lords held that a wine merchant in France who merely canvassed through agents for orders for the sale of his wines to customers in the United Kingdom, did not carry on business in the United Kingdom, as all contracts for the sale of wines and all deliveries to customers were made in France. In the course of his judgment in this case Lord Herschell said:

"If all that a merchant does in any particular country is to solicit orders, I do not think he can reasonably be said to exercise or carry on his trade in that country. What is done there is only ancillary to the exercise of his trade in the country where he buys or makes, stores, and sells his goods."

In *De Beers Consolidated Mines, Limited v. Howe*², Lord Loreburn, L.C., observed that the true rule was that a company resided for purposes of income-tax where its real business was carried on, and the real business was carried on where the central management and control actually abided. In *Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood*³, the Court of Appeal had to decide whether a Danish firm resident in Copenhagen which manufactured and dealt in cement-making machinery was liable to income-tax in the United Kingdom. The firm had an office in London which was in the charge of a qualified engineer, who was a whole time servant. He answered inquiries from prospective customers and advised them, but he had no power to enter into contracts. That power was reserved to the office in Copenhagen and it was from there that the goods were shipped to England. It was held that the firm exercised its trade in Denmark and was not resident in the United Kingdom. Atkin, L.J., put the case this way. The question was where did the operations take place from which the profits in substance arose, and relying on the observations of Lord Herschell and Lord Watson in *Grainger & Son v. William Lane Gough*¹, held the firm must be deemed to be carrying on business in Copenhagen. The branch office in Madras of the respondent company is very much in the same position as the office of the Danish firm in London. Proposals are solicited, inquiries are answered and everything ancillary to the transaction of the business of the company is done here, but the contracts of insurance are not made here. They are made in Calcutta, and the entering into contracts of insurance is the real business of the company.

The learned Advocate-General has referred to certain decisions in England with regard to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Residence in England gives the Court jurisdiction, and in *De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd. v. Howe*¹, Lord Loreburn, L.C., agreeing with the Master of the Rolls, observed that the residence of a company within the meaning of the Income-tax Acts was not necessarily the same thing as residence for the purpose of serving a writ. The learned Advocate-General has contended that the income-tax cases stand on a different footing from the cases relating to jurisdiction, but they show no divergence of opinion on the question of what is meant by "carrying on business." The learned Advocate-General has referred us to *La Compagnie Generale Trans-Atlantique v. Thomas Law & Co.*², *Leoneux Limon & Co. v. Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation*³, *Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. Actien-Gesellschaft Fur Motor und Motorfahrzeugbau Vorm. Cudell & Co.*⁴, *Saccharin Corporation, Ltd. v. Chemische Fabrik von Heyden Aktiengesellschaft*⁵, *Actiesselskabet Dampskib "Hercules" v. Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Co.*⁶ and *Okura & Co., Ltd. v. Forsbacka Jernverks Aktiebolag*⁷. When the facts are examined it will be found that in all these cases, except the last, the companies carried on business in England within the meaning of the income-tax cases. In the last mentioned case the company did not carry on business in England and consequently it was held that the service of a writ on its agents was not good service. It is not necessary to consider in what respect residence within the meaning of the English Income-tax Acts may differ from residence for the purpose of serving a writ, because all that the Court is concerned with in the present case is what is meant by "carrying on business" and both the income-tax cases and the jurisdiction cases are in agreement here.

There are decisions of our own Court which are also directly opposed to the appellants' case. In the *Municipal Council of Cocanada v. The 'Clan Line' Steamers, Ltd.*¹, a Bench of this Court held that a Shipping Company which earned money by carrying goods by sea and called regularly at Cocanada for the purpose of loading and unloading cargo was not carrying on business in Cocanada, because there was only a sub-agent there and all contracts with the shippers were entered into by the agent of the company in Madras. Therefore the company was not exercising any trade or carrying on business in Cocanada so as to be liable to be taxed under S. 53 of the Madras District Municipalities Act. Another Bench of this Court approved of and followed that decision in the *Municipal Council, Dindigul v. The Bombay Co., Ltd., Madras*². It was there held that the expression "transacting business" is the same as "carrying on business". A case in which the facts were exactly similar to the facts in this case was *G. D. John v. Sambamurthi Aiyar*³, where Kumaraswami Sastri, J., held that a life insurance company which had its head office in Bombay and a branch office in Madras with no power to enter into contracts, but merely to forward proposals and send moneys to the head office, was not carrying on business in Madras. This decision was followed by Lakshmana Rao, J., in C. S. No. 120 of 1937.

The English authorities are against the appellants and decisions of this Court are also against them. We agree with the learned Judge that the authorities are such that the Court is bound to hold that the respondent company is not carrying on business in Madras within the meaning of the Letters Patent. Consequently the appeal must be dismissed with costs. The appellants could have sued in the Subordinate Court if they had so chosen and it is regrettable that that course was not adopted, the authorities being so emphatically against them.

Madras Abkari Act (I of 1886), S. 24—Grant of licence for sale of toddy—Agreement of partnership after date of bid by licensee with another—Transfer whether permissible—Contract illegal.

Where before the grant of license but after a successful bid for a toddy shop, the appellant entered into an agreement with the respondent according to which the appellant should bear one half of the expenses of running the business and the sale proceeds were to be divided between the two every month, and the respondent filed a suit for accounts on the ground that the appellant had not paid his share of the profits, and the defence was that the agreement of partnership was illegal,

Held, that the facts of the case were covered by the Full Bench decision in Ramanaidu v. Seetharamayya, (1934) 68 M.L.J. 570: I.L.R. 58 Mad. 727 (F.B.) and that the formation of the partnership was a transfer of the privilege of the supply and sale of toddy which had been acquired on the bid being accepted and as such prohibited by the Abkari Act.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chittoor dated 11th February, 1939 in A. S. No. 65 of 1938 (O. S. No. 370 of 1936, District Munsif Court, Sholinghur).

S. A. Seshadri Aiyangar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this appeal was the licensee of the toddy shop at Minnal for the year beginning 1st October, 1932. The auction at which defendant's bid was accepted was on 8th August, 1932. On the 31st August appellant entered into an agreement with the respondent which is embodied in Ex. A. This is a brief document called a 'partition' and apart from a penalty clause with which I am not now concerned, its terms are that appellant should bear one half of the expenses of running the business and that the sale proceeds should be divided between appellant and respondent every month. Respondent alleging that appellant had not paid him his half share of the profits, filed a suit for accounts. Appellant contended, amongst other things, that the agreement was illegal and could not therefore be enforced. The District Munsif of Sholinghur accepted this contention, the Subordinate Judge of Chittoor rejected it and remanded the suit for disposal after taking accounts. Against that order of remand the present appeal has been filed.

* A. A. O. No. 164 of 1939.

Nara-simhalu Naidu
v.
Naga
Reddy.

The decision of the appeal depends upon the determination of the question whether the privilege of the supply and sale of toddy has or has not been transferred by the appellant. Such a transfer is admittedly prohibited by the terms of the licence. The learned Subordinate Judge holds that there is no such transfer on two grounds:

- (i) because appellant and respondent did not enter into any partnership; and
- (ii) because their agreement was anterior to the actual issue of the licence.

It is difficult to understand how the Subordinate Judge arrived at the first of these conclusions. The issues framed by the District Munsiff assume that the relation between appellant and respondent was a partnership. They certainly agreed in the words of the definition (Contract Act, S. 239) to 'combine their property, labour or skill' in the business and to 'share its profits'. I find that the agreement constituted appellant and respondent partners.

The question then arises whether by the constitution of this partnership there was any transfer of the privilege of selling toddy in this particular shop. The Subordinate Judge holds in effect that that privilege comes into existence only with the grant of the licence and therefore on the date of the agreement there was nothing to transfer. It is argued for the appellant on the other hand that the privilege was acquired as soon as appellant's bid was accepted. If that be so, it is clear that appellant has transferred that privilege to the partnership.

Though the issue was not perhaps raised in this direct form it seems to me that the decision of the Full Bench in *Ramanaidu v. Seetharamayya*¹, is conclusive on this point in favour of the appellant. That was a case of a partnership constituted after the date of the auction and before the date of the issue of licence. The judgment sets out these dates on page 733 and states:

"The money was therefore lent to the partnership after the first defendant had become the successful bidder at the auction and was the person in whose name the licence would be issued."

Again on page 734 it is stated

"The partnership was formed after the first defendant had become the successful bidder. The licence would therefore be issued in his name".

These passages seem to me to show that the learned Judges in that case took it for granted that the issue of a licence was something following automatically upon the acceptance of a bid and that it is the acceptance of the bid which confers the privilege. The decision, I think, can be explained on no other ground. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has preferred to rely upon two later decisions each that of a single Judge.

The first of these *Satyala Sanyasi v. Bhogavalli Sanyasi*¹, is obviously of no assistance to the respondent. That is a clear case of a partnership formed before the auction and in giving his decision Venkatasubba Rao, J., expressly distinguishes the Full Bench ruling by quoting the words:

"The partnership was formed after the first defendant had become the successful bidder."

The second case is reported in *Rangaswami Pillai v. Narayanaswami Naicken*², and this certainly does support the Subordinate Judge's judgment. But this is only because in my opinion, and with all respect to him, the learned Judge who decided it has not correctly stated what the Full Bench decided. In *Rangaswami Pillai v. Narayanaswami Naicken*², no dates are given, but it is stated that the partnership was formed 'at least a month before the actual grant of licence.' On p. 692 the learned Judge says:

"If a case is authority for what it decides the Full Bench decision is only an authority for the proposition that where a partnership is entered into subsequent to the grant of licence it would be illegal"

I am entirely unable to see how such an appreciation of the Full Bench decision can be formed when the Full Bench after setting out the dates, declares to be illegal a partnership formed before the grant of a licence.

I am accordingly of opinion that the facts of this case are covered by the Full Bench decision and that the formation of the partnership was a transfer.

1. (1935) 69 M.L.J. 490.

2. (1935) 70 M.L.J. 691.

One final argument is however urged for the respondent and that is that what was transferred was not the privilege of supply and sale of toddy because respondent's duties in the partnership were confined to the supervision of the procuring of toddy from the trees and had nothing to do with the actual process of selling it. I am unable to accept any such narrow interpretation of the words 'Privilege of supply and sale'. The privilege or right which was conferred upon appellant by the Government was that of carrying on the whole business of selling toddy, and in that business the procuring of toddy from trees is obviously a necessary part. The agreement contains no clause to the effect that respondent was prohibited from controlling in any way the operation and methods of sale—and from the legal point of view, appellant, his partner, is also his agent in the business which he personally carries on on behalf of the partnership. It is argued further that the reasons for the prohibition of transfer are in no way affected by the agreement in this case. It is not for me to speculate upon those reasons. It is enough to recognise that transfer is in fact prohibited, and to hold, as I do hold, that the partnership in this case amounts to such a transfer.

This appeal must therefore be allowed, and the decree of the District Munsif restored, and respondent's suit be dismissed with costs throughout.

Leave refused.

The Chief Justice.—The appellant claims to be a creditor of the Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Ltd., which is now in liquidation under an order passed by this Court for its compulsory winding up. In February 1938 the appellant entered into an agreement with the bank under which the bank was to allow him on certain conditions to overdraw his account up to the sum of Rs. 75,000 for the purpose of financing a contract which he had entered into with the Travancore Government. The bank suspended payment on the 20th June, 1938. The petition for winding up was filed on the 21st June, 1938 and the order for compulsory winding up was passed on the 4th September, 1938. On the date of suspension of payment by the bank the appellant had overdrawn his account to the extent of Rs. 56,000. After suspension of payment he was, of course, not allowed to draw further on his account and he says that in consequence the bank has committed a breach of contract. He also alleges that the contract is a continuing one. On this basis he filed an application under S. 230-A of the Indian Companies Act for an order rescinding the contract and awarding him damages. Other reliefs were also asked for but the learned Judge refused to consider the application and directed the appellant to file a regular suit. The appellant contends that the learned Judge erred in so doing. In the first place he says that the learned Judge had no power to relegate him to a regular suit and in the second place that he should have heard the application and passed such order thereon as the circumstances demanded. If the appellant was not entitled to an order under with the company, make an order rescinding the contract on such terms as to payment by or to either party of damages for the non-performance of the contract, or otherwise as the Court thinks just, and any damages payable under the order to any such person may be proved by him as a debt in the winding up."

Leach, C.

The discretion here given to the Court is a discretion to make an order rescinding the contract. Of course if a contract has already been rescinded an application under this section will not lie, and it is the case of the liquidators that this contract has been terminated by a notice calling in the amount due on the overdraft. It is said that the liquidators had a right to do this because the contract between the appellant and the bank provided that the amount was to be repayable on demand.

S. 229 of the Indian Companies Act states that in the winding up of an insolvent company the same rules shall prevail and be observed with regard to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors and to debts provable as are in force under the law of insolvency and that all persons who in such a case would be entitled to prove for and receive dividends out of the assets of the company may come in under the winding up and make such claims against the company as they are entitled to by virtue of the section. Therefore the general law of insolvency applies to the winding up of an insolvent company. A creditor in insolvency cannot in ordinary circumstances bring suit against the Official Assignee. If he claims to be a creditor he must file a proof of his debt with the Official Assignee. If his claim is rejected, then he has the right of asking the Judge sitting in insolvency to reverse the Official Assignee's decision. The Presidency Towns Insolvency Act contains a section similar to S. 230-A of the Indian Companies Act, namely, S. 65. When it is not a question of rescinding a contract and assessing damages under S. 65 a person who has contracted with an insolvent may file a proof of the damages suffered by him by virtue of the provisions of S. 46 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

The position then is this. The appellant was entitled to have his application heard. If the Court then came to the con-

In such a case an appeal also lies from an order of the District Munsif refusing to set aside an ex parte decree passed by that Court. The Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—This revision petition raises a question of jurisdiction on which there has been considerable divergence of judicial opinion.

The facts may be briefly stated. The petitioner obtained an ex parte decree in S. C. S. No. 73 of 1937 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Tiruvarur. The respondent who was the first defendant in the case applied to the Court to set aside the ex parte decree which was set aside on 31st August, 1937, on certain terms which are not material for the purpose of this petition. A revision petition was filed against that order and this Court set it aside and remitted the proceeding for disposal according to law. Before, however, it could be disposed of, the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur was abolished with effect from 1st November, 1938, and by the District Court's proceedings dated 29th October, 1938, the application to set aside the ex parte decree was ordered to be transferred from the Subordinate Judge's Court to the District Munsif's Court, Tiruvarur, and the transfer was accordingly made by the Subordinate Judge on ble by a Court of Small Causes shall not be tried by any other Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes by which the suit is triable. S. 35 (1) provides that:

Kamalath-

Harihara
Aiyar.

"Where a Court of Small Causes or a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, has from any cause ceased to have jurisdiction with respect to any case, any proceeding in relation to the case, whether before or after decree, which, if the Court had not ceased to have jurisdiction, might have been had therein, may be had in the Court which, if the suit out of which the proceeding has arisen were about to be instituted, would have jurisdiction to try the suit."

It will be observed that this section does not say that the Court which is empowered thereunder to entertain proceedings owing to a Small Cause Court ceasing to have jurisdiction with reference to the case, should have jurisdiction to try the suit as a Court of Small Causes. It is sufficient if it has jurisdiction to try the suit. It is not disputed that the District Munsif's Court, Tiruvarur, would be the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit out of which these proceedings have arisen, if that suit were to be instituted at the time when the application to set aside the ex parte decree was transferred to it, as no other Court had jurisdiction to try it as a Court of Small Causes within the same local limits. The District Munsif's Court, however, was competent to entertain the suit only on its original side, owing to the limitation placed on its small cause powers. S. 24, Civil Procedure Code, empowers the High Court or the District Court to transfer any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending in any Court subordinate to it to any other Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same and it is provided in sub-S. (4) that:

"The Court trying any suit transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall, for the purposes of such suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes."

The section makes it clear—and it has also been decided (vide *Chockalingam v. Palaniappa*¹) that a District Court may transfer any proceeding from a Court of Small Causes to a Court not having adequate small cause powers to deal with it as a Court of Small Causes. But, nevertheless, the latter Court shall be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes for the purposes of the suit transferred. While, therefore, both under S. 24, Civil Procedure Code and S. 35 of the Provincial Small

The petitioner argued broadly that the suit having been originally instituted as a small cause suit in a Court having jurisdiction to try it as such, the character of the suit could not be changed though it was subsequently dealt with under S. 35 by another Court as an original suit owing to want of adequate small cause powers. This contention is supported by the observations of Stone, J., in *Ramaswami Muthirian v. Arunachalam Chettiar*¹. These observations were however largely obiter, as in that case the Court which finally disposed of the suit was competent to try it as a small cause suit and must be deemed to have dealt with it as such, as it could not have dealt with it otherwise having regard to S. 16 of the Act. No doubt the view adumbrated by the learned Judge, namely, the suit remains what it was when it began has the merit of simplicity but I am unable to find any warrant for it in the relevant statutory provisions. The learned Judge observes:

"Now it was urged that S. 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act operates to change in some way a small cause suit into an original suit. In my opinion, it does nothing of the sort. What S. 35 does is to invest, a Court which otherwise would be incompetent to hear any, or certain, small cause suits, with power to hear certain of such suits, namely, those pending in that Court at the time that Court's jurisdiction is changed."

This is not entirely correct, as S. 35 provides not only for the continuance of pending proceedings in the same Court when that Court's jurisdiction is changed, but also for their continuance in a different Court on the abolition of the original Court. Apart from this, if, as the learned Judge thinks, there is nothing in S. 35 to turn a small cause suit into an original suit, it is difficult to see anything in it to turn a Civil Court into a Court of Small Causes, so as to attract the application of S. 27 barring appeals in respect of a decree or order made by a Court of Small Causes. It is significant that S. 35 contains no provision similar to S. 24 (4), Civil Procedure Code. It seems to me that the rule laid down by the learned Judge would be an unwarranted extension of the latter provision to cases falling under S. 35, and is not supported by the authorities referred to by him. In the Full Bench case in *Kollipara Seethapathy v. Kantipati Subbayya*², it appears that the District Munsif who tried the suit on the original side had jurisdiction to try it as a small cause suit and it was held that the Court must be regarded as having tried it as a Court of Small Causes. The case was not one under S. 35 and it does not support the wide proposition laid down by the learned Judge. The decision of Cornish, J., in *Gopalakrishna Naicker v. Madhavanayaki Ammal*¹, is also distinguishable on the same ground, namely, that the Court which ultimately tried the suit had jurisdiction to try it as a small cause suit. Though the learned Judge referred to the decision of Stone, J., in *Ramaswami Muthirian v. Arunachalam Chettiar*², it is evident that he did not rely upon the wide general observations contained in that case as he referred to the Full Bench decision in *Bhagwati Pande v. Badri Pande*³, as not being inconsistent with *Ramaswami Muthirian v. Arunachalam Chettiar*². This Full Bench held that a suit instituted as a small cause suit, if tried as an original suit in the circumstances mentioned in S. 35 when there was no other Judge in the local areas with adequate small cause powers to try it as a small cause suit, should be regarded as an original suit, and the decree passed in it would be appealable. I respectfully agree with this view and hold that S. 27 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act does not operate in the circumstances of the case to bar any appeal from the order of the District Munsif's Court, Tiruvarur, refusing to set aside the ex parte decree in question.

The question next arises whether an appeal lies from the said order under O. 43, r. (1) (d). The petitioner contends that the qualifying words "in a case open to appeal" should be understood as referring to the appealability of the decree which is sought to be set aside and as in this case, the decree which was originally passed by a Court of Small Causes, was not appealable, the order refusing to set it aside was also not appealable under this clause. This contention is supported by the decision of a single Judge reported in *Hira Lal v. Jhunni Lal*⁴, but a Bench of this Court in *Selvarayan Samson v. Amalorpavanadham*⁵ was not inclined to accept that restricted interpretation of those words. The question was whether an appeal lay against an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree passed on an application filed under para. 20 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code and registered as a suit. It was gued that no appeal lay as it was not a "case open to appeal" the decree passed was not in excess of the award and therefore not appealable. The learned Judges observed:

1. (1937) 1 M.L.J. 14: 44 L.W. 874. 2. (1935) 69 M.L.J. 443.
3. (1931) I.L.R. 54 All. 171 (F.B.). 4. (1922) 20 A.L.J. 208.
5. (1927) 55 M.L.J. 262.

ammal
v.
Harihara
Aiyar.

"It cannot be said that the words 'a case open to appeal' should be necessarily construed only with reference to the decree and to no other order."

They held that an appeal lay because there was an order making the award and an appeal could have been filed against it. This view was approved and followed in *Mahendra Chandra Uttara Roy v. Basir Uddin*¹. It seems to me that when the proceeding was taken up by the District Munsif of Tiruvarur on the original side of his jurisdiction, it must be deemed thereafter to be a case open to appeal, as, if the District Munsif had set aside the ex parte decree and passed a fresh decree after re-trial, such decree would have been appealable, in the view I have taken on the first point. If the restricted interpretation contended for by the petitioner must be rejected as untenable, there seems to be no reason why the general words should not be held to include a case of the kind now before me.

For these reasons, I hold that the appeal to the Court below was competent and dismiss this Civil Revision Petition with costs.

Wadsworth, J.—The petitioner was the third defendant in a mortgage suit and he applied under Ss. 8 and 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938 to scale down the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge has given a decree for the principal amount of the debt with interest at 6 per cent. from 1st October, 1937 and also for Rs. 1,855-3-0 for costs and has provided that this amount awarded for costs shall carry interest at six per cent. from the date of the decree which is 12th March, 1932. Petitioner seeks to revise this order by applying to the decree for costs the scaling down provisions of the Act so as to cancel the interest as on 1st October, 1937. There is nothing in the Act which excludes from the scaling down operation interest on costs. The principal sections dealing with costs are Ss. 11 and 19. S. 11 states that where a debt includes any sum decreed as costs by any Court or sums lawfully expended by a mortgagee or other person in order to preserve the property mortgaged, such sum or sums shall be recoverable in addition to the sum recoverable under the provisions of Ss. 8 and 9. We doubt whether this section was intended to safeguard not only costs but interest thereon, for the section couples costs with sums recoverable as having been lawfully expended by a mortgagee. Such sums would normally be added to the principal amount of the mortgage and would bear interest at the contract rate. If it had been the intention to exclude interest on such sums due to the mortgagee from the scaling down provisions, surely there would have been an express indication of the fact. We are constrained to the view that there was no intention to safeguard interest on sums payable to a mortgagee and if there was no such intention, similarly there can be no intention to exclude from the scaling down provisions interest on any sum decreed as costs.

The other main provision relating to costs is found in the proviso to S. 19 which is to the effect that payments in respect of a decree shall first be applied in payment of all costs as originally decreed to the creditor. It is contended that the for was intended to be only in respect of the principal sum for costs or that this provision had any other object than to give effect to the provisions of S. 11. We are of opinion that when there is a decree for costs which forms part of a decree being scaled down under S. 19, the provisions of the decree relating to interest on costs should be amended by the process laid down in Ss. 8 and 9. In the present case, the result will be that the amount decreed for costs will carry interest at six per cent. per annum with effect from 1st October, 1937.

In S. 23, the clause 'notwithstanding the sale has been confirmed' in no way affects the main provisions of the section and obviously cannot be used to introduce any new provisos, as for example, 'that a sale shall not have been followed by delivery of property'. A landholder under S. 3 (5) of Madras Act IV of 1938 is a person who owns the estate and includes every person entitled to collect the rents of the estate. The judgment of the Court was delivered by

worth, J.

The petitioner was at the time of his application the landholder of more than one estate. The total peshkush payable in respect of these estates exceeded Rs. 500, but no one of the estates paid so much as Rs. 500 peshkush. Petitioner contends therefore that he is not the landholder of an estate in respect of which estate a sum exceeding Rs. 500 is paid as peshkush. We are unable to accept this contention. Reading the definition of landholder with S. 3 (35) of the Madras General Clauses Act, we must hold that the definition is to be read as covering a landholder, of an estate or estates, in respect of which estate or estates a sum exceeding Rs. 500 is paid as peshkush. That is the view taken by the Court below.

It is also suggested that the petitioner comes within the definition of agriculturist because in one of the estates standing in his name he is not the real owner. We cannot accept this contention. A landholder under S. 3 (5) of the Madras Estates Land Act is a person owning an estate and includes every person entitled to collect the rents of the estate. There is no doubt that in respect of the estate which was purchased in Court auction in the name of the applicant, he was either the owner or the person entitled to collect the rents.

In the result therefore the Civil Revision Petition is dismissed with costs.

The judgement of the Court was delivered by

Patanjali Sastri, J.—The question that falls to be decided in this Civil Revision Petition is whether S. 15 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act is applicable to the surplus reserved as payable to the mortgagor under a possessory mortgage after appropriating part of the usufruct in lieu of interest due on the mortgage money. The petitioner's predecessor-in-interest held the lands here in question on a kanom granted by the respondent on May 25, 1911, for Rs. 1,137-2-4. In consideration of a further advance of Rs. 862-13-8 making up a total of Rs. 2,000 the respondent executed on August 17, 1925, the deed (Ex. A) styled 'Kaivasam panayam' (possessory mortgage) under which the mortgagee was to appropriate, out of an estimated yield of 490 paras of paddy, 200 paras in lieu of interest on the mortgage money, pay 60 paras for assessment on the property and then pay the balance of 230 paras to the respondent as 'panaya purappad' in two instalments during the harvest season. The document further provided that if the 'panaya purappad' and assessment were allowed to fall into arrears, such arrears together with interest at the rate fixed should be applied in payment of the mortgage money, the value of paddy being calculated at the current market rate. There was also a provision charging such arrears of 'purappad', assessment and interest on the crops standing on the properties, the improvements thereon, and also the mortgage money. The 'panaya purappad' fell into arrears and the petitioner who purchased the mortgagee's rights in execution sale and obtained delivery of the properties claims the benefit of S. 15 of Madras Act IV of 1938, depositing the 'purappad' due for the year 1937-1938. It is not disputed that the petitioner is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act and the only question is whether the 'purappad' reserved under the 'panayam' deed as payable to the 'jenmi' is 'rent' within the meaning of the definition in S. 3, cl. (iii) of the Act, so as to entitle the petitioner to the benefit of S. 15. The Court below held that it was not and dismissed the petitioner's application. The respondent, on the contends that Ex. A is nothing more than a mortgage with an undertaking by the mortgagee to mortgagor the estimated surplus profits after paying nt due on the land and appropriating a specified ie usufruct in lieu of interest. The use of the word t is urged, is inconclusive and stress is laid on the ready referred to that if the purappad is allowed to ears, the same with interest shall be applied in the mortgage money. We are of opinion that the or the respondent is supported by the authorities s behalf and must prevail. In *Venkateswara v. tti*¹, there was a mortgage with possession for a ht years of a piece of ground with a warehouse reon. The rent of the warehouse was fixed at per annum and it was agreed that out of this rtgagee should appropriate Rs. 14 towards the interest on the principal, and pay Rs. 2-12-0 as mortgagor. Sometime after the mortgage the was destroyed by fire but not owing to any fault or ie mortgagee who thereupon ceased to pay the rent the mortgagor. In a suit by the latter to recover ther with arrears of rent on the ground of default of the rent, the question arose whether there was a tenancy apart from the mortgage and the mortgagor to call upon the mortgagee to pay the rent reserved ding the destruction of the premises. The Court ere was no agreement to let the premises apart from ge and dismissed the suit as the plaintiff was not a to redeem the mortgage. Innes, J., observed:

of the agreement was not a letting of the premises with a but a usufructuary mortgage of the premises with a certain of the income of it made payable to plaintiff."

swami Aiyar, J., put the matter thus:

transaction between the parties is really a mortgage with posses- m of eight years. The contract to pay Rs. 2½ per mensem is rather a subsidiary arrangement regarding the disposal of the surplus usufruct, or, in other words, an agreement to treat as money had and received for the plaintiff's use the surplus which, as mortgagee, the defendant must otherwise credit to the principal amount of the mortgage, than an independent engagement to pay rent as in an ordinary lease. I take the defendant to have really got into possession not as a tenant—not because he engaged to pay the plaintiff Rs. 2½ a month for the use of the warehouse—but as a mortgagee, and because of the assignment of the usufruct in lieu of interest amounting to Rs. 14 per mensem."

The other decision cited for the respondent, *Immani Seshayya v. Dronamraju Lakshminarasimha Rao Pantulu*¹ takes more or less the same view of a transaction of the kind now before us. Both the learned Judges held that it was only a possessory mortgage and not a lease.

In view of these decisions, we hold that the amount which the petitioner was bound to pay under Ex. A is not 'rent' in the proper sense of the term, and does not fall within the mischief of S. 15 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. The Civil Revision Petition is dismissed with costs.

In this appeal the deceased's statements provide nothing more than grounds for supporting that the deceased suspected the accused of having betrayed his wife's sister in a civil case. They in no way are to be associated with the actual murder.

Evidence of these statements should have been excluded.

There was thus no admissible evidence of motive on the record. On the other hand as we have indicated there was evidence showing the contrary and friendship between two persons is not consistent with a desire on the part of one to murder the other in the absence of evidence to the contrary. On the day in question it is in our view beyond dispute that the deceased and the appellant set out together to go to Mentada village. We think they were going out together on a drinking out. This is probalised by the evidence of the deceased's wife and in fact there is the evidence of P. Ws. 5 and 6 that at about dusk on the evening in question the appellant and the deceased were drinking together in Mentada. P. W. 4 also proves that the deceased and the appellant went together because he lent a stick to the deceased and pieces of that stick were found at the place of the murder. It is convenient to pause here and say that at about 3 P. M. on the 3rd August, that is, the next day after these two went to Mentada together, P.W. 21 found in his field which is marked on the plan the body of a man. He at once sent a report Ex. H to the Village Munsif. The body was identified as that of Thalada Ramawami and it is beyond doubt that he had been murdered. The medical officer P.W. 1 in his certificate Ex. A describes the injuries. The skull was fractured in no less than four places. In all there were ten injuries, cuts and bruises; and all the injuries, says the doctor, could have been caused by blows with a stick and in fact portions of a broken stick were found upon the scene.

So the position is that the appellant and the deceased were together in Mentada on that evening at about dusk. The next evidence of their movements is given by P.Ws. 14, 15 and 16 and their evidence can be summarised very shortly. They were proceeding in a jutka from Gajapatinagaram railway station to narasayya,

In re.

Mockett, J.

Mentada. There were three people by the side of the road near the place where the body was found. A little beyond, that is to say, on the Mentada side P.W. 14 saw the appellant and the deceased. P.Ws. 15 and 16 saw the deceased and another man the difference being that P.W. 14 identifies the appellant, the other two are unable to do so. P.W. 15 says that they were reeling along the road as if they were drunk which is entirely consistent with the information which P.Ws. 5 and 6 have given about what they were doing in Mentada. So P.Ws. 14 to 16 prove that at a spot they passed three unknown men whom they later identified as the 2nd, 3rd and 4th accused waiting by the side of the road and beyond them were coming towards the village the deceased and the appellant and we have no doubt that they were both under the influence of drink. The only other evidence of what happened on the road is given by P.W. 18. With regard to P.W. 18, evidence has been led by the defence and his cross-examination casts some doubt on whether he was there at all. However the probabilities are that he was there. But his evidence amounts to no more than this. He says that on the road between Chittavalasa and Mentada he saw accused 1, 2 and 3—he does not mention the 4th accused—and Ramaswami fighting and abusing each other. He goes on:

“I did not see who beat whom. They were all fighting together. I ran away as I was afraid.”

Ten days later only he says did he hear of Ramaswamy's death and four days later he was examined by the Sub-Inspector. He was able to identify accused 2 and 3. And that is the evidence led by the Crown.

The appellant followed a course which might well be followed more often. It must be remembered that in view of the provisions of S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, it is not possible for an arrested person to make a statement to the police which can be used in evidence at the trial. Evidence of what an accused person said when arrested—often so valuable to innocent accused—according to English experience is denied to the defence under the Indian procedure. But an accused person can—if he knows it—make a statement of his version of the case before a magistrate and this is what the appellant at once did. He made a statement under S. 164, Criminal Procedure Code, giving his version of what happened and his story is consistent with the case for the prosecution. He says that on the day in question he proceeded to Mentada with the deceased and that on their way home he saw Muppadi Krishnamurti who is P. W. 14 thereby bearing out what that witness said and P. W. 14 was in his jutka as he had stated. According to the appellant the deceased said that he did not wish to be seen in the state in which they were, that is, under the influence of drink and they stepped aside from the path. A little further the three other accused Bugatha Sanyasi, Kalla Ramaswami and Divakalla Ramudu were waiting and according to him they set upon Ramaswami, put a rope round his neck and beat him with sticks and a pen-knife with a folding blade. He says that the pala stick to which reference has been made and which had been lent by P. W. 4 was broken. According to the appellant these three men threatened him not to say 'anywhere' which presumably means anything to anyone. Taking this evidence at its highest, we only have a statement by P. W. 18 that a melee took place on that road that night. There is nothing to show that the appellant was doing anything hostile to the deceased. Indeed the probabilities are from the fact that they had been out for the evening together under circumstances that made for friendship that he would have been on the deceased's side rather than against him. It is not impossible that having seen this man attacked in this manner and living as he did in the village with the three persons concerned he might have been afraid that he might meet a similar fate and quite wrongly kept silence. We are not however dealing with what was the proper procedure for a village officer under the circumstances but with the question whether he has been proved to be guilty of murder. The learned Sessions Judge has arrived at the conclusion that he is guilty for the following reasons. Holding rightly that Ex. C was admissible (vide the observations of Lord Atkin at page 767 of the report to which we have referred) the learned Sessions Judge referring to Ex. C says:

"It does prove beyond doubt that not only was the first accused with the deceased when the deceased was last seen near the place where he was murdered, but that he continued to be with him until he had been beaten to death. The first accused is a karnam and a man in position of authority. It cannot be believed that he was taken by surprise, stood by horrified and then kept quiet because he was afraid of the threats of his assailants."

(With regard to this it must be remembered there was evidence that he was very much under the influence of drink.)

"The only conclusion that can be drawn is that he either took part in the beating himself or was a party to it. I am of opinion, therefore, that the prosecution has proved its case against the first accused."

v.

The Canara Banking Corporation, Limited, a Respondent.

Banking Company incorporated under Act VI of 1882 on the 28th May, 1906, having its registered office at Udipi, South Canara District.

Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913), S. 34 and S. 38 (a)—Expulsion of member—Name from the membership register struck off—Whether expulsion sufficient to empower a transfer of shares—Articles amended without notice to shareholder—Retention of membership in spite of special resolution—Striking out a name if omission from register within meaning of S. 38 (a).

The striking out of the name of a shareholder in the register of members amounts to an omission of his name within the meaning of S. 38 (1) of the Indian Companies Act.

Where a shareholder was expelled by a special resolution of the general body of a Banking Corporation under the Articles of Association for wrongful conduct, but since there could be no forfeiture of shares under the circumstances, the Articles of the company had to be amended and were in fact altered subsequently without notice to the expelled shareholder, by which the company could in effect force an expelled member to sell his shares to any person at any price fixed under the Articles,

Held, that on the date of expulsion there was no power in the Directors of the company to transfer shares in the absence of an instrument of transfer, and to do it was clearly ultra vires of S. 34 of the Companies Act.

Again, the alteration of Articles after the date of the resolution for expelling the member could not in any way be binding on him. As the powers of the company at the date when the petitioner was purported to be expelled did not empower it to deprive him of his share and while he remained a shareholder he could also remain a member, it followed that the resolution of expulsion had no effect. Therefore the sale of his share in law could not be carried out. Further he could not be compelled under any of the provisions of the Articles to transfer his share to any other person. The petitioner would be placed in the position in which he had always been—a shareholder of the company.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition by a shareholder of the Canara Banking Corporation, Ltd., under S. 38 (1) of the Companies Act. This section, so far as it is material, provides that if the name of any person is without sufficient cause entered in or omitted from the register of members of a company, the person aggrieved may apply to the Court for rectification of the register. The petitioner is the holder of one share only and the company at a general meeting purported to act under Art. 173 of the Articles of Association and expelled him from membership. This Article provides to the effect that if any shareholder unjustly or unlawfully has recourse to law in any matter whatever connected with the Corporation, he shall render himself liable to expulsion and on such expulsion he shall never again be admitted into the Corporation.

The petitioner preferred a complaint to the District Magistrate of South Canara seeking sanction under S. 196-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure to prosecute some Directors and ex-Directors of the company for conspiracy in the preparation of a balance sheet or balance sheets of the company. The learned Magistrate refused to grant the process sought and in the course of his order he gave the following reasons for his decision. The respondents (Directors) were all highly respectable gentlemen; the balance sheet has been accorded sanction at a general body meeting of the shareholders; petitions to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies and to Government to initiate an enquiry into the affairs of the company had been rejected, and he had been forced to think that the petitioner was working against the Bank out of sheer malice. He added that from the attitude of the Registrar and the Government it was apparent that there was no reason to think that the respondents in the proceedings before the Magistrate had any reason whatever to conspire to cheat the shareholders. It is said and not disputed that a copy of the order of the Magistrate was circulated to all the shareholders of the company. A meeting was called on the 20th July, 1939. The petitioner attended and objected to the meeting continuing, nevertheless a resolution was passed that, in view of his conduct in filing an application before the District Magistrate of South Canara seeking sanction to prosecute some of the Directors and ex-Directors, thereby acting contrary to Art. 173 as seen from the order of the District Magistrate, he be expelled from the membership of the Corporation. On the date when this resolution was passed the petitioner was undoubtedly a member of the company. There was no power for the company to deal with the share or shares which were held by a person whom the company at a general meeting purported to expel from membership. The Articles provide for forfeiture of shares by members in certain contingencies but these contingencies do not include purported expulsion of a member under Art. 173. Ordinarily, a company is unable to sell its own shares but when shares are forfeited it can resell or dispose of them as provided in the Articles.

Madhava
Ramachandra Kamath
v.
Canara
Banking

Ltd.

Subsequent to the passing of the resolution of expulsion the company has altered its Articles by making an addition to Art. 173. Notice of the meeting at which these Articles were changed was not given to the petitioner. Under the additional Articles provision is made by which the company can, in effect, force an expelled member to sell his shares to any person at a price which is fixed under the provisions of the Articles and the company is enabled to authorise a Director to sign the necessary transfer instrument on behalf of such transferor if he fails to do so. S. 34 (3) of the Companies Act provides that it shall not be lawful to register a transfer of shares unless a proper instrument of transfer duly stamped and executed by the transferor and the transferee has been delivered to the company. There are of course occasions when the transferor does not or cannot sign, such as when a Court sale has been held. In that event O. 21, r. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the Judge or an officer of Court directed by him signing the transfer instrument. Art. 52 (3) of the Companies Articles, it would seem, purports to confer upon the Directors of the company power to transfer shares in spite of the absence of an instrument of transfer. It says:

"Unless sanctioned by the Board of Directors, it shall not be lawful for the Corporation to register a transfer of shares unless a proper instrument of transfer duly stamped and executed by the transferor and the transferee has been delivered to the Corporation."

If this Article does purport to confer power on the Directors to transfer shares in the absence of an instrument of transfer, it is clearly ultra vires of S. 34 of the Companies Act.

remedy only when the name of any person is without sufficient cause entered in or omitted from the register of members. The name of the petitioner was included in the register of members and was struck out when his expulsion took place or when the company purported to force him to sell his share to some other person. Some two months after the resolution expelling him, the company wrote to the petitioner, on the 23rd October, 1939, that his share had that day been transferred to Mr. V. Achutha Srinivasa Kamath, and a cheque for Rs. 70 was sent to him as the price for such share. The petitioner wrote objecting to the action of the company and said that he did not propose to cash the cheque and he has not done so. This action by the company took place after the addition to the Articles had been made to which I have referred earlier. The striking out of the name of the petitioner from the register containing the names of the members apparently would have taken place at or about the date when the company wrote to the petitioner that his share had been sold to the transferee. Learned Counsel on behalf of the company contended that the word 'omitted' in S. 38 (1) (a) does not include the striking out of the name of a member which had been previously in the register. When the name of a person, who is a member of the company, has been struck out, the effect is the same as if his name had never been entered. The striking out of his name in the register thus causes his name to be omitted from it and I hold that, when a person's name has been struck out or expunged, then it is an omission of his name within the meaning of the section.

A further point was taken on behalf of the company by learned counsel that the present petition is abortive inasmuch as the name of the transferee has not been added as a party. In my view there has been no valid or legal transfer of the share which the petitioner held in the company to any transferee and he is still the holder of the share; therefore his name must be included in the list of members. The petitioner still holds the certificate recording that he is the holder of one share in the company and I direct that there be a rectification of the register and the company will add to the names of members that of the petitioner. The relief which I am granting in this petition is to place the petitioner in the position in which he has always been—a shareholder of the company. The petitioner is entitled to his costs against the company.

Payments and endorsements by such vendee—If sufficient to keep alive the

A mortgagor sold property not included in the mortgage and directed his vendee to pay and discharge the mortgage. The vendee, in pursuance of the direction made certain payments the last of which was within twelve years from the last payment made by the mortgagor. The mortgagor had alienated the mortgaged properties also to strangers when he made the last payment. In a suit on the mortgage,

Held, a direction or power to discharge a debt does not make the donee of the power—the vendee—an agent duly authorised to make a part payment so as to keep alive the debt. Alagappa Chettiar v. Subramania Pandia Thevar, (1914) 26 M.L.J. 509, followed. Apart from any question of agency the vendee would not be a "person liable to pay the debt" within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act. [Bradshaw v. Widdrington, (1902) 2 Ch. 430, held not applicable to construction of Indian Limitation Act, S. 20.] Case-law discussed.

Payment and endorsement by the mortgagor subsequent to those by the vendee, though a ratification of the acts of the vendee, being on a date when the right to enforce the mortgage was barred by limitation is not binding on the mortgagor's sons and the alienees of the mortgaged property. The provisions of the Indian Contract Act relating to agency are not meant to be exhaustive and S. 200 and other provisions relating to ratification do not affect the general principle of the law of agency that the general rule as

Venkataramana Rao, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. The relevant facts are few and not in dispute. One Jaya Rao since deceased executed a deed of mortgage to one Sundaram Aiyar on 18th June, 1919. In execution of a decree against the said Sundaram Aiyar the plaintiff on 10th April, 1935, purchased the rights under the said mortgage-deed. After giving credit to certain payments received towards interest and principal, the plaintiff sues for recovery of the balance due thereunder. The amount due on the date of the plaint was Rs. 9,432. The plaintiff waived Rs. 432 and claimed only Rs. 9,000. Defendants 1 to 3 are the sons of the mortgagor Jaya Rao; the fourth defendant is a divided brother of Jaya Rao and defendants 5 to 8 are alienees from Jaya Rao of some of the properties claiming under alienations subsequent to the date of the mortgage. The main defence was one of limitation. To save limitation the plaintiff relied on the five following payments endorsed on the deed of mortgage: Rs. 400 on 15th July, 1922 (Ex. A-2); Rs. 700 on 20th May, 1923 (Ex. A-3); Rs. 150 on 4th June, 1923 (Ex. A-4); Rs. 125 on 20th April, 1924 (Ex. A-5); and Rs. 5 on 16th December, 1935 (Ex. A-6). The first four payments were made and signed by the fourth defendant and the last payment was by Jaya Rao and signed by him. The case for the plaintiff is that three years after the date of the said mortgage Jaya Rao sold certain property belonging to him but not comprised in the deed of mortgage to the fourth defendant and another by a sale deed dated 23rd June, 1922 (Ex. C) and directed him to pay and discharge the said mortgage, that the payments were made and signed by the fourth defendant in pursuance of Ex. C, that the last payment made by Jaya Rao was within twelve years of the last person deriving title from him and who could have been sued by the mortgagee; fourth defendant would not come under any of these categories; he was at best an agent empowered to discharge the debt and not to keep it alive by a part payment; the alleged ratification is not valid as it would operate to the prejudice of his clients. Before dealing with these contentions, it is necessary to find the relationship of the vendees under Ex. C and therefore of the fourth defendant to Jaya Rao, the mortgagor. Ex. C, so far as is material for the purpose of the present discussion, runs thus:

Thinnappa
v.
Krishna

Rao, J.

"Deed of absolute sale executed, on 9th Ani of Thunthubi, corresponding to the 23rd June, 1922, to you, namely, (1) Putti K. Sethu Rao and (2) Putti Dasu Rao by Putti Jaya Rao the undermentioned property has, this day, been sold to you and the amount received is Rs. 4,000. Particulars of receipt of this sum of rupees four thousand: As I have directed you to pay and discharge the amount of principal and interest due under the mortgage deed for Rs. 3,000 executed by me in favour of Sundaram Aiyar, residing at Karur, amount paid to me is Rs. 3,400. As I have directed you to pay and discharge the amount due by me to the Co-operative Credit Bank at Andankoil, amount paid to me is Rs. 600. As in all Rupees four thousand was paid to me as aforesaid, you shall yourselves hold and enjoy the undermentioned nanja lands from this date hereditarily from son to grandson and so on in succession with powers of alienation by way of gift, exchange, sale."

The substance of the transaction as disclosed by the language of the document is that from and out of the consideration money of Rs. 4,000 the vendees were directed to discharge two debts, namely, a sum of Rs. 3,400 in discharge of the suit mortgage which was then the amount due and payable thereunder and Rs. 600 in discharge of a debt due to the Co-operative Credit Bank at Andankoil. Prima facie it is a mandate by the vendor to the vendees to put an end to the said debts. The relationship is therefore one of agency. The question is, does it confer a power to keep alive the debt? Under S. 20 of the Limitation Act, the agent whose payment would keep alive the debt must be one who was duly authorised to make the part payment of interest or principal. Ex. C confers only a power to discharge and extinguish the debt. A power to extinguish the debt would not, in our opinion, carry with it a power to keep alive the debt. Our High Court has consistently taken the view that a direction or power to discharge a debt does not make the donee of the power an agent authorised to make a part payment or as to keep alive the debt. *Veerappa Chettiar*¹.) In *Alagappa Chettiar v. Subramania Pandia Thevan*², the facts were as follows. Defendants 1 and 2 in that case executed a deed of mortgage in favour of the third defendant therein for Rs. 26,000. It was alleged in the deed of mortgage that from and out of Rs. 26,000 which formed the consideration of the mortgage a sum of Rs. 10,920 was stated to have been received as follows:—

"Defendants 1 and 2 have executed two registered bonds on 14th December, 1896 and 17th March, 1897, for Rs. 2,000 and Rs. 4,000 respectively in favour of the plaintiff's assignees. The sum received by us in the matter of our having given you permission to pay off and obtain return of the same is Rs. 10,920."

In pursuance of this deed, the mortgagee paid a sum of Rs. 4,170 towards interest on the bond dated 17th March, 1897. The question was whether this payment of interest by the said third defendant would keep alive the debt due under the said bond. Wallis and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., held that it would not, observing that though the mortgagee had authority to pay off the debt in full he had no authority to make a part payment of interest as such so as to bring the case within S. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. The principle of this case was applied consistently in subsequent decisions: *Balaguruswami Naicken v. Guruswami Naicken*³ (Devadoss and Wallace, JJ.); *Ramaswami v. Kasinatha*⁴ (Kumaraswami Sastri and Curgenven, JJ.); and *Subbakka v. Venkata Setti*⁵, (Ramesam, J.). If the principle of these decisions is to be followed, there can be no question that the part payments made by the fourth defendant would not be payments by an agent duly authorised within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act.

But Mr. Sitarama Rao contends that apart from any doctrine of agency the fourth defendant having under Ex. C become liable to pay the mortgage debt is a person liable to pay the debt within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act. He very strongly relied on *Bradshaw v. Widdrington*⁶ in support of his contention and particularly the observations of Buckley, J., in that case with which we shall presently deal. He also relied on certain passages from English text-writers who referred to *Bradshaw v. Widdrington*⁶ as establishing the proposition he is contending for. 95.) We may point out at once that the case in Bradshaw v. Widdrington,¹ was noticed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in *National Bank of Upper India, Ltd. v. Bansidhar*² where their Lordships had to deal with a question of part payment on facts almost similar to the said case. They did not apply the principle enunciated by Buckley, J., because they considered it unnecessary in the view they took of the facts, namely, the person who made the payments was the duly authorized agent of the debtor to make the payment. They however remarked thus at page 9 with reference to the English case of *Bradshaw v. Widdrington*¹ and other decisions relied upon :

"Their Lordships do not think it necessary to discuss the applicability of these cases to the construction of the Indian Act whether the English cases to which reference has been made above would engraft a larger principle upon the section may possibly have to be considered on some future occasion. Their Lordships note that Farwell, L.J., in *Re Lacey*³ appeared to regard *Bradshaw v. Widdrington*¹ as one only of implied agency."

Before considering the applicability of *Bradshaw v. Widdrington*¹ to the construction of S. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, we think it necessary to examine whether there was any warrant even in English Law in support of the said principle. A reference to the history of the English legislation relating to part payments may not be out of place in this connection because until 1902 as noticed by Buckley, J., himself no case has gone the length of enunciating the principle in the way he has done. Under early English Law the only statute of limitation was that relating to simple contract debts, 21 Jac. 1, c. 16. Under that statute the remedy to recover a debt became barred after six years. There was no provision relating to acknowledgment or part payment of a debt. The decisions evolved a rule that if there was acknowledgment of a debt which amounted to a fresh promise to pay the debt, a cause of action could be laid thereon, that is, not on the original debt but on the new promise to pay. It was generally assumed that the acknowledgment of a debt implied a promise to pay and from the part payment of interest, an acknowledgment was implied thus implying a fresh promise to pay. Lord Tenterden's Act, 9 Geo. IV, c. 14, modified the effect of the decisions relating to acknowledgments by providing that acknowledgments of a debt must be in writing signed by the party charged but left the question of part payments untouched. As the measure of the creditor's right is thus based on the new promise, it evidently followed that the acknowledgment or part payment must be by a person liable under the contract to pay the debt or his real or personal representative apart from the doctrine of agency. (Vide Lightwood on Time Limit, page 341.) There was no special statute of limitation relating to specialty debts or debts charged upon land though Courts of Law and Equity established twenty years as the period after which they would presume payment. It was only in 1833, two statutes were passed, namely, 3 and 4 William IV, c. 27, which by Ss. 40 and 42 provided for the recovery of sums of money charged upon land and arrears of interest in respect thereof and 3 and 4 William IV, c. 42 which provided for the recovery of specialty debts. The relevant provisions of these statutes in so far as they have got a bearing on the question in issue run thus:

3 and 4 William IV, c. 27:

"40. After the said 31st day of December, 1833, no action or suit, or other proceeding shall be brought to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment or lien or otherwise charged upon or payable out of any land—but within twenty years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same unless in the meantime some part of the principal money or some interest thereon shall have been paid or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing, signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable or his agent to the person entitled thereto or his agent"

"42. After the said 31st day of December, 1833, no arrears of rent or of interest in respect of any sum of money charged upon or payable out of any land, shall be recovered by any distress, action or suit but within six years next after the same respectively shall have become due, or next after an acknowledgment of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same was payable or his agent"

3 and 4 William IV, c. 42:

"3. All actions of covenant or debt upon any bond or other specialty shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation hereinafter expressed and not after"

"5. Provided always, that if any acknowledgment shall have been made either by writing signed by the party liable by virtue of such indenture, specialty or recognisance, or his agent, or by part payment, or part satisfaction on account of any principal or interest being then due thereon within twenty years after such acknowledgment by writing or part payment or part satisfaction as aforesaid."

It will be seen that the acknowledgments and part payments are put on the same footing and no difference is made between the part payment of principal or interest in regard to its legal effect. The relevant expressions whose interpretation may have a bearing on the construction of the Indian enactment are 'the person by whom the same shall be payable or his agent' which are contained in Ss. 40 and 42 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 27 and the words 'by the party liable' contained in S. 5 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 42. This was the prevailing law until 1874 and S. 40 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 27 was replaced by S. 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, which substituted twelve years for twenty years. In 1857 in *Roddam v. Morley*¹, S. 5 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 42, that is, the statute relating to specialty debt became the subject of judicial interpretation. The question in that case was whether a payment by a tenant for life of certain land under a will would save limitation in respect of a debt due under a bond by an ancestor by which he and his heirs were bound as against the remaindermen. It was held by Lord Cranworth overruling Sir Page Wood that the devisee would be a person liable to pay the debt within the meaning of S. 5 of the Act. Before giving his decision Lord Cranworth referred the matter to the opinion of two Common Law Judges, Mr. Justice Williams and Mr. Justice Crowder, who gave their opinion that the devisee would properly be said to be liable by virtue of the indenture as either the real or personal representative within the meaning of the Act. The Lord Chancellor accepting that opinion remarked that the person who would save limitation must be a person who was interested in making the payment; and the question was whether a devisee for life was a party so interested. He pointed out that though under the terms of the bond the heirs of the ancestor were bound inasmuch as the property in the hands of the devisee was liable to be proceeded against, he would be a person liable to be sued and therefore a person liable to pay the debt. Under the law then prevailing both the heirs and the devisee were liable to be sued and they were both interested in resisting the demand of the creditor. He therefore deduced the principle that where there are several persons liable in respect of a debt payment by any one of them would be enough to save limitation because the statutory power did not require that the payment must be by all the persons liable. The principle of this case was later applied in English Courts in the case of simple contract debts in *Hollingshead v. Webster*²,

"The right principle to adopt is, that so far as the real estate is concerned, there is no one else but the tenant for life to pay the interest; that in making such payment he represents the whole estate; that the payment is an admission of the liability to the debt affecting the real estate of which he is in possession."

Subsequent to this decision *Roddam v. Morley*¹ Lord Westbury in *Bolding v. Lane*² had to construe the words, "the person by whom the same was payable" in S. 42, 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 27. He observed:

"These words do not denote merely the persons liable to pay the debt but all the persons against whom the payment of such arrears may be enforced by any action or suit and by whom therefore as they have a right to pay such interest, interest may be properly said to be payable....."

These words appear to have been selected as a description capable of including not only every person liable to be sued at law but every person who having interest in the land sought to be charged may be properly sued as a defendant in a suit in were held to be persons by whom money was payable is that they are all persons against whom an action at law or suit in equity could be maintained by the creditor for the recovery of the debt. It was on this basis Lord Westbury rested his judgment both in *Bolding v. Lane*¹ and *Chinnery v. Evans*². That was also the basis of the decision in *Roddam v. Morley*³, the principle of which is thus put by Farwell, L.J.:

"*Roddam v. Morley*³ appears to me to rest upon the joint liability of a number of persons standing in equal peril of suit and who all benefit by the discharge of all or any part of such liability." (Lacey, In re: *Howard v. Lightfoot*⁴.)

Payment made by the agent of the above persons will be equally operative. It is useful in this connection to refer to the case *Chinnery v. Evans*², which clearly illustrates the doctrine of agency for the purpose of the said statutes. In that case lands in Cork, Kerry and Limerick were mortgaged by the owner. Subsequent to the mortgage the owner sold the Kerry estate to one M. Some time later he demised the lands in Cork to Chinnery who subsequently obtained by sale the estate of Kerry. At the instance of the mortgagee a receiver was appointed and he was only able to obtain possession of the Limerick estate. From the rents and profits collected out of the said lands, he made payments of interest towards the mortgage. The question was whether such payments would save limitation even as against Chinnery in whom the lands in Cork and Kerry were vested. It was held that the payments saved limitation on the ground that they must be deemed to have been made by the receiver as the agent of the mortgagor. Lord Westbury in the course of the judgment made the following observations at page 1282:

"I think no reasonable doubt can be entertained, that under the statute the receiver in the receipt of the rents of the Limerick estate is, in point of fact as well as of law, the receiver of the mortgagor, the owner of the estate subject to the mortgage, and that any payment made by the receiver in pursuance of the order, is payment in law by the legal agent of the person liable to pay."

This case is therefore a clear authority for the position that payment made by a person who represents the mortgagor will be sufficient to save limitation, that the agency need not arise out of a contract and the agency may arise by operation of law. The scope of this decision was explained by Jessel,

there arose under the statute of limitations 3 and 4 Will. IV, the question to be decided was whether a payment in order to satisfy the statute must be made by the party chargeable or his agent that it must. Then arose the question whether the payments were so made. The payments were made by a receiver, who, had been appointed at the instance of the mortgagee, and the question whether such payments were made by or on behalf of the mortgagor. The payments therefore were payments made by an agent. The decision is that payments, in order to take advantage of the statute, must be so made."

It is therefore clear that Jessel, M.R., understands the case *very v. Evans*² as a case of agency. One thing that is clear from the decisions is that payments in order to operate as a discharge under the statute must not be made by a stranger, that is, a person making the payment must be either a party to the contract by which the debt was created or interested in the debt, and the person who would be liable for the payment of the said debt must be the person in possession of which the person interested becomes the debtor. In dealing with the question whether a payment made by a stranger would keep alive the mortgage, Lord Westbury remarked thus:

It is necessary to deal with such an improbable case as that; to it, I think, would be this: that money paid, that is money paid by a stranger to the contract under which it was paid, to the debtor, would not have the characteristics and the effect of a payment. It would be a voluntary tender, a gift or donation, and not a payment, and the party not in any respect subject to liability, to the individual to whom it is paid, and he is entitled to receive from the person so rendering it any part of the sum which it is supposed would be so paid." (*Chimney v. Evans*³.)

It is also made very clear by the decision of the Privy Council in *Howie v. Wilson*³. In that case one Howie and one Wilson gave a joint and several bond to one C to secure the repayment of a sum of £1,000 advanced by C. As between Howie and Wilson, White was a surety but they were both jointly and severally liable to the obligee. On the same day both Howie and Wilson mortgaged some property to the obligee to secure the repayment of the sum. White's mortgage contained a condition that if Howie or Wilson or either of them, their, or either of their heirs, administrators or assigns shall pay to C the sum borrowed, the mortgage deed is to be void, otherwise to remain in full force.

A question arose whether payments made by Howie would prevent time from running in favour of White in respect of the said mortgage. It was contended that Howie was a stranger to White's mortgage and therefore any payment made by him could not save limitation. Their Lordships negatived this contention and held that that view was quite inconsistent with the terms of the contract "by which Howie was bound to pay the debt and was expressly named as a person entitled to come in and work a defeasance of White's conveyance." The observations of their Lordships are very significant and instructive on the construction of the statutes 3 and 4 Will., c. 27, Ss. 40 and 42. After referring to the case of *Chinnery v. Evans*¹, Lord Hobhouse remarked as follows at page 646:

Thinnappa
Chettiar

Rao, J.

"They consider that money brought in by a stranger to the mortgage contract would not have the characteristics or legal quality of payment; it would be a gift from a person not entitled to tender it to a person not entitled to demand it In this case their Lordships think it sufficient to say that payments made by a person who under the terms of the contract is entitled to make a tender, and from whom the mortgagee is bound to accept a tender of money for the defeasance or redemption of the mortgage, are payments which by S. 30 give a new starting point for the lapse of time. And Howie was clearly such a person."

In another portion of the judgment, he observed as follows:

"Their Lordships have not been referred to any case where it has been decided that payments made by some person concerned to answer the debt has been held to be insufficient to keep a right alive against the party charged in the suit merely because he was not that party or his agent."

It is clear in what sense their Lordships used the words 'person concerned to answer the debt.' Howie was the principal debtor as between himself and White and was concerned to answer the debt. It seems to follow from this decision that if a stranger to the contract were to make the payment it can only be supported on the ground of agency; otherwise the payments made by him could not save limitation. As their Lordships clearly say, the payment made by such a stranger would not have the characteristics or legal quality of payment. This was the state of the English Law till *Bradshaw v. Widdrington*². As that case formed the subject of considerable discussion at the Bar, we shall state what the facts of that case are and what the scope of that decision is. On August 1, 1879, J. E. Bradshaw executed a mortgage of Fair Oaks estate in favour of one Moss to secure £5,171-14-6 with barred as any payment towards interest by or on behalf of William Bradshaw could not save limitation. It was held that the mortgage was subsisting by reason of the payments made by or on behalf of William Bradshaw. Buckley, J., stated the principles which according to him should be applied thus:

2. (1902) 2 Ch. 430.

"Now looking upon it upon principle, in the first instance, apart from authority, it seems to me that all principle and common sense lead to the conclusion that it is sufficient that the payment be made by a person, who as between himself and the mortgagor is bound to pay. You have to see whether the mortgagor has made an admission. That is the basis of it all." (*Bradshaw v. Widdrington*¹.)

After remarking that he was not able to put his hand upon a case in which that exact point had arisen, the learned Judge proceeded to justify his conclusion from three decisions, namely, *Chinnery v. Evans*², *Harlock v. Ashberry*³ and *Lewin v. Wilson*⁴. He said that the statute would be justified if the payment was made by the person entitled to pay—not a person bound as between himself and the mortgagee, but a person as between himself and the mortgagor. He concluded the judgment thus:

"For the present purpose I am assuming that William Bradshaw was not his agent. Assuming that he was not his agent, still it was made by William who was, I think, as between himself and his father, the person who was bound to pay. Inasmuch as that was so, William's payment, made in pursuance of his contractual obligations towards his father, was, it appears to me, his father's admission of liability."

It will be seen from a perusal of the judgment of Buckley, J., that he rests his decision both on the ground that the son is an agent of the father and also apart from the question of agency. The decision on the basis of agency is intelligible enough by reason of the contract between the father and the son; the father put forward the son to act for him in the matter of the payment of the debt. But apart from the question of agency, it is difficult to understand how the payment made by William Bradshaw could be a legal payment to use the language of the Judicial Committee in *Lewin v. Wilson*¹. When Buckley, J., says that William Bradshaw's payment made in pursuance of the contract was his father's admission of liability, it is tantamount to saying that William Bradshaw made an admission on behalf of his father which brings in the question of agency. Therefore it is difficult to divest the notion of agency from the observations of Buckley, J., himself. At page 437, Buckley, J., remarks thus:

"If the mortgagor has himself paid, or whether he has called upon somebody else and bound somebody else towards him to pay and that person has paid, equally, as it appears to me, the mortgagor has made an admission. That is how I regard it upon principle."

If A calls on B to pay for him, A authorises B to make the payment for him. B therefore acts as A's agent in making the payment. On the general principles of law, a person can be bound by his own admissions or admissions made on his behalf by some one who is authorised to make it whether expressly or impliedly. If by reason of contractual relationship another man is put forward to do an act for him, it would be a question of implied agency. The authorisation may also result by operation of law as in the case of a receiver. Apart from agency, it is impossible to bind one man by the admissions of another. I think Farwell, J., puts the correct legal position, if I may say so with respect, when he remarked as follows on the scope of the decision in *Bradshaw v. Widdrington*¹:

"I read it as a decision on the words 'or agent' and as shewing that a man can be an 'agent' within the meaning of the Act, not only when he acts for a principal properly so called but also when he makes the payment on behalf of the debtor, because he has bound himself by deed for value so to do. I think that the case proceeds on the same reasoning as Lord Wensleydale's judgment in *Forsyth v. Bristowe*², as explained by Chitty, J. in *Dobb v. Walker*³.

In *Forsyth v. Bristowe*², the question was whether a payment by an assignee of equity of redemption would save the operation of the statute. After holding that it would, Baron Parke held that the assignee in that case could be deemed to be an agent of the mortgagor because he covenanted to pay the debt. He therefore inferred an agency by reason of the said covenant. Again, the three decisions referred to by Buckley, J., when examined do not support the broad proposition laid down by him that apart from the question of agency a person who became liable to the mortgagor (debtor) to pay the debt will be a person liable to pay the debt within the meaning of the statute. *Chinnery v. Evans*⁴ as already explained was a pure case of agency. But what Buckley, J., relies on in support of the proposition which he was enunciating was a passage from Lord Cranworth's judgment which runs thus:

"The payments in this case were not payments by a stranger; for though a receiver appointed under the Irish statute is an officer of the Court, yet he is certainly no stranger to the mortgagor; but a person paying for him and on his account what he is bound to pay."

On this Buckley, J., makes the following comment:

"The context in which that language occurs is this; if a mere stranger to the whole transaction—to both mortgagor and mortgagee—comes and pays, that is not an admission at all; if a mere outsider, a stranger to both comes and pays, that is no admission; but if a person who is not a stranger to the mortgagor (that is what Lord Cranworth says) comes and pays, that will do for the purposes of the statute."

It is not possible to understand how the statement of Lord Cranworth supports Buckley, J. When Lord Cranworth says that the receiver is not a stranger to the mortgagor, what the learned Lord means is he was the agent of the mortgagor. That is plain from the language "a person paying for him and on his account"; that is, acting as an agent. The learned Lord does not say that any person who is a stranger to the mortgage contract or to the mortgage transaction apart from any question of agency can make a payment which would be a legal payment for the purpose of the statute. Then Buckley, J., relies upon the observations of Jessel, Master of the Rolls, in *Harlock v. Ashberry*¹. The observation relied on is this :

"On principle and on authority I think that the payment to take the case out of the statute must be a payment by a person who is bound to pay the principal or interest of the mortgage money and this is not such a payment."

There Jessel, M. R., was dealing with the case of a tenant paying rent to the mortgagee. It was held that the payment by the tenant cannot be said to be a payment by a person liable to pay because as observed by Jessel, M.R., it was not a payment on behalf of a mortgagor but simply a payment which a tenant as tenant is bound to make. The learned Judge in the passage relied on was referring to the case of a receiver in *Chinnery v. Evans*² as a person who under the law was bound to make the payment as the agent of the mortgagor and on his behalf. In view of the pronouncement of Jessel, M.R., himself in *Cockburn v. Edwards*³ as to the scope of *Chinnery v. Evans*² it cannot be said that Jessel, M.R., was understanding the said case differently in *Harlock v. Ashberry*¹. Again Buckley, J., relies on the following observations of Brett, L. J., in *Harlock v. Ashberry*¹:

"On the ordinary rules of construction, and on the authority of *Chinnery v. Evans*², I feel bound to say that a payment, to come within 1 Vict., Ch. 28 must be a payment by a person liable as mortgagor or some person on his behalf or such a person as was the receiver—a person entitled to pay on his behalf."

Buckley, J., deduces from this a principle that the person entitled to pay on his behalf must be a person entitled by reason of the relations between himself and the mortgagor to pay money on his behalf. If that were so, it does not support the proposition of Buckley, J., namely, that the person bound to pay is not a person as between himself and the mortgagee but a person bound as between himself and the mortgagor. What Brett, L.J., said was that a person to make the payment must be such a person as the receiver who as described by Lord Westbury was a legal agent. The class of persons mentioned by Brett, L.J., would be persons like the guardian of an infant (vide *Annappa Gauda v. Sangadigyapa*⁴), the Court of Wards making payment on behalf of the Ward (Beti Mansfield v. Collector of Bristol) and the Committee of a lunatic on behalf of a lunatic. All these persons would be legal agents entitled to act as agents for the mortgagor as the receiver in *Chinnery v. Evans*². The other case relied on by Buckley, J., is *Lewin v. Wilson*³, where Lord Hobhouse referred to the case of a person concerned to answer the debt. In that case Howie was the principal debtor under the original contract by which the debt was borrowed. Further in one sense he can be termed as agent for White because he was designated in the mortgage contract itself as the person from whom the mortgagee could receive a tender and Howie could therefore act for White. Therefore there was no warrant in any of the cases relied on by Buckley, J., for the proposition which he laid down. When the matter went up to the Court of Appeal, Collins, M. R., practically rested his decision on the question of agency. This is clear from the following passage in his judgment:

The only question therefore is that if the payment by the fourth defendant could be justified it could only be on the ground that by virtue of the contract contained in Ex. C he must be deemed to be an agent for Jaya Rao and if he is deemed to be an agent, the part payment must be within the scope of his agency. As already indicated by me he was only an agent to extinguish the debt and not to keep alive the debt.

or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf, or where part of the principal of a debt is before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made."

It will be seen that this section makes no difference between a simple contract debt and a specialty debt or a debt charged on land like the English statutes. In regard to the payment of interest it is stated that the person by whom the payment should be made is the person liable to pay the debt; in the case of part payment of a principal, the person by whom the payment should be made is the debtor or his agent. The question is what is the interpretation to be placed upon the words 'person liable to pay.' So far as the part payment of principal is concerned, the section specifically says, 'the debtor'. Literally construed, it would mean the person who contracted the debt. We do not think that the Legislature intended by the use of the word 'debtor' to have that restricted interpretation. It would seem to us that the word 'debtor' was intended to connote not only the person who contracted the debt but his legal representative and in the case of a debt charged on land the person who derived title from him; in short the person who can be rendered liable for the debt by the creditor, that is, the person against whom the debt can be enforced. That is, the liability need not be personal in the sense of being liable to be arrested; it may be proprietary; that is, liability arising from the possession of property. (Cf. *Askaram Sowkar v. Venkataswami Naidu*¹ and *Parthasarathy Aiyangar v. Ekambara Mudaliar*².) We do not think that the Legislature intended to draw a distinction between the payment of interest and the payment of principal in saving limitation. If the history of this section is taken into consideration it would seem to be clear beyond doubt that it was hardly in the contemplation of the Legislature to draw any such distinction or to warrant the interpretation placed on the English Statute by Buckley, J. The first Limitation Act introduced by the Indian Legislature was Act XIV of 1859. The only provision relating to acknowledgment was S. 4 of the Act which ran thus:

"If in respect of any legacy or debt, the person, who, but for the law of limitation, would be liable, to pay the same, shall have admitted that such debt or legacy or any part thereof is due, by an acknowledgment in writing original liability, shall be computed from Under that section it will be seen that the statute of limitation is suspended if there has been an acknowledgment in writing of the debt to pay. It would be seen that no acknowledgment by an agent would save limitation nor would interest would keep alive the debt after the departure from English Law. The Act of 1871 and S. 4 of Act XIV of 1874, the Ss. 20 and 21; S. 20 related to the change that was effected was that the debt was by the party to be charged thereon and not as part payments are concerned which runs thus:

"When interest on a debt or legacy is, credited period, paid as such by the person by his agent generally or specially authorized; the principal of a debt is, before the estate is paid by the debtor or by his agent generally or specially authorized, on behalf."

This section has in substance been amended by subsequent Limitation Acts. The English Law then prevailing at the time of the *Roddam v. Morley*¹, Bolding v. L (See the introduction to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, at page 945 in V. R. Whitley Stokes at page 945 in V. R. Whitley Stokes Codes.) Under the English statute of 1790, no difference was made between a part payment of principal in regard to the suspension of the operation of the statute. It is shown what interpretation was placed on the words 'liable to pay' in the English statute. A different interpretation was intended by the Legislature in enacting either S. 17 or 18. It has considerable support from the decision in debtors as the person by whom payment is to be made. The expression 'person' is used in the first clause of the section with reference to the debtor apparently as suggested by Mitra in the Limitation Act for the purpose of having a common expression for both debts and legacies because it would be incongruous to use the expression 'debtor' with reference to a person liable to pay the legacy. (Vide 1909, Vol. 2, page 819.) Therefore the expression "person liable to pay the debt" must also connote the debtor or person liable to be charged with the debt. That both the person liable to pay the debt and the debtor must mean the same thing seems to be suggested by the judgment of Jenkins, C. J., in *Annappa Gauda v. Sangadigyapa*¹, where the learned Judge had to consider the position of a guardian in regard to acknowledgment made by him on behalf of his ward. The learned Judge considered him to be a legal agent just like an agent in *Chinnery v. Evans*² and held that the payment made by a guardian would save limitation and he would be the ward's agent duly authorized within the meaning of S. 20. In the course of the judgment he considered whether the guardian would be personally liable to pay the debt and he held that he would not, observing thus:

"The guardian is not a person liable to pay the debt within the meaning of the section, and this, I think, is made clear by the use of the word 'debtor' in the latter part of the section."

This observation seems to suggest that in the view of the learned Judge the word 'debtor' and the expression 'the person liable to pay the debt' were intended to convey the same meaning. Whether this view is correct or not, we are clearly of the opinion that the expression 'the person liable to pay the debt' in S. 21 of the Limitation Act of 1871 and S. 20 of the Limitation Act of 1908 cannot bear the interpretation put on the corresponding expression in the English statute by Buckley, J. Therefore apart from any question of agency the fourth defendant would not be a person liable to pay the debt within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act.

The remaining question is whether there has been a valid ratification by Jaya Rao of the payments made by the fourth defendant. When the payment was made by Jaya Rao he had already alienated the property in favour of defendants 5 to 8 and whatever may be the effect of such a ratification on Jaya Rao or his sons defendants 1 to 3, the ratification could not be held to operate to the prejudice of the alienees, defendants 5 to 8. Mr. Sitarama Rao has relied on S. 200 of the Indian subjecting a third person to damages or to loss of right or interest of a third person and the ratification of Mr. Sitarama Rao did not have that effect so far as defendant concerned. We are not inclined to agree with this of Mr. Sitarama Rao. The provisions of the Code relating to agency are not meant to be exhaustive. We think that S. 200 of the Indian Contract Act or the provisions relating to ratification affect the general principle of agency that the general rule as to ratification would as Jaya Rao is concerned, the ratification must be deemed to be valid. As we have already stated the fourth defendant was acting as the agent of Jaya Rao in making the payments and thus admitting the debt though in excess of the authority conferred upon him. It is open to Jaya Rao to ratify the unauthorized acts of an agent. Therefore the decree of the learned Judge must be modified by giving a mortgage decree in favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed against the interest of the mortgagor in the mortgaged properties—leaving the extent of his interest open—other than those alienated to defendants 5 to 8 to the extent of the interest of the alienees herein. Time for redemption three months.

Subject to this modification the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of respondents 5, 7, 9 to 11, one set.

JUDGMENT.—Learned counsel for the insolvent's illom has argued that the share of the insolvent in the properties belonging to the illom is not liable to be sold in insolvency for the discharge of his debts. S. 3 of the Madras Nambudri Act XXI of 1933 says that every member of an illom shall have an equal proprietary interest in its properties. Prima facie therefore the insolvent has an interest in the illom properties to which he is entitled in his own right and this should, in the absence of any provision in the Act to the contrary, be available for the discharge of the debts due from him to his creditors. Mr. Krishna Aiyar relies upon Ss. 5 and 23 of the Act as indicating that the interest of the insolvent in the illom properties is not liable to be proceeded against by his creditors. But I see nothing in those provisions having the effect contended for by the learned counsel. S. 5 deals with the karnavan's power of alienation of illom properties so as to bind the other members of the illom and does not relate to the power of a member of the illom to alienate his own interest. Nor does S. 23 have any bearing on the point under consideration, as it provides for partition of such properties subject to certain conditions. I am unable to spell out of these provisions any restriction on the right of the Official Assignee to bring the interest of an insolvent member of an illom to sale on behalf of his creditors.

Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), S. 403—Mere retention of moneys by clerk—No proof of using the moneys—No offence under S. 403.

Where a clerk received certain sums on various dates but entered them in the accounts on each occasion some days after and it was found that the clerk was not in difficulties and that he did not use the amounts, the mere retention by the clerk of the money for some days would not warrant a conviction under S. 403 of the Indian Penal Code.

8th December and on the complaint of the Official Receiver the police filed a charge sheet against the accused for an offence under S. 409 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts alleged did not warrant a charge under S. 409 of the Indian Penal Code and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate framed a charge under S. 403 of the Indian Penal Code for temporary misappropriation of the amount. The accused denied the offence and pleaded that the delay in making the entries and paying the amount over to the Official Receiver was due to oversight due to heavy work but the plea was not accepted and the accused was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 17 on each count.

The case has been referred by the District Magistrate for enhancement of sentence, but the evidence does not justify the conviction. The accused was not in difficulties and as found by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate there was no evidence that he misappropriated the amount. It has been repeatedly held that mere retention of money would not warrant a conviction under S. 403 of the Indian Penal Code and the accused was subsequently reinstated as the result of a departmental enquiry. The conviction is therefore set aside and the fine if levied will be refunded.

release all his rights in items 1, 2 and 4 to 8 in favour of the petitioner. The respondent instituted O. S. No. 2 of 1936 in the lower Court to enforce his mortgage of 1931 impleading Krishnan Nambi the mortgagor as the first defendant, the petitioner as the second defendant and certain others claiming interest in some of the mortgaged items, and obtained a preliminary decree on 22nd December, 1936 and a final decree for sale on 17th August, 1937, for Rs. 3,083 as stated already. In execution of this decree, the mortgaged properties were sold in one lot on 10th March, 1938. With a view to have the decree scaled down under the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act which came into force soon after, the petitioner applied to the Court below on 9th April, 1938, for setting aside the auction sale. The learned Subordinate Judge in dismissing the application held (1) that having regard to the terms of the preliminary and final decrees in the suit, the petitioner was not a judgment-debtor and therefore was not entitled to apply under S. 23 of the Act; (2) that the petitioner failed to prove that she had any interest in the hypotheca except item 3 which she obtained under the gift deed of her father; and (3) that the petitioner was excluded from the benefits of the Act by reason of S. 10 (2) (ii) so far as items 1 and 2 comprised in the sale deed Ex. B were concerned as the purchase money due in respect of that sale which the vendee was directed to pay to the respondent in discharge of the mortgage remained unpaid and there was a charge for that liability under S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. All these conclusions were canvassed before us in this revision petition.

On the first point, we are clearly of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to apply under S. 23 of the Act. According to the decision in *Perianna v. Sellappa*¹, the liability of the petitioner as a subsequent alienee of part of the hypotheca to discharge the mortgage is a 'debt' liable to be scaled down under the provisions of the Act. The respondent's learned counsel however urged that the petitioner was not a 'judgment-debtor' within the meaning of S. 23 as neither the preliminary nor the final decree contained any direction that the second defendant should pay the amount due to the respondent. It is true that para. 2 (1) of the preliminary decree directs only the first defendant the mortgagor to pay into Court on or before the date fixed the sum decreed to the respondent, but para. 4, after providing that the money realised by sale of the hypotheca less the expenses of the sale, should be applied in payment of the amount decreed to the respondent directs that the balance, if any, shall be paid to the first defendant 'or other persons entitled to receive the same', and para. 5 provides that the parties shall have 'liberty to apply to the Court from time to time as they may have occasion and on such application or otherwise the Court may give such directions as it thinks fit.' Again, the final decree recites that the payment directed by the preliminary decree was not made by the first defendant or any person on his behalf or 'any other person entitled to redeem the mortgage,' and contains a provision in para. 2 that the balance, if any, of the sale proceeds after the satisfaction of the plaintiff's debt be paid to the first defendant 'or other persons entitled to receive the same.' It cannot for a moment be disputed that the petitioner was a person entitled to redeem the respondent's mortgage under S. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, and it is obvious that she was impleaded by the respondent in the mortgage suit with a view to bind her interest in the hypotheca by the decree. It was said that the respondent did not admit her right in the hypotheca but impleaded her and other alienees in the plaint as setting up "pretensions to certain rights in the property subsequent to the mortgage." The mortgagee was not interested in admitting or denying the rights of subsequent alienees in the mortgaged properties as such rights, whatever they might be, were all subject to the mortgage and, indeed, any dispute regarding such rights would be outside the scope of the mortgage suit. As a matter of fact, none of the defendants raised any dispute regarding the petitioner's right to the third item under the gift of her father. It was because of the interest she claimed in the hypotheca that she also raised a contest in the suit as to the amount payable to the respondent. In these circumstances, it is clear that her interest in the hypotheca, whatever its extent, was bound by the decree and she was a person entitled to redeem the respondent's mortgage or, if there was no redemption, to receive the balance, if any, of the sale proceeds after payment of the decree amount according to the extent of her interest in the hypotheca. We are therefore of opinion that the petitioner is a judgment-debtor as defined in S. 2 (10) of the Code of Civil Procedure, assuming that the term, not having been otherwise defined, is to be understood in no wider sense in the Madras Act IV of 1938.

The question next arises whether the petitioner is entitled to have the sale not only of item 3 but of the other items in which she claims to be beneficially interested set aside. Learned counsel for the petitioner argued that by reason of the release deed executed by her father after the termination of her suit against her alleged benamidar, the petitioner's title to items 1, 2 and 4 to 8 also must be deemed to have been perfected, and that therefore she was entitled to have the sale of all the items set aside. It is unnecessary, however, to decide the question whether the release deed (Ex. G) would be sufficient to vest in the petitioner the title to these properties, as we are of opinion that even apart from her right to these items, she is entitled to have the sale of all the items set aside by reason of her interest in item 3 which was never in dispute. As already observed, all the eight items were sold in a single lot for a single price, and in the case of such sale, it is clear from the terms of Ss. 23 and 24 of the Act that the sale has to be set aside in its entirety and the purchase money repaid to the purchaser, even though the applicant may be interested in only one of the items comprised in the sale. It is also unnecessary in this view to consider whether the petitioner is disentitled to the benefits of the Act by reason of S. 10 (ii) as there can be no question of a charge under S. 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act in respect of item 3.

The Civil Revision Petition is therefore allowed and the application (E. A. No. 181 of 1938) is remitted to the lower Court for scaling down the debt in accordance with the provisions of the Act. The petitioner will have her costs here and in the Court below.

The Collector awarded compensation of 10

It is argued for the appellant that by the word 'persons' can be understood only persons who are parties to the proceedings. I find myself unable to accept this argument. The language of S. 27 (1) is perfectly clear and very wide and it must on the face of it give power to the Court to order costs to be paid by any person whether he be a party or not. No doubt there are certain well known principles of law which prevent a Court from ordering costs to be paid by some one who is an utter stranger to the suit or proceedings. But such is not the state of facts with which I have to deal. The appellant was actually present before the Court although he had no personal interest in putting forward the claim. S. 53 of the Land Acquisition Act says:

"Save in so far as they may be inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all proceedings before the Court under this Act."

The section of the Civil Procedure Code which deals with costs is S. 35. This section is also drafted in very comprehensive language and it has not been argued that S. 27 (1) in any way conflicts with or limits or restricts the provisions of S. 35.

There have been no direct cases cited before me dealing with the same facts as those found in the present appeal, but, it seems to me, on a consideration of Ss. 27 (1) and 53 of the Land Acquisition Act and S. 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure that I am entitled in disposing of this appeal to follow any decisions which have been given, not in land acquisition proceedings themselves, but in civil litigation generally, under the provisions of S. 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Two such decisions have been cited by the learned Government Pleader, *Krishnayya v. Ramayya*¹ and Yellamma v. Suryanarayanamurthi.² These decisions, interpreting the language of S. 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure hold that, although a guardian-ad-litem is not personally a party to a suit, S. 35 authorizes the Court to order such a guardian to pay costs. It seems to me that the principles governing the relationship between a guardian-ad-litem and a minor and the relationship between a trustee and a religious institution like the one in the case before me are precisely analogous. The question which the Court has to decide in both sets of cases is whether the actual party himself should be called upon to pay the costs for an act done by his representative, or whether the act of the representative is so reckless or ill-advised that it would be unjust to call upon the real party to meet the burden of costs. It seems to me therefore that the Court must be deemed to have jurisdiction in cases like the present to say whether it shall be the Devasthanam or the trustee that should pay the costs. Such jurisdiction is given by the wide language of S. 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure and there is nothing in the Land Acquisition Act to modify S. 35 in any way, in a case like the present, where the Collector's award has been confirmed.

The question next arises whether the order calling upon the appellant to pay costs should be confirmed. It seems to me that no reason has been put forward for differing from the learned Subordinate Judge in this respect. The learned Judge has pointed out that the appellant actually claimed compensation at no less than sixty times the real value of the land. It is clear from the judgment that the land has always been used as a burial or burning ground and that this fact must have been well known to the appellant. In spite of that, he has claimed a most extravagant sum from the Government. There can be no excuse^{it} for such conduct and it is, I think, impossible to accept the appellant's argument that he acted bona fide in this matter. I accordingly see no reason at all to interfere with the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wadsworth, J.—The petitioner was the defendant in a suit on a mortgage and he contended that he was entitled to let in evidence that the mortgage was a renewal of a previous promissory note debt which had ripened into a decree, so as to attract the operation of S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. The Court below held that he was not entitled to adduce such evidence and it is against that decision the present revision petition is filed.

Wads-
worth, J.

The suit mortgage was in favour of the two sons of Srinivasammal and one of the items of consideration for the mortgage was the discharge of a decree in a suit on a promissory note. The payee under the promissory note and the decree-holder in the promissory note suit was Srinivasammal, the mother of the two mortgagees. The question therefore is whether the decree based on the mortgage deed can be scaled down on the basis that it is in part a renewal of this promissory note debt. The contention was that Srinivasammal, the payee under the promissory note, was really a benamidar for her sons. In our opinion, it is not open to the judgment-debtor to raise such a contention for the purpose of S. 8 of Act IV of 1938. Unless the debt of which the suit debt is alleged to be a renewal is in favour of the same creditor, the explanation to S. 8 has no application. We have held in our decision in *Varadarajam Pillai v. Krishnanurthi Pillai*¹, that the creditor in respect of a promissory note debt is and can only be the payee and that the creditor in respect of a decree debt can only be the decree-holder or other persons specifically empowered to execute the decree; that is to say, whether we look at the promissory note itself or at the decree resulting therefrom, the creditor must necessarily be Srinivasammal and no other sons even though the sons may have a beneficial interest in the debt.

It follows therefore that there can be no question of the mortgage debt being a renewal for the purpose of the Act of the previous promissory note debt and the decision of the lower Court is right. The revision petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), Ss. 9 and 12—Appropriations towards principal and interest in 1923 and 1924—Debt decreed in 1936—If can be reopened and reappropriated and under the Act—Interest on scaled down debt and costs.

A decree was passed on 26th September, 1936, on a mortgage debt of 1920 (which itself was in consolidation of previous debts on promissory notes) for which payments towards 'principal and interest' had been made in 1923 and 1924. In an application to scale down the decree, Held, that as there was no specific appropriation the decree should be scaled down on the basis of the amounts advanced on the original promissory notes. Payments actually appropriated before 1st October, 1937, cannot be reopened. But payments not specifically appropriated (no fresh evidence being admissible) will be disregarded in calculating the amount of interest outstanding on 1st October, 1937, which will be treated as discharged and the balance of the debt will bear interest from 1st October, 1937, according to S. 12, namely, at 5 per cent. per annum. Interest on costs should be scaled down with regard to the provisions of S. 9, i.e., interest will run at 5 per cent per annum up to 22nd March, 1938 and thereafter at 6 per cent.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada dated 25th August, 1938 and made in I. A. No. 531 of 1938 in O. S. No. 74 of 1935.

Wadsworth, J.—This petition arises out of an application under S. 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938. The applicants, who are the petitioners here, sought to scale down a decree dated 26th September, 1936, passed on a mortgage of 8th November, 1920. The mortgage was for a sum of Rs. 5,570, made up by the discharge of four earlier promissory notes, the principal of which totalled to Rs. 4,300, with interest thereon and a small fresh advance. Towards this mortgage there were three payments before suit. On 5th April, 1923, a sum Rs. 1200 was paid and appropriated for interest and on 6th June, 1923 a sum of Rs. 400 was paid and of this sum Rs. 211-14-0 were appropriated for interest and the balance for principal. On 4th October, 1924, a payment of Rs. 3,367 was made and the endorsement is that it was made towards principal and interest of the debt; that is to say, there was apparently no specific appropriation towards either principal or interest. On the basis of our previous decisions, the decree has clearly to be scaled down in the following way. The principal will be Rs. 4,300, the principal of the original notes renewed in the mortgage. The payments actually appropriated before 1st October, 1937, will stand appropriated. The payment made on 4th October, 1924, which has not been specifically appropriated will be disregarded in calculating the amount of interest outstanding on 1st October, 1937, unless it can be established that there has been a specific appropriation before 1st October, 1937, no fresh evidence being admissible. After calculating the amount of interest outstanding on 1st October, 1937, and treating it as discharged, the balance of the debt will be scaled down on the basis that the principal remaining bears interest at the rate laid down in S. 12 from 1st October, 1937, and the interest on costs will be scaled down with regard to the provisions of S. 9; that is to say, interest will run at 5 per cent. per annum up to 22nd March, 1938, and thereafter at the decree rate of six per cent.

The petitioner is entitled to his costs in revision from respondents 1 and 2. The application is remitted to the lower Court for disposal in the light of this judgment.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—This is a petition to revise an order of the Subordinate Judge of South Kanara dismissing an application by the petitioners (judgment-debtors) to scale down the decree for Rs. 34,291-10-9 in O. S. No. 70 of 1932 on the file of the lower Court. The suit was brought by the respondent on foot of a mortgage bond (Ex. B) dated 5th June, 1925, whereby the judgment-debtors purported to mortgage the properties usufructually to the respondent's assignor for Rs. 21,000, out of which only Rs. 20,300 was advanced and a marupat (Ex. C) of the same date under which the mortgaged properties were leased back to them at an annual 'purappad', of 10,150 seers of paddy. The mortgage contained only a covenant to repay the principal but no stipulation for payment of any interest as the profits were to be enjoyed in lieu of interest. It is common ground that the usufructuary mortgage and the lease back were parts of the same transaction and the respondent himself in suing for the amount due under both these instruments described the amount due under Ex. C as 'interest' payable on the amount advanced under Ex. B. The decree was in the form of an ordinary mortgage decree providing for the payment of Rs. 20,300 as principal and the balance as interest and did not mention any rent as payable thereunder, while the judgment referred to the respondent's claim under Ex. C as 'rent or interest' without making any distinction between the two. It is thus clear that at the time when the suit was filed or the decree was passed, it was really immaterial whether the respondent's claim under Ex. C was regarded as one for interest or for rent but after the passing of the Madras Act IV of 1938 the question as to the true nature and incidents of the transaction represented by Exs. B and C has become one of considerable importance to the parties and has accordingly been the subject of keen debate in these proceedings. In support of their application to scale down the decree the petitioners contend that Exs. B and C together amounted in substance to a simple mortgage providing for interest at the rate of half seer of paddy per rupee per year and that accordingly the interest payable under the decree should be scaled down, while the respondent invokes the exception in S. 10 (2) (i) of the Act, clear that the mortgage and the marupat were intended to be parts of one and the same transaction and the mortgage itself recites that "for the necessities of our tavazhi tarwad we ourselves have, as per marupat of this day taken back the properties delivered to you under this document as detailed above." Both the documents must therefore be read together to ascertain the nature and incidents of the transaction and the respective rights and liabilities of the parties thereunder. This indeed has been conceded by the respondent, but the question remains whether the marupat operates to obliterate the possessory character of the mortgage and convert it into a simple mortgage, contrary to its tenor. We are of opinion that it cannot have that effect. It is no doubt permissible, as a matter of construction to look behind the form of a transaction to ascertain its substance and give effect to it according to the intention of the parties but it is a different thing to ignore the form in which the parties have deliberately cast their bargain, when such form is intended to govern their mutual rights and obligations.

Learned counsel for the petitioners cited numerous decisions in support of his contention but none of them can, in our opinion, be said to be an authority on the point now under consideration. On the other hand, we have been shown several authoritative rulings—some of them by the Privy Council—which lend support to the contention of the respondent. In *Abdullah Khan v. Basharat Hussain*¹, there was a usufructuary mortgage with a lease back of the properties mortgaged to the mortgagor. The mortgage provided that the profits of the property mortgaged should be enjoyed by the mortgagee in lieu of interest on the mortgage money but the rent reserved under the lease was equivalent to interest at six per cent. per annum on the mortgage money and was less than the annual yield of the properties. As provided in the lease, the mortgagee entered into possession of the properties mortgaged on the mortgagor's default in paying the rent reserved by the lease. In a subsequent suit for redemption, the question arose whether the mortgagee was accountable for the rents and profits received by him from the mortgaged properties in excess of the rent reserved under the lease. The High Court of Allahabad held that he was, on the ground that the mortgage was usufructuary only in form and that the security was intended to be a simple mortgage carrying interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. On appeal to the Privy Council, this decision was reversed and the mortgagee was held not accountable for receipts over and above the rent reserved in the lease. Lord Macnaghten who delivered the judgment of the Board observed:

" Their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that the mort-is no inconsistency between the two instruments. NOR WOULD THERE HAVE BEEN ANY INCONSISTENCY IF THE MORTGAGE ITSELF HAD CONTAINED A PROVISION FOR GRANTING A LEASE ON THE TERMS UPON WHICH THE LEASE WAS ACTUALLY GRANTED."

This, in our opinion, is clear authority for the view that though the mortgage and the lease back can and must, in a case of this kind, be taken to form part of the same transaction, effect must be given to each according to its terms and the Court cannot, by reading the two together, spell out a transaction totally different in character and incidents.

To the same effect more or less is the decision of the Privy Council in *Feroz Shah v. Sohbat Khan*¹. There was a usufructuary mortgage for a term of ten years accompanied by a lease of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor for the same period at a rent which represented interest at a certain rate per cent. on the mortgage debt. On the expiry of the term, the mortgagee sued for possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgage not having been redeemed. The Courts in India refused a decree for possession holding that the transaction was in reality a simple mortgage of the land. Their Lordships reversed the decision holding that there was no reason to construe the mortgage as other than a possessory mortgage as it purported to be. They observed:

"The mortgagee may well have preferred to leave the cultivation of the land in the hands of the mortgagor, being entitled to take possession at any time if the provisions of the lease were not adhered to. Assuming this to have been one of the conditions upon which the mortgage was agreed to, the mere absence of formal handing over of the land to the mortgagee, and a handing back by him to the mortgagor in the character of lessee, is, they think, of little significance."

The principle of these decisions has also been applied in cases under the Income-tax Act relating to the assessability of the income received by the mortgagee-lessor who is a money-lender from the mortgagor-lessee. The contention of the Income-tax authorities was that the so-called 'rent' was, having regard to the substance of such transactions, really interest received in the course of money-lending and assessable to tax as such. This contention was disallowed by a Special Bench of five Judges (Jackson, J., dissenting) in *Ibrahimsa Rowther v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*² and by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v.

*Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga*¹, the Court refusing in each case to regard the amount paid by the mortgagor-lessee as other than rent covered by the exemption relating to agricultural income.

Learned counsel for the respondent placed great reliance upon the decision of the Privy Council in *Ramarayanimgar v. Maharaja of Venkatagiri*². The mortgage in that case was a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage and was accompanied as to part of the mortgaged property by a lease back to the mortgagor. The lease provided that upon default in payment of the rent reserved, the arrears should be charged upon the property included in the mortgage deed. The rent had been allowed to fall into arrears, and the question arose in a suit for redemption and possession whether the arrears of rent should also be paid before redemption could be decreed. Their Lordships held that S. 62 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply as the mortgage was not purely and simply usufructuary and that S. 61 of the Act by implication entitled the mortgagee to insist on the payment of arrears of rent also charged on the property as a condition of redemption. The passage relied on for the respondent is as follows:—

"It is contended before this Board on behalf of the defendant appellant that the two deeds, Exs. A and I, should be read together as they form parts of one transaction, the lease being in the nature of machinery for the purpose of realising the interest due on the mortgage Their Lordships are of opinion that these contentions on behalf of the appellant must prevail." (Page 190.)

We are unable to agree that this passage involves the proposition that a possessory mortgage and a lease back should together be taken to be a simple mortgage carrying interest. As observed by their Lordships in *Abdullah Khan v. Basharat Hussain*³, referred to already, that the mortgage and the lease should be viewed as forming parts of one and the same transaction is by no means inconsistent with effect being given to each according to its terms, and the reference to the lease as 'being in the nature of machinery for the purpose of realising the interest due on the mortgage' does no more than emphasise the idea of the lease being a component part of the mortgage transaction.

All these decisions relied on by the petitioners' learned counsel have no direct bearing on the issue before us, and any general observations therein tending to favour the view that a usufructuary mortgage accompanied by a lease back should be regarded as a simple mortgage cannot prevail against the definite pronouncements to the contrary in the decisions cited for the respondent. The Civil Revision Petition therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 288—Evidence given before committing magistrate—Witness changing before the Sessions Judge—Deposition before committing magistrate admissible as substantive evidence—Accused absconding for several years—Arrest after 6 years and trial thereafter—If delay ground for reducing sentence.

Pachayanna

Where witnesses depose to a certain fact before the committing magistrate but before the Sessions Judge change their testimony and state that they have no personal knowledge of the occurrence, it is open to the Sessions Judge to admit under S. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code the deposition given before the committing magistrate and treat it as substantive evidence.

Where an accused absconded and could not be found for several years, and in that way the trial of the case was delayed, such delay is not by itself a ground for reducing the sentence.

palayam, he stabbed two women with a spear inflicting fatal injuries upon them. The two women were named Pappayi and Palani. The appellant had been on terms of illicit intimacy with Palani and it is said that Pappayi had persuaded Palani to give him up. This was the supposed motive for the attack by the appellant upon the two women.

Pappayi and Palani were both taken to the hospital at Tiruchengode the same evening and as they were in a dangerous condition, the Sub-Magistrate (P. W. 13) was sent for and both of them made dying declarations. Ex. D is the dying declaration of Palani but the learned Sessions Judge has not relied on this because it contains internal evidence that Palani was not fully conscious when she was making her statement. Ex. E is the dying declaration of Pappayi who was fully conscious while her statement was being recorded. Besides the evidence contained in the dying declaration of Pappayi, there were the depositions in the Magistrate's Court of no less than seven eye-witnesses, the women (P. Ws. 3 to 9) who were accompanying Palani and Pappayi on their way back from their field. All these witnesses in the Magistrate's Court gave evidence against the appellant in accordance with the statement made by Pappayi in her dying declaration. But when they came to the Sessions Court, five of them (P. Ws. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 8) alleged that they had no personal knowledge of the occurrence. One (P. W. 9) said that she had only seen the stabbing of Pappayi and only one (P. W. 7) had adhered to the testimony which she gave before the Committing Magistrate. In these circumstances the learned Sessions Judge admitted as evidence under S. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the depositions of P. Ws. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 8 in the Magistrate's Court. It is quite clear that he was fully justified in so doing and in treating those depositions as substantive evidence.

The appellant absconded and was not arrested until the 27th of March, 1940, when P. W. 15, a member of the Vigilance Committee found him on the street, and, having some recollection in his mind of a Gazette Notification, arrested him and took him to the Sub-Magistrate of Tiruchengode. That is the reason why this case did not come on for trial until July, 1940.

Learned counsel for the appellant has quite rightly made no attempt to show that the evidence against the appellant cannot be accepted. He has urged only the question of sentence.

Quoting the judgment in R. T. No. 141 of 1929, learned counsel has urged that since the offence took place more than six years ago, the appellant might be let off with a sentence of transportation for life. We see that in the case referred to, the only reason for reducing the sentence of death which had been passed by the learned Sessions Judge to a sentence of transportation for life was that ten years had elapsed between the crime and the punishment. With due respect we do not think that that alone is any ground for imposing a lesser sentence. On the contrary we think it would be a dangerous proposition to state that if a murderer succeeds in making himself scarce for a number of years, he may then hope to escape the extreme penalty of the law in a case in which the extreme penalty is clearly called for. There are no extenuating circumstances in this case. The appellant deliberately committed two murders, without any excuse.

We confirm the conviction of the appellant for the two offences of murder and the sentence of death and dismiss his appeal.

The compromise decree was subsequently confirmed on several occasions. S died on 10th January, 1911. B purported to make a gift of the Lyallpur lands to S. S's sons filed the present suit for a declaration of the validity of the gift beyond the life of B. B contended that she had signed not the completed deed of compromise but a deed in which her signature was obtained by undue influence. belonged to one Ishar Singh who died childless on the 6th October, 1905, leaving him surviving a widow Bishan Devi, also a brother's son Sundar Singh who died on 10th January, 1922. On the 7th February, 1929, the widow purported to make a gift of one portion of the land to Sangat Singh (respondent No. 1) and of another portion to a certain Gurdwara (respondent No. 2). The present suit was brought on the 7th August, 1933, by the appellants, who are three of the four sons of Sundar Singh. The fourth son was made a defendant and is now respondent No. 3. The claim of the plaint is for a declaration that the gifts of land to Sangat Singh and to the Gurdwara have no validity or effect beyond the life of Bishan Devi.

Ishar Singh on 19th September, 1905, made a will of which probate was granted to Bishan Devi by the District Judge of Peshawar on 3rd November, 1906. Apart from an interest in the family house at Rawalpindi, Ishar Singh by his will declared himself to be the absolute and exclusive owner of the property which he disposed of thereby. He declared that Sundar Singh, his nephew, was disobedient and of bad character and was to be totally disinherited. He made the following dispositions in favour of his wife:—

"4. My wife is Musammat Bishan Devi. She has greatly served me. She has all along been faithful to me. I make this will in her favour that she shall be exclusive (illegible) owner of the following properties after my death:—

- (a) Entire cash including pronotes for Rs. 13,000 and other items.
- (b) Liquor, Charas, Opium, etc., of all kinds.
- (c) Land, situate in Nathe.
- (d) Lands, situate in Lyallpur.
- (e) Three-quarter share in Nowshahra property.
- (f) All ornaments.

Sundar Singh or any other person shall have no connection therewith, nor shall they interfere in the management thereof. My wife, Musammat Bishan Devi, may manage the said property in whatever way she likes. She shall have all kinds of powers to deal with the property aforesaid. She shall be considered full owner. So long as Malik Arjan Singh is alive, he will manage the land in Lyallpur.

7. After the death of my wife, Musammat Bishan Devi, whatever property remains shall be owned by the sons of Sundar Singh. Sundar Singh shall have no connection or concern therewith. Besides my wife, Musammat Bishan Devi, shall not be entitled to sell immovable property. The sons of Sundar Singh shall also have no such right.

8. The remaining movable or immovable property of mine shall be exclusively owned by my wife, Musammat Bishan Devi".

March, 1907, but the entry was restricted by the condition "so long as she is alive and does not remarry." This was in accord with the customary law of the parties independently of her husband's will. On the 12th November, 1906, Sundar Singh filed a plaint in the Court of the District Judge, Peshawar, against Bishan Devi and other defendants. By this plaint as amended he claimed a declaration that the will of Ishar Singh was not valid or binding on him as regards (inter alia) the immovables at Mahal Nathe and Nowshahra, or the stock of liquor and opium, etc., at Peshawar or the Government Promissory Notes for Rs. 13,000 in deposit at the Treasury, Peshawar. The sole relief claimed was a declaration and the suit was brought upon a court-fee of Rs. 10 only, though valued for purposes of jurisdiction at over Rs. 26,000. The case made was that the business of dealers in intoxicants, etc., under excise licences was not the separate business of Ishar Singh but a joint family business which had been carried on by him jointly with his brothers and after their deaths with the plaintiff Sundar Singh, and that all the properties had been acquired out of the joint funds of the business. Sundar Singh claimed to be the sole heir to and possessor of the property above mentioned and sued for a declaration "that the will is unlawful and null and void and has no effect upon the rights of the plaintiff who holds proprietary possession over the property in question." The plaint stated that "a separate suit will be brought for recovery of the ornaments, valued at Rs. 15,000, other movable property and lands situate at Lyallpur which are in possession of the defendants."

This suit was compromised in June, 1907, and as the validity and effect of the compromise is now in question it becomes necessary to notice it in detail. On the 9th June, a petition to the Court of the District Judge was signed by Bishan Devi and by Sundar Singh. It set forth that the parties had made the settlement therein expressed and it concluded "hence this application by way of a compromise is submitted with the prayer that it may be accepted and the case decided in terms thereof." The main terms were that the lands at Mahal Nathe and at Lyallpur should belong to Bishan Devi for her life and on her death to Sundar Singh and his male descendants. An iron safe, a cow and a calf were to belong to Bishan Devi. Sundar Singh was to pay her Rs. 8,150 in cash. Government

Promissory Notes to the value of Rs. 13,000 deposited in the Treasury were to be entered in the names of the sons of Sundar Singh. Bishan Devi was to be absolute owner of all ornaments, clothes and other movables in her possession. Sundar Singh was to get the book-debts, stock-in-trade and other trade movables and to be liable to pay any debts of Ishar Singh. The petition of compromise was signed at Rawalpindi and was handed over to one Mohan Singh, an honorary magistrate, who sent it by post to the District Judge. On 11th June the case came on before the District Judge and Bishan Devi was represented by her agent Jagat Singh and by a pleader. Sundar Singh was present in person. As appears by the note of the District Judge, Jagat Singh stated to the Court:—

“Musammat Bishan Devi signed the compromise in my presence but she subsequently stated that she only accepted it if the Rs. 8,150 was paid at once and if the Rs. 13,000 was invested in a bank. She signed of her own free will knowing the contents of the deed.”

By his decree the District Judge “ordered that a decree be and the same is hereby passed on the terms and under the conditions embodied in the deed of compromise dated 9th June, 1907, as a whole with this reservation that the sum of Rs. 8,150 shall be paid into Court within fifteen days from to-day, in case of failure defendant No. 1 (Bishan Devi) to be entitled to recover that amount by execution.”

On some date between 26th June and 15th July, 1907, an application for execution was filed by Jagat Singh on behalf of Bishan Devi against Sundar Singh asking that a sum of Rs. 7,535 lying in the Treasury on account of Ishar Singh be paid to Bishan Devi on account of the sum of Rs. 8,150 due to her under the compromise. This application was successful and on 15th July a receipt was given by Jagat Singh on the lady's behalf for Rs. 7,535 received through Court. Other instances of action taken under the compromise are in evidence but need not here be referred to.

The gifts made on 7th February, 1929, by Bishan Devi to the first and second respondents of the lands at Lyallpur are contrary to the terms of the compromise of June 1907, whereby these lands were to belong to her for her lifetime only and she was not to be competent to alienate them. Hence the present suit brought by sons of Sundar Singh on 7th August, 1933. The defence of Bishan Devi (original defendant No. 1) the absolute gift to Bishan Devi. Cl. 8 is a residuary clause which does not affect the land at Lyallpur.

It is therefore necessary for the plaintiffs-appellants to rely upon the compromise of June, 1907. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the deed was admissible in evidence; that the compromise was entered into by Bishan Devi with knowledge of its contents and voluntarily; and that the case of coercion and undue influence was untrue. The learned Judges of the High Court have held that the deed is inadmissible for want of registration and that it has not been established that it was read over to her or that she signed it after fully understanding its meaning or effect. They do not appear to hold that coercion or undue influence has been proved. At the root of their judgment is an opinion formed by them to the effect that by not including in the suit of 1906 a claim to recover possession of the Lyallpur lands Sundar Singh had forfeited all right therein by virtue of O. 2, r. 2, C. P. Code (S. 43 of the Code of 1882). They are mistaken in supposing that the claim to Rs. 13,000 Government Promissory Notes and to the land at Nowshara was not included in the suit. The plaintiff was on the footing that Sundar Singh was in possession of these and other items and required only a declaration to clear his title; whereas the land at Lyallpur and the ornaments were in Bishan Devi's possession and the claim to them must necessarily be put as a claim to recover possession. In these circumstances their Lordships cannot agree with the High Court in regarding the compromise as bad by reason that Bishan Devi was not advised that she could safely treat the claim of Sundar Singh to the Lyallpur lands as barred. On the contrary, such advice had it been given, would in their Lordships' view have been rash rather than sound. The lands at Lyallpur being situate in the Punjab, outside the district of Peshawar, a claim for relief in respect of them could have been entertained by the District Judge under S. 19 of the Code of 1882. The High Court would seem to have assumed that S. 19 was not merely permissive: also that the claim to recover possession of the Lyallpur lands and the claim to a declaration as regards the other lands were claims in respect of the same cause of action (cf. *Payana v. Pana Lana*¹.) Their Lordships think that both assumptions are highly debatable. But in any case the claim of the present appellants as reversioners of Ishar Singh would not have been barred so far as regards the question whether Ishar Singh's will gave to his widow an absolute interest or an interest for her life. Moreover, so long as the suit of 1906 was undisposed of, it was always possible that the Court, if it thought that there was anything in the point as to O. 2, r. 2, would give leave to the plaintiff to amend by including a claim to recover possession of the ornaments and Lyallpur lands. It does not appear that the lawyers advising Bishan Devi thought anything of the point now taken by the High Court and with all respect to the learned Judges their Lordships cannot regard it as a good one.

By the decree of 11th June, 1907, the District Judge had purported to direct that the terms of the compromise should be carried out as a whole. He had not in terms excluded the Lyallpur land from the operative part of the decree and he had not recited the contents of the deed. Though it is clear that his decree was made upon the petition and that both documents would become part of the same record, he had neither marked and exhibited the deed nor scheduled it or a copy of it to the decree. He had referred to the deed by date and in a manner which has given rise to no doubt or difficulty. No proceedings were taken at any time during the next 20 years for having the decree set aside whether on the ground of some defect in the agreement of compromise or some error or irregularity in the decree itself. On the contrary the decree was enforced as to one of the terms of the compromise by execution proceedings taken on behalf of Bishan Devi: and it may well be a question whether after taking this advantage under the decree she would have been entitled in equity to have the decree set aside. Under the Registration Act (III of 1877) no question of registration arises as regards decrees [S. 17 (1)]. In these circumstances their Lordships agree with the argument of Sir Hari Singh Gour on behalf of the appellants that the first question is one of jurisdiction in the strict sense of the term. Had the learned District Judge at Peshawar jurisdiction to pass this decree as regards the lands at Lyallpur or is his decree so far as regards these lands a nullity which Bishan Devi was entitled to disregard without taking any proceedings to have it set aside or varied? As the learned Judges of the High Court thought that the claim to the Lyallpur lands came within O. 2, r. 2, they must have considered that this claim was within the jurisdiction of the District Judge. In any case when it was agreed that Bishan Devi should have the Lyallpur lands for her life, there was no doubt or difficulty as to the jurisdiction of the District Judge of Peshawar to include these lands within the declaration made as to the other lands and assets. It was no longer a question of a decree for possession but merely of a judicial determination as to the reversionary rights of Sundar Singh or his descendants. Whether the District Judge acted irregularly and failed to comply strictly with S. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 matters nothing. He acted by consent and within his jurisdiction: his decree was enforced in execution by Bishan Devi and no proceedings have at any time been taken to have it set aside. He might have acted more strictly in compliance with the terms of S. 375 had he first amended the plaint by including the reversionary interest in the Lyallpur lands within the declaration sought, but the mere fact that he could have done so shows that he was not devoid of jurisdiction.

In these circumstances it is clear that in 1928 Bishan Devi was not entitled to treat as a nullity this judicial determination to the effect that she had only a life interest in the lands at Lyallpur.

Their Lordships, considering the compromise of 1907 (as the Courts in India have considered it) as a contract, are further of opinion that it was valid and binding upon Bishan Devi. The learned Judges of the High Court held that the District Judge had not acted correctly under O. 23, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code (meaning S. 375 of the Code of 1882) and had not ordered the compromise to be recorded. Their Lordships have already noticed that the decree directs effect to be given to the whole compromise and have dealt with the position so created. But in any view the decree in their Lordships' opinion recorded the compromise though the compromise was not recited textually either in the body of the decree or in a schedule thereto. In *Hemanta Kumari v. Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd.*¹, the Board was careful to avoid laying down any method of compliance with S. 375 of the Code of 1882 as the only method. Lord Buckmaster was at pains to say that "their Lordships are not aware of the exact system by which documents are recorded in the Courts in India," and it was not intended by pointing out one "perfectly proper and effectual method" to alter or nullify the rights of parties which for many years past had depended on the previous Indian practice being treated as valid. That S. 375 was sufficiently complied with by a reference to the compromise being made in the decree appears from the judgment delivered by Lord Watson on behalf of the Board in *Pranal Annee v. Lakshmi Annee*¹, where it was said that "the order of the learned Judge if it had referred to or narrated these terms of compromise would have been judicial evidence available to the appellant that the respondents had agreed to transfer to her the moiety of the land now in dispute." (See also Hemanta Kumari's case supra at p. 247 of the report.)

The only remaining question is whether Bishan Devi entered into the compromise voluntarily and with understanding of its effect. It does not appear that she was pardanashin in the strictest sense, and her evidence is that of an intelligent woman. She took the benefit of the compromise and acted on it for many years before repudiating it. As she not only got rid of the claim of Sundar Singh to be sole owner of her husband's lands and other assets, but enforced one of the terms of the compromise against him, there is more than sufficient prima facie evidence that she understood the transaction. It is satisfactorily proved that the terms of the compromise were settled after much haggling in the course of which Jagat Singh conveyed her instructions to the retired District Judge, Bhagat Narain Das, who was acting as conciliator between the parties and who witnessed her signature to the petition of compromise.

The case that she signed a blank paper is, in their Lordships' opinion, disproved. They reject as worthless the evidence of Jagat Singh on this point and also the evidence to the effect that she was brought to agree by his threat to cease acting for her in the suit. The allegation that undue pressure was brought upon her by certain members of the baradri (brotherhood) is the only matter which requires serious consideration upon this part of the case. It is said that she was told that certain members of the family would not take part in the marriage emonies of her sisters's son, Nidhan Singh (brother of Jagat gh), unless she compromised with Sundar Singh. But as Subordinate Judge noticed there is no reason to think that threat if made would have greatly troubled Bishan Devi. r own evidence is that she said at the time that she did not e and that "if they would not let the marriage take place let n do so." The learned Judges of the High Court do not ear to find that undue influence was used but proceed upon view that Bishan Devi is not proved to have understood the promise or to have voluntarily entered into it. After 20 rs and more, when Bhagat Narain Das is dead, direct oral lence of the explanation of the petition can hardly be ected. The High Court, largely because of the argument as the effect of O. 2, r. 2, on the lands at Lyallpur, thought : the compromise was one-sided. Also they mistakenly ight that the sum of Rs. 8,150 was to be paid to Bishan i out of the Rs. 13,000 (which is not the case of either y). The Rs. 13,000 consisted of Government Promissory es which were to be put in the name of the sons of Sundar gh, and the sum of Rs. 7,535 realised in execution was a erent matter. Their Lordships agree with the trial Judge olding that Bishan Devi entered into the compromise ntarily. She appears to have been surrounded with legal sers and in Bhagat Narain Das, admittedly a man of high ding and good reputation, had a family friend specially petent to give her sound and practical advice.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this al should be allowed, that the decree of the High Court ld be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge red. The first and second respondents will pay the llant's costs in the High Court and of this appeal.

JUDGMENT.—The Attavar Panchayat Court tried the suit which we are concerned on 12th January, 1937, in the absence of both parties and adjourned it to 14th January, 1937 for further evidence. The plaintiff was then absent; but instead of dismissing the suit for default, as it should have done under Order 18, it purported to dispose of the suit on the merits. The plaintiff later filed a petition before the Kadiri Panchayat Court, which had succeeded to the jurisdiction of the Attavar Panchayat Court, to set aside the decree of the Attavar Panchayat Court passed in default. In an elaborate judgment the Kadiri Panchayat Court held that the plaintiff had had good cause for non-appearance and set aside the decree and restored the suit. The defendants thereupon filed an application before the Principal District Munsif of Mangalore to have this order quashed as being without jurisdiction. The learned Munsif held that the order restoring the suit was without jurisdiction and therefore acted under S. 73 of the Village Courts Act and quashed the order. The plaintiff has come to this Court in revision.

Kutinha
v.

Pinto Bai.

In *Nasir Khan v. Itwari*¹, a somewhat similar question presented itself. In the absence of the appellant and his pleader, an appellate Court purported to dispose of the appeal on its merits; and the question that arose in the High Court was whether a second appeal would lie. If the appeal had been dismissed for default, no appeal would have laid; but if it was dismissed on the merits, a second appeal did lie, and the learned Judges held that they had to consider not what the Court below ought to have done but what it actually did. It held that the lower appellate Court had in fact disposed of the appeal before it on the merits, even though it had no jurisdiction to do so. As it was disposed of on the merits, a second appeal lay. That decision was followed by a single Judge of the same High Court—who was also a party to that decision—in *Madho Dass v. Maharajah of Benares*². In *Phul Kuar v. Hashmatullah Khan*³, which has been referred to for another purpose by the learned Advocate for the petitioner, it seems to have been agreed by both sides that although the lower Court should have disposed of the proceedings before it in default of appearance, it did not in fact do so; and the disposal was treated in the High Court as being on the merits. So there is no doubt that the learned District Munsif was right in holding that the disposal of the Attavar Panchayat Court was a disposal on the merits and that the remedy of the respondent lay by way of an application to the District Munsif to quash the order that was passed without jurisdiction.

Kutinha
v.
Nathalal
Pinto Bai.

It is argued that even though the order of the Kadiri Panchayat Court is one setting aside a decree passed in default, it is valid as a review of the previous judgment. In *Phul Kuar v. Hashmatullah Khan*¹ such a remedy was allowed; but there was no difficulty there because the learned Judges were dealing with an ordinary civil suit in which a petition for review lies. The Village Courts Act however makes no provision for reviews; and it has been made clear in many decisions (*Anantaraju Shetty v. Apparu Hegade*² is one of them) that unless a statute provides a remedy by way of review, the Court cannot review its own judgment except in very exceptional circumstances, such as for example, where it passed an order inadvertently or on account of some false representation by the officers of the Court. One cannot therefore take the order of the Kadiri Panchayat Court as a lawful order passed in review of the order of the Attavar Panchayat Court.

Finally, it has been urged that the learned Munsif ought not to have interfered with an order that was obviously just, and that he might well have himself quashed the order of the Attavar Panchayat Court and restored the suit in the way the Kadiri Panchayat Court did. It does not however appear either that an application had been made by the defendants to the Court asking it to do that or that such an application would have been in time. It is pointed out that it is still open to the petitioner to apply to the District Munsif's Court under S. 73; because S. 73 gives a discretion to the Court to entertain an application even after the expiry of sixty days. However, we are not concerned in this Revision Petition with an application which has not yet been made.

In the result the petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

The intention behind the provisions of S. 11 of the Pensions Act is applicable equally to the commuted portion as well as to the uncommuted portion of a pension, and such commuted portion will be “money due or to become due on account of pension”. Consequently the commuted portion of the pension due to a retired Government servant is not liable to attachment at the instance of his creditors.

The Municipal Council, Salem v. Gururaja Rao, (1934) 68 M.L.J. 118: I.L.R. 58 Mad. 469. considered.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the District Court of Chingleput dated 23rd February, 1940 and made in A. S. No. 160 of 1939 (E. P. No. 479 of 1939 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Conjeevaram in S. C. S. No. 279 of 1937, Sub-Court, Chingleput), etc.

M. E. Rajagopalachari and C. Krishnamachari for Petitioner.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—In these connected Civil Revision Petitions from the orders of the District Judge of Chingleput in appeals which were heard together, only one point arises for determination, namely, whether the commuted portion of the pension due to the petitioner by the Government is liable to attachment at the instance of creditors of his in view of S. 11 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871). The petitioner is a retired postal official and a portion of his pension was commuted sometime in March, 1939, or thereabouts and the commuted portion of the pension amounted to Rs. 3,500 and odd, and a payment order for this amount was forwarded to the postmaster, Conjeevaram, for delivery to the petitioner. As the learned District Judge observes, the only act remaining to be done by the petitioner is to take delivery of the payment order and to cash it at the local treasury. Before he could do so attachments were made at the instance of certain money-lenders. On objection by the petitioner that the attachments were illegal in view of the provisions of S. 11 of the Pensions Act, the Courts below have held that his contention is not well founded and have confirmed the attachments.

chariar
v.
Deefchand Sowcar.

There is no doubt that in view of the Bench decision in *The Municipal Council, Salem v. Gururaja Rao*¹, when a pension is commuted or a portion thereof, it ceases to be pension and becomes a capital sum. This decision is binding on me and I have to proceed on the basis that the commuted portion of the pension cannot be treated as pension after the commutation. It has been brought to my notice that a certain passage which was quoted and relied upon in *Municipal Council, Salem v. Gururaja Rao*¹ from *Crowe v. Price*² is to be found no doubt in the Law Journal Reports (*Crowe v. Price*³) but is not to be found in the report of the same case in *Crowe v. Price*². It would seem indeed that the latter report gives a revised version of the judgment of Lord Coleridge, C.J. Nothing, however, turns on this, because apart from this passage which is relied on in *The Municipal Council, Salem v. Gururaja Rao*¹, the Bench has clearly laid down that after commutation the portion of the pension that was commuted ceases to be pension.

The point for determination is however not concluded by the decision in *The Municipal Council, Salem v. Gururaja Rao*¹, for, that was a case in which the question was whether the commuted portion of the pension was 'income' for the purpose of assessing profession-tax in a municipality. In the present cases it was urged in the Courts below, and the same contention is repeated in this Court, that the commuted portion of the pension is not attachable by reason of the provisions of S. 11 of the Pensions Act which runs as follows:

"No pension granted or continued by Government on political considerations, or on account of past services or present infirmities or as a compassionate allowance, and no money due or to become due on account of any such pension or allowance, shall be liable to seizure, attachment or sequestration by process of any Court in British India, at the instance of a creditor, for any demand against the pensioner, or in satisfaction of a decree or order of any such Court."

Reliance is specially placed on the clause "and no money due or to become due on account of any such pension or allowance," because in view of the Bench decision in *The Municipal Council, Salem v. Gururaja Rao*¹, it is not really possible for the petitioner to contend successfully that that the commuted portion of the pension is still pension so as to bring these cases under the first portion of the section. The question therefore is whether the commuted portion of the pension—I am using these words: "commuted portion of the pension" as they are the words employed in the rule relating to this subject which defines the legal effect of an order of commutation; namely, r. 6 (2) of Civil Pensions (Commutation) Rules—is money due or to become due on account of pension.' The point is not covered by any authority; in any case no authority bearing on it has been quoted before me and no judicial interpretation of the words 'on account of' has been brought to my notice. The phrase is a phrase used in ordinary parlance and it is certainly not a term of art which has acquired a definite or precise meaning in law. The ordinary dictionary meaning of the phrase has to be ascertained and applied to the facts of the present cases. The meaning given in the New English Dictionary as well as in Webster's Dictionary is "for the sake of", "by reason of" or "because of." Now can it be said that the commuted portion of the pension is not money due on account of the pension? Though the pension has been commuted, still can it be said that money due because of, or by reason of such commutation is not money due on account of the pension? It is brought to my notice by the learned advocate for the petitioner, that S. 10 which relates to commutation of pension is part of Chapter III which is headed 'Mode of payment'. In other words, the commutation of pension is regarded as a mode of payment of pension. If so, can it be reasonably urged that payment of the commutation amount is not payment on account of the pension, though not of the pension itself, because after commutation it ceases to be pension? I see no good reason why it should be deemed to be otherwise. No doubt money is due immediately under the commutation order, but the commutation order itself is on account of a pension which was commuted or a portion of the pension which was commuted. The intention behind the provisions of S. 11 of the Pensions Act is applicable to the commuted portion as well as to the uncommuted portion of the pension and the language of S. 11 does not appear to exclude from its protection the money that is due under a commutation order commuting a part of the pension. I am therefore of opinion that in these cases the attachments were contrary to the provisions of S. 11 of the Pensions Act, and it follows therefore that these petitions must be allowed and the attachments must be set aside with costs in all the Courts.

1. (1934) 68 M.L.J. 118: 58 Mad. 469.

2. (1889) 22 Q.B.D. 429.

3. (1889) 58 L.J.R.Q.B.D. 215.

under the explanation to S. 8, the renewal of a debt or its inclusion in a fresh document must be by the same debtor, and we have further held in *Dorakkannu Odayar v. Veerasami Padayachi*³ that when a member of a joint Hindu family executes a fresh document for a pre-existing liability binding on the family but incurred on its behalf by another member, such previous debt can be regarded as renewed or included in a fresh document within the meaning of the explanation to S. 8 of the Act, as the debtor in each case is the same person, namely, the joint family [see S. 3 (1) of the Act]. If, therefore, the promissory note of 1929 executed by the father of the fourth respondent jointly with two strangers was for a debt binding on the family, the case would fall under the explanation to S. 8 and the decree would have to be scaled down with reference to the principal advanced under the earlier note of 1929. This question, however, has been left undetermined by the Court below as it held that it was not necessary for the purpose of the explanation to S. 8 that the debtor should be the same, a view which we have held to be untenable. If, on the other hand, it were found that the earlier note was not executed for a debt binding on the family, the question debtor who died during the pendency of the suit having been a party to both promissory notes. We consider that it is not necessary for the application of S. 8 that the parties to the earlier and the later debts should be absolutely identical. As observed by us in Doraikannu Odayar v. Veerasami Padayachi there may be cases in which a debt due jointly and severally from A and B is included in a fresh document executed by A alone or cases in which a debt solely due by A is included in a fresh document executed by A and B. There is no obvious reason why the explanation to S. 8 should not be applied to cases of that sort when the application for scaling down the debt is made by the person who is a debtor under both the instruments. Even if the later transaction in such cases cannot be deemed to be a 'renewal' in the strict sense of the term, it would amount to an inclusion of the pre-existing liability of the common debtor in the later document. The fourth respondent will thus be entitled in any case to the benefit of the explanation in scaling down the decree under S. 8.

The order of the Court below is set aside and the application under S. 19 is remitted to the lower Court for disposal in the light of this judgment. The costs of this revision petition will abide the result.

After a suit for redemption of a kanom held by a tarwad which was a jenmi paying more than Rs. 500 as land revenue there was a partition by which the kanom was allotted to one tavazhi which paid less than Rs. 500 as land revenue. In an application for scaling down by the tavazhi, Held, the tavazhi was under a liability to pay the rent such as would entitle it to claim the benefits of S. 15 of Act IV of 1938.

On payment of the arrears of rent as scaled down the tavazhi is entitled to the benefits under Ss. 22 to 24 of the Malabar Tenancy Act.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Walluvanad, dated 27th October, 1938 and made in I.A. No. 993 of 1938 in O. S. No. 212 of 1934.

A. P. Kuttisankara Menon for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wadsworth, J.—The petitioner here was the plaintiff in a suit to redeem a Malabar kanom. An application was filed in that suit by the ninth defendant for relief under S. 15 of Madras Act IV of 1938. That application was granted and it is this order that the plaintiff-petitioner seeks to revise.

Wads-
worth, J.

The kanom in question was executed on 23rd March, 1915, and it contained a provision that in case of default of payment of rent to the jenmi, the latter could adjust the arrears of rent due with interest thereon to the kanom amount. There was a default and on 10th September, 1934, the plaintiff filed a suit for redemption appropriating the arrears towards the amount which was due under the kanom and claiming to redeem the kanom on payment of the balance Rs. 715 and odd. At the time of this suit, the kanom right was held by the tarwad of the defendants which admittedly paid more than Rs. 500 as land revenue and was therefore not an agriculturist, having regard to the Proviso D to S. 3 (ii) of Act IV of 1938. On 5th July, 1935, there was a partition in the defendant's tarwad and at this partition the kanom right in question was assigned to the tavazhi represented by the ninth defendant. This smaller group pays less than Rs. 500 as reasoning in the decision in Cheruvu v. Chath view is taken by King, J., in Cheeru v. Chath in a case arising under S. 15 of Act IV of 1938.

A further contention relates to the effect of S. 15 of the Malabar Tenancy Act which provides that the tenant may obtain a renewal on deposit of all arrears with interest at the contract rate, if any, up to the date of the application. The suggestion is that to apply the provisions of S. 15 of Act IV of 1938 would amount to a repeal of the provisions of the Malabar Tenancy Act. We are unable to accept this contention. By applying the provisions of S. 15 of Act IV of 1938 to this case, the amount of the arrears due by the tenant becomes liquidated by a deposit in accordance with the terms of that section. When the Court has to deal with an application under Ss. 22 to 24 of the Malabar Tenancy Act, it has to look to the arrears due at the time of its order for deposit of those arrears; it will order renewal in favour of the tenant. When ascertaining the amount of the arrears Certain members of a tarwad applied to the Collector under S. 43 of the Marumakkattayam Act for registration of the tarwad as impartible. After notice of the application a tavashi filed a suit in the Civil Court under S. 38 for partition of the tarwad. Notwithstanding the suit for partition, the Collector proceeded with the application and ordered the registration of the tarwad as impartible. As to the effect of the registration on the suit, Held, (1) that the pendency of the application under S. 43 did not preclude a tavashi from filing the suit under S. 38; (2) that the filing of the suit put an end to the right of the other members of the tarwad to apply under S. 43 and the Collector had no power to order the registration; and (3) that the doctrine of lis pendens has no application to the case.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The parties are members of a Marumakkattayam tavashi. On the 15th of August, 1933, certain members of the tarwad, representing a two-thirds majority, applied to the Collector for the registration of the tarwad as impartible under S. 43 of the Marumakkattayam Act, XXII of 1933. As required by the statute, notice of the application was served upon the first respondent, who on the 23rd of October,

Leach, C.J.

1933, filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Alatur for partition of the tarwad under the provisions of S. 38 of the Act. Notwithstanding the suit, the registration application was proceeded with and resulted in the Collector passing an order on the 15th January, 1934, for the registration of the tarwad as impartible. The District Munsif held that the registration of the tarwad had the effect of defeating the suit and accordingly he dismissed it. The respondent then appealed to the District Court of South Malabar. The District Judge held that the registration of the tarwad did not affect the respondent's right to bring the suit and he remanded it to the trial Court to be dealt with on the merits. The defendants then appealed to this Court. This appeal was heard by King, J., who concurred in the decision of the District Judge. The present appeal is from the judgment of King, J.

S. 38 of the Act states that any tavashi represented by the majority of its major members may claim to take its share of all the properties of the tarwad over which it has power of disposal, and separate from the tarwad, provided that no tavashi shall claim to be divided from the tarwad during the lifetime of an ancestress common to the tavashi and to any other tavashi or tavashis, of the tarwad, except with the consent of the ancestress, if she is a member of the tarwad. There is an explanation to the section which says that for the purposes of Chap. VI (which deals with the right of partition) a male member of a tarwad or a female member without any living child or descendant in the female line, shall be deemed to be a tavashi if he or she has no living female ascendant who is a member of the tarwad. The respondent has no living female ascendant and he himself constitutes a tavashi. Therefore he had the right to institute the suit for the partition of the tarwad.

Sub-S. (1) of S. 43 allows two-thirds of the major members of a tarwad to present a petition to the Collector for the registration of the tarwad as impartible. Sub-S. (3) states that if after giving notice to all the major members of the tarwad and making such enquiry as he deems fit, the Collector is satisfied that not less than two-thirds of the major members of the tarwad have signed the petition with their free consent and desire the registration of the tarwad as impartible, he shall register the tarwad as impartible. S. 43 is embodied in Chap. VII which deals exclusively with impartible tarwads. Chaps. VI and VII stand apart and there is nothing in any of the sections of these two Chapters which suggests that a tarwashi is precluded from filing a suit for partition because there happens to be pending an application for registration under Chap. VII.

If the ordinary rule of Hindu Law that the filing of a partition suit involves the automatic severance of the joint status applies, it is clear that there would be no power in the Collector to register a tarwad as impartible once a suit for partition has been filed. It is not contested that the ordinary rule of Hindu Law does apply. In fact it was so held in *Kunchi Amma v. Minakshi Amma*¹. This being the position, the filing of the suit on the 23rd of October, 1933, put an end to the right of the other members of the tarwad to apply for registration under S. 43, and the Collector had no power to order registration. His order of the 15th of January, 1934, must be regarded as being null and void.

Mr. Sitarama Rao has suggested that the doctrine of lis pendens applies and that, inasmuch as the application under S. 43 was filed first, the suit was incompetent. The doctrine of lis pendens obviously can have no application here. There is a right to partition given in Chap. VI and there is nothing in Chap. VII which prevents that right being exercised while the tarwad remains unregistered.

We consider that the decision under appeal is correct. The appeal will be dismissed with costs in favour of the first respondent.

the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in C. S. No. 206 of 1935.

Nugent Grant and C. Srinivasa Chari for Appellants
V. Radhakrishnayya for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS: The Chief Justice.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the appellants on the origin of this Court for a declaration that they were entitled exclusively to the use of a certain trade mark and for a permanent injunction restraining the respondents from using a similar mark. The defence was threefold. In the first place it was said that the respondents had the right to use the mark complained of by reason of concurrent user. In the second place it was said that the appellants had in any event lost the right of exclusive user by reason of their acquiescence in the respondents using the marks now complained of. The third plea was that the appellants had abandoned any rights they might have had in the mark. The learned trial Judge (Gentle, J.) found that the use by the respondents of the mark complained of was an infringement of the rights of the appellants, but that the appellants had acquiesced in the course of conduct pursued by the respondents and therefore they were not entitled to a permanent injunction. On this ground he dismissed the suit but without costs. The appellants challenge the finding of the learned Judge that they had acquiesced in the use of the mark by the respondents and the respondents support the judgment on the grounds advanced by them at the trial. They further contend that the learned Judge should have allowed them their costs.

The appellants are piecegoods merchants carrying on business in Bangalore and the respondents are piecegoods merchants carrying on business in Madras. The parties, however, confine their businesses to these places. The ap deal in longcloth, shirtings and twill of Indian manufacture. Except for one shipment of goods in 1930 they have never dealt in piecegoods manufactured in England. The respondents do not deal in piecegoods of Indian manufacture, but import from England longcloth shirtings, twill and similar goods. The goods dealt in by the respondents are admittedly of superior quality to those dealt in by the appellants and command considerably higher prices. The learned Judge found as a fact that the business of the respondents caused no financial loss to the appellants and it is manifest that anybody who applied to the respondents for cloth would not get an inferior, but a superior article.

The mark of which the appellants claim the exclusive right of user consists of a figure of a baby sitting on four pieces of cloth and holding a rattle in the right hand. Above the figure is the word 'baby' in English, and at the sides the same word in Nagiri, Urdu, Kanarese and Tamil. The mark complained of consists of the figure of a baby kneeling with its hands upon a single piece of cloth, partly unrolled, and underneath are the words 'Baby Brand' in English, and the word 'Baby' in Nagiri, Urdu, Telugu and Tamil. It is conceded by the respondents, as it must be, that if the appellants are entitled to the exclusive use of their mark, the mark adopted by the respondent will constitute an infringement of the appellants' right. According to the plaint the appellants adopted their mark in the year 1927, but this has not been proved. Despite the allegations of acquiescence and abandonment advanced by the respondents no one from the appellants' firm has ventured to go into the witness box. Therefore it has not been proved that the appellants adopted the mark in 1927, but the respondents have admitted that the appellants used it in 1929 and for the purpose of this case it may be taken that it was adopted by the appellants in that year. The respondents decided to use the mark which they now claim as theirs in the early part of 1930 and they used it on goods imported into this country in August of that year. It was conceded by the appellants in the course of the hearing of the appeal that in instructing their suppliers in England to mark their goods with the mark complained of the respondents acted in good faith and in entire ignorance that the appellants had already adopted the mark of a baby. Further, it was accepted that the respondents have never used their mark on piecegoods of to goods manufactured in and imported from England.

In the course of his judgment the learned Judge has observed that it would appear at one time that piecegoods merchants in India were under the impression that if a trade mark were registered in England this would result in protection in India. That there was this impression is shown from the conduct of the parties in this case. On the 25th September, 1930 the respondents wrote to their suppliers in Manchester asking them to obtain the registration of the mark in suit as their own trade mark. The suppliers took steps to carry out their instructions, but it was discovered that other merchants were using a 'Baby' trade mark and that the appellants had themselves applied for registration in England of their mark. It was also ascertained that the appellants' application had not been granted and the mark claimed by them had been placed on the 'Refused list'. In a letter dated 5th February, 1931, the suppliers wrote to the respondents stating that by allowing their mark to go on the 'Refused list' no one could obtain registration of a similar mark and if they continued to use it for two or three years they might make an application for it to be put on the registered trade mark list, this privilege being given as the result of user of the mark. There was lengthy correspondence between the respondents and their suppliers with regard to registration in England and letters also passed between the respondents and a firm of trade mark agents from whom the respondents sought and obtained advice at the suggestion of their suppliers. The result of the advice was that the respondents decided not to proceed with their application for registration in England and not to expend money in advertising their claim to the mark in India, but to continue to use the mark on the goods imported by them. The appellants were confining the use of their mark to goods of Indian manufacture and in following the course which they did I am of the opinion that the respondents considered that they were acting within their rights.

On the 18th April 1931 the appellants' legal adviser wrote to the respondents complaining of the infringement of their trade mark. The respondents were called upon to refrain from using the mark, to withdraw all goods bearing the mark from the market and to pay Rs. 5,000/- by way of damages. On the 28th April, 1931, the legal adviser of the respondents replied to this letter and denied that the mark had in the minds of the public become associated with the appellants' goods. It was asserted that the respondents were merely using the mark on English goods and that if a suit were filed it would be defended. The appellants took no further steps in the matter and the business of the respondents in the goods bearing the mark complained of continued to increase greatly year by year. From 14th August, 1930 to 31st December, 1935, the total value of the goods imported by the respondents bearing this mark amounted to nearly Rs. 17,000,00, or over £127,000. In addition to the capital which the respondents had to provide for the shipments they expended Rs. 20,000 in advertising and in other ways in popularising their goods. That the appellants knew of this cannot be doubted for a moment and they were content to allow the respondents to use the mark on the imported goods until the 27th July, 1935, when they filed the present suit. For the purpose of stamping the goods which the appellants imported from England in 1930 they sent a block to their suppliers. On the 30th March, 1931, a few months after they had imported their one and only lot of English manufactured goods, they wrote to the suppliers to return to them the block, which clearly indicated their intention not to deal any more in goods of this class made in England.

At this stage it will be convenient to inquire how the doctrine of acquiescence has been applied in trade mark cases. For the appellants it has been contended that before this doctrine can be applied all the conditions stated by Fry, J., in *Willmott v. Barber*¹, must be complied with. That case did not relate to a trade mark, but to an agreement for the lease of land. After stating that a man is not to be deprived of his legal rights unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights, Fry, J., stated in the following words the elements or requisites necessary to constitute fraud of this description:

" In the first place the plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights. Secondly, the plaintiff must have expended some money or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the defendant's land) on the faith of his mistaken belief. Thirdly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff. If he does not know of it he is in the same position as the plaintiff, and the doctrine of acquiescence is

CJ. money or in the other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. Where all these elements exist there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle the Court to restrain the possessor of the legal right from exercising it, but, in my judgment, nothing short of this will do."

These observations relate to a situation in which the plain

Rip Van Winkle policy of going to sleep and not watching what their rivals and competitors in the same line of business were doing. I accept the evidence of any gentleman who comes into the box and gives his evidence in a way which satisfies me that he is speaking the truth when he says that he individually did not know of the existence of a particular element or a particular factor in the goods marketed by his opponents. But the question is a wider question than that: Ought not he to have known: is he entitled to shut his eyes to everything that is going on around him, and then when his rivals have perhaps built a very important trade by the user of indicia which he might have prevented their using had he moved in time, come to the Court and say: 'Now stop them from doing it further, because a moment of time has arrived when I have awakened to the fact that this is calculated to infringe my rights'. Certainly not. He is bound, like everybody else who wishes to stop that which he says is an invasion of his rights, to adopt a position of aggression at once, and to insist, as soon as the matter is brought to his attention, or as soon as, in the opinion of the Court, it ought to have come to his attention, to take steps to prevent its continuance; it would be an insufferable injustice were the Court to allow a man to lie by while his competitors are building up an important industry and then to come forward, so soon as the importance of the industry has been brought home to his mind, and endeavour to take from them that of which they had legitimately made use; every day which they used it satisfying them more and more that there was no one who either could or would complain of their so doing. The position might be altogether altered had the user of the factor or the element in question been of a secretive or surreptitious nature; but when a man is openly using, as part of his business, names and phrases, or other elements, which persons in the same trade would be entitled, if they took steps, to stop him from using, he gets in time a right to sue them which prevents those who could have stopped him at one time from asserting at a later stage their right to an injunction."

In *McCaw Stevenson & Orr, Ltd. v. Lee Bros.*¹, acquiescence for four years was held to be sufficient to preclude the plaintiff from succeeding. In 1897 the plaintiffs in that case registered the word 'Glacier' as a trade mark in respect of transparent paper as a substitute for stained glass. As the result of user the word had become identified with the plaintiffs' goods. In 1900 the defendants commenced to sell similar goods under the name 'Glazine'. In 1905 the plaintiffs commenced an action for infringement. The defendants denied that the use of the word 'Glazine' was calculated to deceive and also pleaded acquiescence. A director of the plaintiff company admitted that he had known of the use of the word 'Glazine' by the defendants for four years—he would not say it was not five years. It was held that the plaintiffs failed on the merits and by reason of their delay in bringing the action.

ment of a trade mark, but the decisions to which I have referred to clearly indicate that where a trader allows a rival trader to expend money over a considerable period in the building up of a business with the aid of a mark similar to his own he will not be allowed to stop his rival's business. If he were permitted to do so great loss would be caused not only to the rival trader but to those who depend on his business for their livelihood. A village may develop into a large town as the result of the building up of a business and most of the inhabitants may be dependent on the business. No hard and fast rule can be laid down for deciding when a person has, as the result of inaction, lost the right of stopping another using his mark. As pointed out in *Rowland v. Mitchell*¹, each case must depend on its own circumstances, but obviously a person cannot be allowed to stand by indefinitely without suffering the consequence.

I consider that in this case there is ample material to support the finding that the appellants have lost their right of action against the respondents by reason of their acquiescence in the respondents' use of the mark complained of. During a period of four years the respondents built up a very large business and it has not been suggested, indeed it would be idle to do so, that the appellants did not know of all that was going on. In addition to the capital sunk in their business the respondents spent during this period Rs. 20,000 in popularizing the mark. There is no question of the respondents having the intention to steal the appellants' trade. They were dealing in a better class of goods and as I have already stated it was admitted by the appellants in this Court that the respondents adopted the 'Baby' mark in ignorance of the fact that the appellants were using it.

On the 27th August, 1934, a Madras piecegoods merchant named K. R. Narayana Ayyar wrote to the appellants stating that he desired to use the 'Baby' mark on piecegoods and asked whether they had any objection to this course. It was pointed out to the appellants that the respondents were using this mark on their goods and it was suggested that he should be allowed the same privilege. The letter concluded,

On the 4th September, 1934, the appellants replied as follows:

"You should know that we have long registered our 'Baby' trade mark and running in all the markets. Any colourable imitation of our marks will make you liable under law for penalty for 'infringement of trade marks', which kindly note."

No reference was made in this letter to the fact that the respondents had been using the mark. K. R. Narayana Aiyar wrote again the next day to the appellants as no reference was made to the position of the respondents in the appellants' reply. In this letter he said:

"As stated in my letter of the 27th ultimo Messrs. Alathur Abboy Chetty and Company, Madras, have been using 'Baby' brand and I am very much surprised to see that since you say that you have long registered your 'Baby' trade mark, they, the said Messrs. Alathur Abboy Chetty and Company, Madras also should be using 'Baby' brand. How is this? I am advised that any trade mark used by more than one is a common property, to say plainly, it is not the exclusive property of any one, and can therefore be used by others also. Having regard to the fact, that 'Baby' brand is being used by you and also by Messrs. Alathur Abboy Chetty and Company, Madras, I have no hesitation in saying that the said 'Baby' brand is a common property and can therefore be used by me and others also. If you alone had been using 'Baby' brand and not anybody else, then it is different matter altogether, but now there is also another person using the 'Baby' brand."

The reply to this letter was sent on the 13th September, 1934 and consisted of these words:

"In reply to your letter dated the 10th instant, we wish to refer you to our letter No. 1973, dated the 4th September, 1934."

There is here a deliberate evasion of K. R. Narayana Aiyar's pointed question with regard to the respondents' user of the mark and the next day he wrote to the appellants a letter in which he said:

"Unless you give me a satisfactory reply to the points raised in my letter of the 5th September, 1934, I am advised that you are not the exclusive owner of the 'Baby' brand, because it is also being used by another party, Messrs. Alathur Abboy Chetty and Company, and you have therefore no right to prevent me or anybody else from using 'Baby' brand on piecegoods."

To this letter no reply at all was sent and the present suit was not launched till some ten months later. Obviously the appellants were unable to give an effective reply to these pointed in the use of the mark by the respondents I agree with the learned Judge that it is unnecessary to decide whether the respondents' pleas of abandonment and user are well founded.

With regard to the memorandum of cross-objections I consider that the respondents should have their costs in the Court below. That they adopted the mark in ignorance of the fact that it was being used by the appellants is not disputed, and in answer to a question put by the Court, Mr. Nugent Grant, on behalf of the appellants, made it clear that the appellants were not suggesting that the respondents had continued to use this mark in order to steal the appellants' business. Where a plea of acquiescence or abandonment succeeds, especially where the defendant has taken the trade mark of another in ignorance and has used it in the mistaken belief, but sincerely entertained, that he is acting within the law it would be wrong to deprive him of his costs. I would dismiss the appeal with costs and allow the cross-objections with costs. There will be a certificate for two counsel in both Courts.

One 'M', a Roman Catholic Christian, executed an agreement whereby he relinquished all his rights in his properties in favour of his sons and directed them to pay off his debts. He set apart 47 acres of manja and punja lands for a charity called 'Chinnayya Odayar Samadhi Dharmam' for defraying the expenses of Pooja, etc., at the tomb of his father Chinnayya Odayar and of feeding pilgrims during the annual festival at Velanganni and for supplying oil to 1,000 persons during that time. A creditor of 'M' attached the dedicated properties and M's claim that the attachment could not be made as the lands were dedicated properties was allowed and the creditor sued for a declaration, that the charity was illusory and otherwise invalid. The lower Court upheld the charity, though it was of the view that that part of the dedication namely, for Pooja at the tomb of Chinnayya Odayar was bad as being one for superstitious uses.

Held, that the entire trust was valid, that the dedication was mainly for the benefit of the public and hence will be saved by S. 18 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur in O. S. No. 39 of 1935.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang Row, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur dated 24th August, 1936, in O. S. No. 39 of 1935 on his file, a suit to set aside the order made on a claim petition on the 11th October, 1933, in favour of the defendant. The subject-matter of the dispute is about 47 acres of land situated in two villages which were under Ex. I dated June 25th, 1927, dedicated for certain purposes connected

The principal facts of the case are that the defendant is the head of a family which possessed considerable landed property and also engaged in trade on a fairly large scale in several places. The landed property of the family was as much as 200 velies, a veli being equal to about 6½ acres. The defendant was assisted in the business by his three sons and the defendant and his sons executed Ex. I which is styled a partition deed on 25th June, 1927. The partners are however Christians and the phrase "partition deed" is perhaps not the correct description to be applied to the document. It is this document that was put forward as a shield by the defendant when the properties in question which had been dedicated for the purposes mentioned above were attached in execution of a decree obtained by the plaintiffs who are Nattukottai Chettis against the defendant. The claim put forward by the defendant on the strength of Ex. I was allowed and the attachment was cancelled and the present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs to set aside the order on the claim petition and to declare that the properties covered by Ex. I are liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree obtained by them against the defendant. The main contest in the Court below centred round the question whether the dedication made by Ex. I was valid. The finding was in favour of the defendant, that is to say, in the affirmative and the suit was dismissed with costs. The plaintiffs are the appellants and the same point which arose for decision in the Court below is the point for determination in this appeal. The truth of the document, that is to say, its execution or registration, is not denied and the only attack made on it is in respect of its validity. This attack is based on more than one ground and it will be convenient to deal with each separately. In the first place it was contended that the dedication was not real but only sham or illusory; in other words, that there was no intention whatever to make a dedication or create a trust, but the document was executed merely for the purpose of screening the properties in question from creditors. So far as this ground of attack is concerned very little need be said in support of the finding of the Court below, for this part of the case has been very fully dealt with in the judgment appealed from and the attack on this part of the judgment was never very serious. It is not as if the properties concerned formed any considerable portion of the properties of the executants. As mentioned already, the landed properties of the family were very considerable in extent, being about 1300 acres and what was dedicated by Ex. I was less than 50 acres of land; a very small fraction, indeed, of the total property. It cannot be said that if the idea was to screen the properties from the creditors the executants would have thought of screening only a very small fraction of their total property from the creditors. Secondly, there is no doubt that actually the purposes mentioned in Ex. I for which the dedication was made were being carried out though much better evidence could have been perhaps adduced. There is very little reason to doubt the actual fact that the charities mentioned in Ex. I were being performed both before the document was executed and afterwards, and the dedication in Ex. I was merely to give permanency to what was being done for several years in commemoration of the deceased father of the defendant who had died about 30 years before. As pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge, action was taken after Ex. I as if it was a genuine dedication because a patta was taken out for the lands in the name of the charity, and receipts were being granted in the name of the charity. Lease deeds were also taken in the name of the charity and account books were maintained showing the extent of the income of these lands for the charity. It is also found that Ex. I was mentioned in all subsequent important transactions with the creditors, and it is obvious that but for Ex. I there could not have been these transactions. The main object of Ex. I, as a perusal of Ex. I will show, was to make arrangements for the satisfaction of the creditors of the family treating all the debts incurred by whichever member of the family as debts binding on the family and making all the properties belonging to the family liable in respect of such debts. The arrangement was that the father, that is, the defendant, was to divest himself of all his rights in the properties which, as mentioned already, were very considerable except for a small house worth about Rs. 2,000 and all the properties of the family, that is, the entire 200 velis of land and the outstandings due to the family with the exception of the property reserved for the charity were placed in the hands of the sons for the express purpose of paying off all the debts, one of the conditions being that the sons were not to alienate any of the properties or to make any partition as between themselves of the properties till all the debts were paid. It is thus clear that the main object of Ex. I was to make an efficient arrangement for the payment of all the creditors and incidentally to make a small provision for a religious or charitable purpose. It is found that there was an endowment in respect of the tomb of the defendant's grandfather which was being administered for a long time and it was nothing out of the way therefore for the defendant and his sons to agree to create a similar endowment for the tomb of the defendant's father. It is really unnecessary to say more on this topic, for it is futile to contend that the dedication was not real or was only illusory. That the intention was to make a real dedication is clear not only from the document itself but also from the surrounding circumstances and the subsequent conduct of the persons connected with the document. The attack therefore on the document on the ground that it did not make a real dedication of the properties for any religious or charitable purpose must fail.

The real attack on the document is on the ground that it was in fraud of creditors and it is this aspect of the case that has taken most of the time during the argument before us. In deciding this question regard must be had to the state of affairs at the time Ex. I was executed, that is, June 1927. In other words, we have to ascertain what was the actual financial condition of the defendant and his sons in June, 1927, when this dedication was made. This evidence has been analysed by learned counsel and the gist of the evidence is as follows. The assets of the family were a house worth Rs. 2,000 and 200 velis of land and certain outstandings. What exactly the outstandings were it is not possible to say and the appellants' advocate has valued the lands at a flat rate of Rs. 300 an acre, proceeding on the basis of the price paid for the lands now in dispute under Ex. III. The valuation therefore on behalf of the plaintiffs of the assets is Rs. 3,92,000 and it omits all mention of outstandings and is based on a mere estimate of the value of the lands and not on the actual values fetched subsequently. It is not denied that the price of land fell after 1927 and the evidence shows that 536 acres were sold in discharge of debts during the period 1930-34 for Rs. 2,64,000, making an average of nearly Rs. 500 an acre; and it is seen that another

540 acres still remained subject to incumbrances to the extent of about Rs. 2,10,000. Making allowance for the fall in the price of lands after 1927, it would not be wrong to say that the value of the lands in 1927 must have been at least Rs. 600 an acre. Even allowing only Rs. 500 an acre, the value of the lands, namely, 200 velis or 13,000 acres would be Rs. 6½ lakhs. This figure, may, in our opinion, be taken as a conservative estimate of the value of the lands in June 1927. As regards the liabilities the statement furnished to us by the appellants' advocate shows only Rs. 4,22,870 as the total amount of the debts. Out of this amount it is obvious that at least Rs. 40,000 should be deducted because this amount of Rs. 40,000 is included in the larger amount of Rs. 1,09,370 shown as the amount due to the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. A reference to the document relating to this debt at page 78 of the printed record shows that this debt of Rs. 40,000 was incurred on a promissory note executed on 26th July, 1927. It is thus clear that this debt of Rs. 40,000 was not in existence on the date of Ex. I. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is as follows:—

"Upon a review of the evidence of the parties as well as the transactions of the debts and discharge it appears to me to be safe to infer that the properties were worth Rs. 5 lakhs and the debts did not exceed that figure."

He also points out that there are no sufficiently strong circumstances which indicate that there was any intention to defeat or delay creditors and that no creditor thought of challenging Ex. I from 1927 onwards till the attachment was made by the plaintiff in 1933, though all the creditors would have been aware of the document very soon after it was executed. The third plaintiff in his evidence admitted that the value of the assets was Rs. 4½ lakhs, on the then basis, that is to say, on the basis of the value in 1927. He said so even in his examination-in-chief and repeated it in cross-examination. It is therefore clear that even according to his own statement the assets are worth more than the amount of the liabilities, because, according to the statement furnished to us by the appellants' advocate, the liabilities were then only Rs. 4,22,870. This value is certainly less than the then value of the assets according to the third plaintiff himself. In this connection some allowance has to be made also for the natural propensity of mankind to take a rosy view of things and to value one's own property at a little higher figure than would perhaps be fetched in the market.

was only private and not public and that it could not be regarded as valid in view of S. 14 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is really no substance in this contention. It is clear from S. 18 of the Transfer of Property Act that the restrictions in Ss. 14, 16 and 17 do not apply in the case of transfers of property for the benefit of the public in the advancement of religion, etc. In this case there can be no doubt that the purpose was a religious one, that is to say, for the advancement of religion and there is nothing to show that it was not for the benefit of the public. If it had been intended to attack the validity of the dedication in Ex. I, on the ground that there was no benefit to the public thereby, it should have been pleaded in so many words, for the question whether a particular charity was for the benefit of the public or not is a question of fact on which evidence can be led. For instance, whether the offering of prayers at the tomb or the performance of other ceremonies there, are for the benefit of the public is a question that cannot be answered as a question of law; for the answer must depend on the beliefs entertained by the class or community to which the dedicators belonged. Even otherwise it seems to us that really the purpose of the dedication was not private. The main purpose was obviously for the benefit of the public. By far the more important purpose was the feeding of the poor pilgrims twice a day on ten days during the festival of Arogyamatha Swami at Velanganni without distinction of caste or religion and the distribution to them, the number not being less than 1,000 of oil on Wednesdays and Saturdays and also 1,000 mud vessels. It is clear that it was a purpose that must necessarily consume by far the greater part of the income derived from the land set apart for this charity. No doubt it is added at the end later on that Arathanai and Japams should be daily performed at the grave with lights, flowers, incense, etc., according to the custom of the family. It does not follow that the introduction of this clause about the performance of japams etc., at the grave makes any difference. Even the feeding of the pilgrims and the distribution of oil among them is to be done in the name of the tomb charity or the Samadhidharmam as described in the document. The learned Subordinate Judge has stated with reference to the clause in Ex. I regarding the offering of prayers, japams, etc., at the tomb that the dedication for such a purpose is not valid, relying on *Most Reverend Joseph Colgan v. Administrator-General of Madras*¹ which held, following the older English cases, that a dedication for perpetual masses for the benefit of the soul of the departed was void as being one for superstitious uses. It may be necessary that the ruling in *Most Reverend Joseph Colgan v. Administrator-General of Madras*¹, which relies on those old cases which were subsequently overruled by the House of Lords in *Bourne v. Keane*² may have to be considered if anything really turned on this aspect of the case. Our attention has been drawn to the recent case—*Kayastha Patasala, Allahabad v. Mt. Baghwathi Devi*¹ decided by the Privy Council in 1936. Though that was a case in which the trust deed had not been attacked on the ground of being an attempt to defraud creditors, nevertheless in dealing with the question whether the trust itself is valid because the dedication was partly for purposes which were not for the public benefit can be raised in a suit of this kind has been decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council against the present contention of the appellants. In other words, even where questions may arise under Ss. 14, 16 or 17 of the Transfer of Property Act in connection with certain dispositions in favour of private persons, nevertheless an attack on the trust deed on such grounds cannot be made except in a suit for administration of the trust or the assets belonging to the person who made the dedication or created the trust. It is, however, not necessary to rely on this aspect because in this case there is no foundation laid for the attack on Ex. I on this ground, namely, that any of the purposes for which the dedication was made were purely for private benefit and not for the public benefit. It cannot be said that ex necessitate rei the offering of prayers, japams, etc., at the grave can never be for the public benefit or for the benefit of any section of the public. In any case, this purpose appears to be obviously subordinate to the main purpose of the dedication which was to feed poor pilgrims and distribute oil among them during the ten days of a well-known festival in the neighbourhood. Such a dedication is obviously for the benefit of the public and it certainly advances religion according to the notions of the community to which the executants of Ex. I belong; in other words the feeding of poor pilgrims does advance religion according to the tenets of Roman Catholics, and it cannot be said therefore that the dedication was not “for the benefit of the public” within the meaning of these words which are found in S. 18 of the Transfer of Property Act. This attack on Ex. I on the ground that it offends against the provisions of S. 14 of the Transfer of Property Act is one of which no hint is given in the plaint.

For the reasons given above we see no reason to interfere with the finding of the lower Court on the only question which arises in this litigation, namely, the validity of Ex. I. Once Ex. I is found to be valid, it is obvious the suit must fail, and the suit must therefore be deemed to have been rightly dismissed. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs of the defendant-respondent.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), S. 10—Statements made by one of the conspirators after the conspiracy had ended—Admissibility.

Communications between conspirators while the conspiracy was going on with reference to the carrying out of the conspiracy are relevant as evidence of the common intention but statements made after arrest or after the conspiracy had ended by way of description of events then past, are not admissible against the other parties.

Emperor v. Ganesh Raghunath, (1931) I.L.R. 55 Bom. 839 and Emperor v. Abani, (1910) I.L.R. 38 Cal. 169 (S.B.), approved.

But where after excluding such statements, there was evidence sufficient to justify the conviction it is impossible to say that there was a failure of justice and the Judicial Committee will not interfere with the conviction.

Appeal from the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, dated 10th July, 1939, which confirmed the conviction and sentence of death passed on the appellant by the Sessions Judge, Peshawar Division, on 8th May, 1939.

his hand, the barrel of which smelt as if freshly discharged. There was an empty cartridge jammed in the barrel. When the appellant came up from the field in which he had been working about half-a-mile away from the scene of the murder, he asserted that Umar Sher was innocent and should be released, but the others present refused to do so. Umar Sher's main defence seems to have been absence of motive. This fact, however, was relied upon by the prosecution as showing that he was a hired assassin bribed to commit the murder by the appellant and Mst. Mehr Taja, who were co-conspirators in that regard. This was found by the Court to have been the fact. The principal evidence of the conspiracy between these two prisoners consisted of three letters, two from the female prisoner to the appellant and one from the appellant to the female prisoner. The authenticity of the letters as being what they purport to be and the handwriting have not, and could not have, been contested before their Lordships.

It will be convenient to set out the relevant portions of the three letters. The first is in the handwriting of Mst. Mehr Taja:

"Greetings to thee, O my sweetheart. Mind not in the least if I have been hard on thee at times—pray forgive me for the same. In fact I feel offended when ill is spoken of thee. Khan Khela who had visited my house when Amir Jan was suffering from pain had a lot of talk against thee, but beware and lend not thy ears to these. They are archdevils. Partake not of anything from their hands. Now I shall sell myself and do this act if only I have thee at my back. What a blissful hour it would be when with Amir Jan wailing over Ali Askar we contract our Nikah and enjoy ourselves. Be not angry, my darling, for thy sorrow makes me sad. However hard on thee I have been in the past, that is all past. Henceforth I solemnly promise to desist. I do fervently cherish the hope that God will make thee mine. Try and send Mir Aftab often to me so that I may talk to him. I have found out money for thee but thou must unhesitatingly find out the man. My heart is bursting for thee and I long for thee immensely. In the end accept my greetings."

The second letter is also in Mst. Mehr Taja's handwriting:

"Letter to the sweetheart. Peace be on you. The fact, my darling, is that I am in great distress: otherwise I would not have conveyed thee such harsh things. I say these to thee for I am extremely distressed. Whom but thee have I as my own in this land of the Lord?.....I have a lot to tell you but I am helpless. For God's sake spare not a moment or thou wilt ever repent my loss. They are all one against me. It would be better if aught thou couldst do. Accept greetings."

The third letter is in the handwriting of the appellant:

"My sweetheart and the bearer of my burden. If thou tauntest me in regard to my mother, what do I care for her? I look to my God and to thee only for reliance. I cannot wait any more. For the sake of God and his Prophet, do try, or I will die. You must find out the money or I would die. Is it of my choice to be roaming about and thou be enjoying with him? But what shall I do? If I had my own way I would not have left you to remain with him. I am burning, and have pity on me, for God's sake. To me, the passing of each day is like months and years. Once place thyself in my charge and satiate me with the honey of thy red lips. Even if thou cuttest my head off my neck, I would still yearn for thy white breast. This is my last word if only thou wouldst attend to it. I have vowed for thy sake at many a shrine. The house of the torturer will be rendered desolate. Mirza Akbar's limbs have grown sapless after thee."

The judges in the Court below have found in these letters, their authenticity being established, evidence justifying the conviction of the appellant and Mst. Mehr Taja. The Judicial Commissioner, in dismissing these prisoners' appeals, thus summed up the position, with special reference to the letters:

"There is a reference to Mirza Akbar by name in the letter in the handwriting of the appellant, and the name clearly refers to the writer of the document. Furthermore, the three documents taken as a whole show that the two writers of the documents desired to get rid of Ali Askar so that they should marry each other, and there was a question of finding money for a hired assassin to get rid of him. Subsequently, we find that Ali Askar was shot by a man who had no motive to shoot him. In addition to this, there was the strange conduct of Mirza Akbar when Umar Sher was arrested. There is no reason for doubting the statement of the witnesses that he did request that Umar Sher should be released. It is true that in their earlier statements the witnesses did not mention this fact, but the obvious reason is that they did not attach any importance to it at the time, because they had no conception as to what was the motive for the commission of the offence.

In my opinion there is no doubt whatsoever that these two appellants Mirza Akbar and Mst. Mehr Taja did enter into conspiracy to murder Ali Askar and that they hired Umar Sher to commit the actual murder, which he did."

The appellant's contention, however, was that this conclusion was vitiated by the admission as against him of a statement made by Mst. Mehr Taja before the examining magistrate after she had been arrested on the charge of conspiracy. That statement, which was made in the appellant's absence, was admitted in evidence both by the trial Judge and by the Judicial Commissioner on appeal as relevant against the appellant under S. 10 of the Evidence Act. The Judicial Commissioner said that it had been argued that S. 10 did not apply to any statement made by conspirators if the offence to commit which they conspired had actually been committed. He rejected that argument, and refused to hold that S. 10 had that limited meaning, though he held that the evidence of the statement could not have great weight as against the appellant, since he had not had any opportunity of cross-examining Mst. Mehr Taja upon it. In their Lordships' judgment, the Judicial Commissioner misconstrued the effect of S. 10.

The English rule on this matter is in general well-settled. It is a common law rule, not based on, or limited by, express statutory words. The leading case of *R. v. Blake*¹ illustrates the two aspects of it, because that authority shows both what is admissible and what is inadmissible. What in that case was held to be admissible against the conspirator was the evidence of entries made by his fellow-conspirator contained in various documents actually used for carrying out the fraud. However, a document not created in the course of carrying out the transaction, but made by one of the conspirators after the fraud was completed, was held to be inadmissible against the other. No doubt what was contained in it amounted to a statement evidencing what had been done and also the common intent with which at the time it had been done, but it had nothing to do with carrying the conspiracy into effect. Lord Denman, C.J., said that the evidence must be rejected (p. 138):

".....on the principle that a mere statement, made by one conspirator to a third party or any act not done in pursuance of the conspiracy, is not evidence for or against another conspirator."

Later, Patteson, J., described it (p. 139) as 'a statement made after the conspiracy was effected'. Williams, J., said that it merely related 'to a conspiracy at that time completed'. Coleridge, J., said that it 'did not relate to the furtherance of the common object.' The words relied upon in S. 10 of the Evidence Act are 'in reference to their common intention'. These words may have been chosen as having the same significance as the word 'related' used by Williams and Coleridge, JJ. Where the evidence is admissible, it is admissible, in their Lordships' judgment, on the principle that the thing done, written or spoken was something done in carrying out the conspiracy, and was receivable as a step in the proof of the conspiracy: per Patteson, J., at page 139. The words written or spoken may be a declaration accompanying an act and indicating the quality of the act as being an act in the course of the conspiracy, or the words written or spoken may in themselves be acts done in the course of the conspiracy. This being the principle, their Lordships think that the words of

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Periakulam dated 19th August, 1938 and passed in M. P. No. 734 of 1938 in E. P. No. 648 of 1937 in O. S. No. 15 of 1937, etc.

C. A. Seshagiri Sastri for Petitioners.

T. P. Gopalakrishna Aiyar for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wads-
worth, J.

Wadsworth, J.—These revision petitions all arise out of applications by sons of the late Bommayya Goundan under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938, to scale down decrees on promissory notes passed against their father.

It is conceded that Bommayya Goundan was the manager of a joint family consisting of himself and his sons and that the debts in respect of which the decrees were passed were joint family debts. The learned District Munsif has found that the sons were not entitled to the benefits of the Act, because Bommayya Goundan was in the year 1936-37 assessed to income-tax at the time when he was the manager of the joint family. The main contention urged in these petitions was that Proviso A to S. 3 (ii) of the Act did not apply in a case in which the assessment was made in the year 1936-37 but in respect of the income of the previous year. This contention cannot succeed having regard to the words of the proviso which are not identical with but substantially the same as those in Proviso B in respect of which we have held in C. R. P. No. 1020 of 1939 that the criterion is not the period in respect of which the assessment is made but the date of the assessment. Proviso A only disqualifies persons who have been assessed to income-tax in either of the two financial years ending 31st March, 1938, and it does not lay down any restrictions regarding the period in respect of which that assessment might have been made.

A further contention relates to the question whether Bommayya Goundan was assessed in his individual capacity or as manager of the joint family. No doubt, if he was assessed expressly as manager of the joint family, all the members of that family would be disqualified from claiming to be agriculturists. The Collector's certificate Ex. 1 does not state that he was assessed in his capacity as manager of the joint family. The actual order of assessment was not produced in the trial Court but we are informed that it shows Bommayya Goundan to have been assessed in his individual capacity. The learned District Munsif does not appear to have applied his mind to the distinction between the assessment of a person in his individual capacity and the assessment of that person as manager of a joint family. He seems to have assumed that, because Bommayya Goundan was in fact the manager of a joint family at the time when he was assessed to income-tax, the assessment was necessarily in respect of joint family income. It seems to us that this is a question which should be elucidated by the production of the actual order of assessment, and in view of the way in which the learned District Munsif has regarded the question, we do not think it improper to allow the petitioners an opportunity to produce the order of assessment at this stage. We may point out that the revision petitions are filed only on behalf of three of the sons, the other son being disqualified from claiming as an agriculturist on personal grounds. We therefore allow the three revision petitions and remit the applications so far as these petitioners are concerned to the lower Court for fresh disposal after allowing both parties to adduce evidence on the question whether Bommayya Goundan's assessment was in his individual capacity or in his capacity as manager of the joint family. The petitioners having failed on their main contention we think it proper that each party should bear his own costs in revision.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wadsworth, J.—This revision petition raises questions under Ss. 15 and 16 of Madras Act IV of 1938. The petitioner here is the jenmi. The application filed in the lower Court was made by a number of persons claiming to represent the whole of the interest in the kanom right. The original kanom demise was made on 10th June, 1919, under Ex. A to the tarwad of which some of the present applicants were then members. There was a partition in the tarwad of the kanomdars and various tavashis became entitled to portions of the kanom right. Some of these tavashis alienated their rights and the present application under S. 15 was made by all the persons interested in the kanom right whether as representing the tavashis of the original kanomdars' tarwad or as alienees from such tavashis. The trial Court held that the application was valid and reduced the rent payable in accordance with the terms of S. 15.

Wads-
worth, J.

Two contentions were argued on behalf of the jennu before us. Firstly, it was contended that the application was bad in that it was a joint application made by a number of persons some of whom were alienees of portions of the land from the original kanomdars, while others were interested in the kanom right as a result of the partition. We have had to deal with a similar question in disposing of C. R. P. No. 854 of 1939 in which judgment is to be pronounced shortly and we are of opinion that an alienee of the whole of the tenant's interest in a portion of his holding is a person who is liable to pay rent in respect of that portion and provided that he is an agriculturist, is entitled to deposit the arrears of the holding for faslis 1346 and 1347 and obtain the benefits of S. 15.

A further contention raised was based on the provisions of S. 16 on the strength of which it was argued that the deposit to be made under S. 15 should include not only the rent for the two faslis named but also any arrears of land revenue paid by the landholder which the tenant was bound to pay by reason of contract. It seems to us that this contention, in the way in which it was put, has no merits. S. 16 saves the landholder's right to recover from his tenant anything which the landholder has paid which should have been paid by the tenant. But it does not make these sums part of the deposit contemplated in S. 15. All that it does is to safeguard the landholder's right to recover these sums in addition to that which is recoverable under S. 15. It does not provide a machinery for the recovery but it leaves the landholder to his ordinary right of suit.

In the course of arguments, however, it was suggested that though S. 15 relates only to that which is payable as rent and requires a deposit only of the rent for faslis 1346 and 1347, having regard to the definitions in Madras Act IV of 1938 and the Malabar Tenancy Act, the rent payable by a kanomdar includes the land revenue which the kanomdar has undertaken to pay on behalf of the jenmi. The arguments may be put in this way. By S. 3 (iv) of Madras Act IV of 1938 'rent' means, among other things, rent or michavaram as defined by the Malabar Tenancy Act, 1929. 'Michavaram' is defined in S. 3 (q) of the Malabar Tenancy Act as "whatever is agreed by a kanomdar in a kanom deed to be paid periodically, in money or in kind, or in both, to or on behalf of the jenmi." By the terms of Ex. A the kanom deed in the present suit, it is clear that the kanomdar is required to pay the land revenue on behalf of the jenmi and that the amount of this land revenue is deducted in arriving at the balance payable to the jenmi who is given a right to charge the kanomdar's interest for arrears of sircar kist recovered from the jenmi himself. It does not appear that we are concerned with a case of the kind contemplated in Ss. 14 and 15 of the Malabar Land Registration Act under which the kanomdar may be registered as a joint pattadar and be given a direct liability to pay the rent to Government. We will assume that the rent in this case has been calculated on the basis that the landlord is liable for the land revenue but that this is to be paid on behalf of the landlord by the tenant out of the produce of the land and a deduction is made on this account from the rent actually paid in kind to the landlord. It seems to follow that the michavaram payable by the kanomdar includes the land revenue which he has undertaken in the kanom deed to pay on behalf of his jenmi.

It has been argued by Mr. Govinda Menon for the respondent that the definition of 'michavaram' must be taken to exclude payments of land revenue made on behalf of the jenmi by the kanomdar. The argument is based mainly on the terms of S. 17 of the Malabar Tenancy Act which provides for a calculation of the renewal fee on the basis of deductions (1) of the revenue payable by the kanomdar under the deed, (2) of the interest, and (3) of the michavaram. The argument is that in this section, 'michavaram' is clearly used as excluding the revenue and that from this fact, we must read into the definition in S. 3 (g) the words 'except land revenue'. This seems to us rather a drastic way of dealing with the statute particularly as the definition S. 3 begins with the words 'unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context'. The repugnancy in the context can be clearly seen in S. 17 of that Act and it seems to us quite unnecessary to make an interpolation in the definition section as the saving clause at the beginning of the definition section is sufficiently effective to deal with the apparent discrepancy. It does appear from the definition in the Malabar Tenancy Act that 'michavaram' would include a payment of Government revenue agreed by the kanomdar in the kanom deed to be made on behalf of the jenmi and it would therefore seem that the deposit which is to be made under S. 15 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act must be a deposit of arrears of rent for the specified faslis including any arrears of Government revenue payable by the kanomdar in respect of those faslis.

It remains to consider whether the application has to be rejected on the ground that a deposit has not been made on the terms of S. 15, when this result is reached by means of an interpretation of the Act which was only suggested in the course of arguments on this revision petition. The counter-affidavit filed by the jenmi in the lower Court states in para. 10:

"Government revenue of the properties is in arrears for a long time. Failure to deposit the same is not proper. The said arrears have also to be deposited."

It seems to us quite clear from the arguments addressed to us here and from the wording of this paragraph, that it was intended to cover a plea that by reason of S. 16 of the Act, the deposit under that section must include the whole of the arrears of revenue payable by the tenant on behalf of the landlord. That is quite a different contention from the contention that the rent payable by the tenant which has to be deposited under S. 15 includes any arrears of revenue payable by the tenant under the terms of his agreement in respect of the particular faslis mentioned in that section. We must, we think, take it that the point now under consideration was not raised in the Court below nor was it raised here until the arguments had progressed some way. The result of permitting the jenmi to succeed on this contention would be that the application would have to be rejected, unless r. 1 (a) of the rules framed under the Act can be taken to authorise an extension of time owing to the failure of the agriculturist to pay the full rent by reason of a mistaken comprehension of the law as to what was the rent. It is extremely doubtful whether under r. 1 (a) such an extension of time could be granted. Assuming that it could not, the effect of allowing the petitioner to succeed in revision on this belated contention would be to deprive the respondent of a remedy which would have been available to him had the contention been taken at the proper time in the Court below. The Court below disposed of this matter on the 22nd of June, 1939. If it had then been decided that the applicants had to deposit not only the rent payable in cash to the jenmi for fasli 1347 but also any arrears of land revenue payable by them in respect of that fasli as a condition precedent to receiving the benefits of this section, there would have been time for the applicants to make good the deficiency before the statutory date 30th September, 1939. That is no longer the position and it seems to us very undesirable in revision to give effect to a contention which would now result in the complete defeat of the application, a result which would not have been achieved had the contention been taken at the proper time in the trial Court.

In this view, we dismiss the petition with costs.

JUDGMENTS: Wadsworth, J.—This petition raises the question whether the provisions of S. 15 of Act IV of 1938 can be applied so as to discharge a decree obtained by the endorsee of a promissory note executed for arrears of rent. On 11th February, 1936, the petitioner executed a promissory note for the arrears of rent due for fasli 1345 and previous faslis. The promisee under the note was one of the two zamindars of the village. He endorsed the note in favour of his co-zamindar, who

On 5th November, 1938, the petitioner applied under S. 19 of arrears had been discharged by paying in the Collector's office rejected and it is this order of which revision is sought.

there can be no doubt that a similar procedure can be invoked under S. 15 for the discharge of a decree for rent, having regard to the terms of the first clause of that section. By that clause it is provided that (subject to the payments contemplated in the proviso) all rent for fasli 1345 and prior years which is outstanding on the date of the commencement of the Act shall be deemed to be discharged, "whether the rent be due as such or whether a decree has been obtained therefor." Now the Court which passed the decree on the promissory note is not concerned with the arrears of rent on the petitioner's holding, unless this decree can be deemed to be a decree for rent, a fact which the applicant seems to recognise by making his deposit with the Collector and filing his application for amending the decree as one under S. 19. We are not therefore concerned with the discharge of rent 'due as such', but with the discharge of rent where 'a decree has been obtained therefor' and even though the arrears of rent covered by the promissory note might be deemed to be still outstanding—or in suspense, as some decisions have put it—the petitioner can claim no relief under this application unless the decree on the promissory note is a decree for arrears of rent.

On the question whether the decree on the promissory note can be regarded as a decree for rent, it seems to us that we are bound by the decision of the Special Bench in *Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Zamindar of Kirlampudi*¹. The question in that case was whether interest due to a zamindar under promissory notes taken from his ryots for arrears of rent was agricultural income and it was held that it was not, the reasoning being that by the fresh contract between the zamindar and the ryots, the actual character of the liability had been changed into a loan and had ceased to be rent. It follows from this decision that the decree on the promissory note is not a decree for rent. We are not really concerned in this case with the question whether in circumstances such as these, a suit on the original liability for rent would lie. Assuming that it would and that there is therefore rent still outstanding, the petitioner cannot, by the process provided under S. 15 of the Act, get rid of the decree on the promissory note unless that decree be a decree for rent, which it is not in form and which, on the authority of the decision just cited, it must be held not to be in substance.

The decree being, as it purports to be, a decree for a debt, it will fall not under S. 15, but under Ss. 9 and 19 of the Act, as has been held by the lower Court.

In the view we take it is unnecessary to go into the further question of the effect of the endorsement of the note to the plaintiff a co-zamindar, by the original payee. The petition is dismissed with costs.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—I agree and would only add that, if the matter was not covered by authority, I would be inclined to the view that a promissory note taken for arrears of rent merely provided a new remedy with certain legal incidents, and I should have found some difficulty in subscribing to the proposition that, in such circumstances, the character of the liability is so changed that what remains payable is no longer 'rent' but only a 'debt'. But, as pointed out in the judgment of my learned brother, a Special Bench of three Judges has made that proposition the basis of their decision, and I feel bound to follow it.

A. C. Sampath Aiyangar for Petitioners.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wads-
worth, J.

Wadsworth, J.—The petitioners obtained a decree in a mortgage suit and they seek to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge scaling down that decree under Ss. 8 and 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act at the instance of defendants 1 and 3 to 5. The main ground on which the lower Court's order is attacked, is that the liability under the mortgage is one for which a charge is provided under S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, so that by the provisions of S. 10(2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938 the liability cannot be scaled down. Now we have held in *Varadaraja Perumal Pillai v. Palanimuthu Goundan*¹, that S. 10 (2) (ii) must be interpreted as excluding all liabilities falling within the category therein described, whether or not the charge actually subsists at the time of suit. We have therefore to consider whether at its inception the liability covered by this mortgage was one of the class in respect of which S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act provides a charge.

It is common ground that the liability covered by the mortgage originated on 22nd January, 1920, as part of a transaction whereby property was sold to the second defendant and the father of the other defendants, the vendees executing a mortgage for the full amount of the sale price and giving as security not only the property sold but also some other property. The mortgage deed provided that the principal amount should be payable after five years but should carry interest from the date of the bond. On these facts, the lower Court, quoting the case of *Krishnaswami Aiyangar v. Subramania Ganapatigal*², held that there was a substitution of a better security and that the vendor's statutory lien was displaced. Now the decision on which the lower Court relies does not purport to lay down any principle other than those set forth in the leading case of *Webb v. Macpherson*¹, where their Lordships of the Privy Council consider the nature of the vendor's lien under S. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act and the circumstances in which it does or does not operate. In considering the question of the existence of a 'contract to the contrary', their Lordships observe 'There is no ground whatever for saying that that charge is excluded by a mere personal contract to defer payment of a portion of the purchase-money, or to take the purchase-money by instalments, nor is it, in their Lordships' opinion, excluded by any contract, covenant or agreement with respect to the purchase-money which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge.' Applying this rule, we find it difficult to hold that the terms of the suit mortgage constitute a 'contract to the contrary' so as to exclude the statutory charge. It is true that the mortgage provides additional security and gives five years for payment. But we are not prepared to hold that these terms are necessarily inconsistent with the continuance of the charge.

Lakshmana
Aiyar
v.
Ramaswami Naicker.
Wadsworth, J.

Their Lordships in the same decision go on to deal with the distinction between a sale in consideration for money which the purchaser covenants to pay and a sale in consideration for a mere covenant to pay, in which there would be no purchase price and therefore no statutory charge. We have given careful consideration to the form of the sale deed and the recitals of the contemporaneous mortgage deed in the present case and have come to the conclusion that the sale was for a price and that the mortgage merely provided the way in which that price was to be paid and secured. The form of the sale deed, which recites the amount of the purchase price and the receipt of that price by the execution of the mortgage deed, is the ordinary form commonly used in a conveyance for a price which is not paid in cash. There is nothing to show clearly that the sale was regarded as a sale for a mortgage and not as a sale for a price in respect of which a mortgage was executed. Moreover the provision in the mortgage deed that the amount should bear interest from the date of the deed and not from the date fixed for payment, is itself an indication that the principal amount was regarded as the purchase price due on the sale, the payment of which was, by agreement, deferred.

We are therefore of opinion that this liability was one in respect of which a charge is provided under S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act and that by reason of S. 10 (2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938 the lower Court had no jurisdiction to scale down that liability. On this finding there is no necessity to go into the further question raised regarding the status of defendants 3 to 5 as agriculturists. The Civil Revision Petition is therefore allowed and the application under S. 19 is dismissed with costs here and in the Court below.

That the prejudicial act might amount to sedition which according to S. 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be taken cognizance of by any Court unless upon the complaint made by order of or under the authority of the Provincial Government has therefore no bearing and the objection to the competency of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence under r. 38 (1) (a) of the Defence of India Rules is untenable. A bond was executed by a surety in the District Court as security for permitting the withdrawal of the amount deposited in Court, in execution of a decree of the Sub-Court which was then under appeal. The bond contained the words, "If in this number the decision of the lower Court is altered in favour of the appellant and to the detriment of the respondent and if the respondent has to pay the whole or a portion thereof, for that amount I shall be liable" The decree was set aside in toto by the High Court on second appeal, and the successful appellant applied to recover from the surety the full sum drawn out by the decree-holder. The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—One Dawood Sahib obtained a decree in O. S. No. 4 of 1927 in the Additional Sub-Court, Tanjore. In execution of the decree, a deposit of Rs. 2,745 was made. Of this sum, deducting what was attached by the creditors of Dawood Sahib, a sum of Rs. 1,569-13-3 was available to be paid to him, and he was permitted to withdraw that amount on furnishing security. Security was offered by one Kadir Bivi Ammal who executed a deed of security on 17th October, 1928. This bond was executed in the District Court and is headed A. S. No. 60 of 1928. That appeal resulted in part in favour of the appellant and the amount payable by the judgment-debtors to Dawood was reduced by Rs. 550. This decision was given in April, 1929. There was then a second appeal to the High Court and also a Memorandum of Cross-objections. On 20th March, 1934, the High Court gave judgment dismissing Dawood Sahib's suit in toto. In October, 1935, the successful appellant in the High Court applied to execute the surety bond and to recover from the surety the full sum of Rs. 1,569-13-3 which had been paid out to Dawood Sahib in 1928. Both the Courts have dismissed this execution application on a construction of the terms of the bond, and the lower appellate Court has also held that in so far as the bond might have been otherwise enforced, in regard to the decree of the first Court in A. S. No. 60 of 1928, it is barred by limitation.

I think there can be no doubt that on a construction of the bond, the Courts below are right. The important clause is this:

"If in this 'number' the decision of the lower Court is altered in favour of the appellant and to the detriment of the respondent and if the respondent has to pay the whole or a portion thereof, for that amount I shall be liable."

It is argued in this appeal that the word 'number', which is an English word transliterated into Tamil can be used to mean the whole course of litigation and its use can therefore in this instance be taken as representing the intentions of the parties that if at any time before this litigation came to an end, there was a decree in favour of the appellant, the surety's liability should become due.

I am unable to agree with this argument. It seems to me obvious that the extended meaning of the word 'number' in Tamil to cover a suit must have originated from the well-known fact that suits are given a 'number' when they are filed in Court. It is clear that when any person refers to a 'number' he will be referring to an individual suit or individual appeal or some individual proceeding which has a separate number of its own. The Tamil Lexicon, under the word 'number' gives two meanings one, the English 'number' and the second, a suit in a Court of law. It affords no support whatever to the contention of the appellant that 'number' is equivalent to such an abstract term as litigation. It is clear therefore that in the execution of this document, it was contemplated by the parties that if in the decision of the particular appeal numbered as A. S. No. 60 of 1928 the decision of the lower Court should be altered in favour of the appellant, the liability of the surety should ensue. The parties have made no provision, as pointed out by the Courts below, for the possible contingency that the appeal in the District Court would be followed by a second appeal in the High Court. This case seems to me to be almost precisely similar to the one which was recently decided in this Court and reported in *Paramasivam Pillai v. Ramaswami Chettiar*¹. The terms of a bond must be strictly construed and if the parties have failed to make a provision for the contingency of a second appeal, that is a misfortune which the Court cannot correct. The liability of the surety in this case can therefore possibly extend only to the amount for which the decree of the first Court was reduced in appeal by the District Court in A. S. No. 60 of 1928. That amount, as already stated, is Rs. 550.

Next arises the question of limitation. The learned District Judge holds that the right to apply in execution of this bond accrued to the appellant on 12th April, 1929 and that the application filed more than six years later was barred. It is clear that the article applicable to this application is Art. 182. The third column of that article gives the time from which the period begins to run. The date of the decree or order will be the time in ordinary cases, but where there has been an appeal, it is not that date but the date of the final decree or order of the appellate Court. There has been in this case an appeal by both parties and therefore the decision of the lower appellate Court in A. S. No. 60 of 1928 was in peril while the appeal in the High Court was pending. A memorandum of cross-objections had been filed, which, if successful, would have meant that the decree of the first Court would have been restored. The limitation in this case therefore began to run from 20th March, 1934 and this application was in time.

In the result, the order of the lower appellate Court is set aside and the execution application restored to file. The learned Subordinate Judge will enforce the bond to the extent of Rs. 550 with interest at six per cent. per annum from the date of the bond. Proportionate costs will be given and taken by the parties throughout.

Leave to appeal refused.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—This reference, which the Commissioner of Income-tax has made suo motu under the provisions of S. 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, raises an interesting question of law. The assessee is a Nattukottai Chettiar and he was assessed to income-tax by the Income-tax Officer, Karaikudi, I Circle, on an income of Rs. 65,865 for the year 1938-39. If this assessment is to be regarded as being on the assessee as an individual he will be required to pay super-tax, but if the assessment is on him as the representative of a joint Hindu family super-tax will not be payable, because, in the case of an undivided Hindu family, super-tax is not leviable until the income exceeds Rs. 75,000. The assessee was joint with his father Murugappa Chettiar until the father's death on the 18th January, 1938. The only surviving members of the family are the assessee and his step-mother. The question referred is this:

"Whether on the facts stated the assessment should be made on the assessee as an individual or on the assessee and his step-mother as a Hindu undivided family or on the assessee and his step-mother as an association of individuals."

In the sense known to Hindu Law the assessee and his step-mother are members of an undivided family. This question was raised and settled by this Court in *Vedathanni v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*¹. There a family consisted of a single male member and the widows of deceased coparceners, and it was held that they constituted an undivided family. Income-tax, Bengali, said:

"The phrase 'Hindu undivided family' is used in the statute"—"the Income-tax Act"—"with reference, not to one school only of Hindu Law, but to all schools; and their Lordships think it a mistake in method to begin by pasting over the wider phrase of the Act the words 'Hindu coparcenary'—all the more that it is not possible to say on the face of the Act that no female can be a member."

In this case the Judicial Committee held that under the Mitakshara Law the mere fact that a man has a wife and a daughter does not make ancestral property joint and income of such property assessable as income of an undivided Hindu family.

If we had not to look beyond that case, there would be no doubt that in the present case the assessment would have to be regarded as an assessment made on the assessee as an individual and not as representing a joint family. Since the Judicial Committee pronounced judgment in that case, the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, has however been placed upon the Statute Book. S. 3 (1) of that Act says that, when a Hindu governed by the Dayabhag School of Hindu Law dies intestate his property, and when a Hindu governed by any other school of Hindu Law or by customary law dies intestate leaving separate property that separate property, shall, subject to the provisions of sub-S. (3) devolve upon his widow along with his lineal descendants, if any, in like manner as it devolves upon a son. Sub-S. (2) says that, when a Hindu governed by any school of Hindu Law other than the Dayabhag School or by customary law dies intestate, having at the time of his death an interest in a Hindu joint family property, his widow shall, subject to the provisions of sub-S. (3), have in the property the same interest as he himself had. Sub-S. (3) states that any interest devolving on a Hindu widow under the provisions of this section shall be the limited interest known as a Hindu woman's estate, provided however that she shall have the same right of claiming partition as a male owner. It is not necessary to decide whether the effect of this section is to make the widow a coparcener in the full sense of the word, but it is quite clear that she obtains an interest in the joint family property and, as she is a member of the joint family, the income of the property must be regarded as income of the family. This being the state of the law, the income here must be regarded as the income of a joint family composed of the assessee and his step-mother. This is the view which the Commissioner of Income-tax has himself expressed in making this reference, and we agree that it is the right view.

The answer to the reference is that the assessment should be made on the assessee and his step-mother as a Hindu undivided family. There will be no order as to costs.

In re *Ramaswami Chettiar*¹ and cannot agree that the petitioner is entitled under the explanation to S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938 to treat his mortgage as a renewal of his vendor's mortgage, which he has discharged. It has, however, been suggested on the reasoning in *Perianna v. Sellappa*², that at the moment when the sale to petitioner was completed there was created a liability in petitioner himself to discharge his vendor's mortgage and that this liability has been renewed or included in a fresh document by the execution of his own mortgage. We are of opinion that this theory of a discharge of a pre-existing liability of the petitioner himself scarcely accords with the facts. No doubt the sale was in theory anterior to the mortgage, but in point of fact they were both part of a single transaction carried through on the same day and it was not in the contemplation of the parties that the mortgage executed by the petitioner should discharge any pre-existing liability of the petitioner himself. It cannot therefore be said that the petitioner's mortgage was in fact a renewal of a previous debt due by him. The petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

In February, 1923, a promissory note was executed for the balance of purchase price of certain lands. This promissory note was twice renewed and the renewed note of 1932 was assigned in 1936 to the plaintiff by endorsement. The plaintiff obtained a decree on the promissory note. In an application for scaling down this decree the question arose whether S. 10 (2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938 excluded the operation of the scaling down provisions to the liability as one in respect of which a charge was provided under S. 55 (iv) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act.

Held, that the intention of the Legislature was to specify the classes of liabilities in respect of which the scaling down provisions of Act IV of 1938 were not to operate and that the exclusion of liabilities of these categories was not to depend on the actual subsistence of the charge but on the question whether in the beginning the liability was one in respect of which the Transfer of Property Act provided a charge. The judgment of the Court was delivered by Wadsworth, J.—This revision petition arises out of an application by a judgment-debtor under S. 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938 and raises a question regarding the meaning of S. 10 (2) (ii) of that Act.

The essential facts are that the judgment-debtor purchased lands under a sale deed of February 1923 whereby the purchase price was to be paid by the discharge of two debts and the execution of a promissory note for the balance. This promissory note was twice renewed and the renewed note of 1932 was assigned in 1936 to the plaintiff by endorsement. The plaintiff got a decree on the promissory note and when the judgment-debtor applied to scale down the decree, the plaintiff pleaded that the liability was one in respect of which a charge was provided under S. 55 (iv) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act and that therefore the provisions of S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938 could not be applied.

though there is some conflict of authority on the question whether a mere endorsement of a promissory note which represents unpaid purchase money carries with it the security in the shape of the vendor's lien. Assuming that there was in fact no charge which the plaintiff-assignee could work out against his debtor, is the plaintiff entitled to rely on the provisions of S. 10 (2) (ii) ? This provision may be read in two ways. It may be read as safeguarding any liability for which a charge under S. 55 (iv) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act subsists; or it may be read as protecting any liability of the category of liabilities in respect of which a charge is provided under S. 55 (iv) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. We are of opinion that the latter interpretation is the correct interpretation and that the intention of the Legislature was to specify those classes of liabilities in respect of which the scaling down provisions of the Act were not to operate and that the exclusion of liabilities of these categories was not to depend on the actual subsistence of the charge but on the question whether in the beginning the liability was one belonging to that category in respect of which the Transfer of Property Act provided a charge.

Now, applying this criterion to the present case, undoubtedly the liability of the judgment-debtor to his vendor was one in respect of which a charge was created by the operation of S. 55 (iv) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. It is, as we have suggested, doubtful whether that charge could be enforced by an endorsee of the promissory note in the absence of a registered conveyance. But the essential category into which the liability falls is not, in our opinion, affected by the assignment of this liability to a third party and we consider it is one which falls into the category referred to in S. 10 (2) (ii) of the Act. As we have more than once pointed out, this Act IV of 1938 is an expropriatory measure and if there is any doubt as to the meaning of its terms, that doubt should be resolved in favour of the person expropriated and not of the person who claims the right to expropriate. In this view, we agree with the decision of the trial Court and dismiss the petition and the connected appeal with costs in the civil revision petition.

The assessment to profession-tax of a debtor was actually made on 15th January, 1938, but it was retrospective and covered the half year beginning 1st April, 1937. On the question as to the applicability of proviso B to S. 3 (ii) of Madras Act IV of 1938, Held, that the criterion for exclusion under Proviso B to S. 3 (ii) of the Act was the time within which the assessment was made and not the actual period for which the tax was payable.

A husband and wife were co-mortgagors and the husband was assessed on properties having an annual rental value of Rs. 300 and the wife on properties with an annual rental value of Rs. 432. The mortgagee claimed that the husband was the real owner and excluded from benefits of Act IV of 1938 by reason of Proviso C to S. 3 (ii) of the Act.

Held, Proviso C to S. 3 (ii) of the Act clearly requires that in order to come within its scope an individual must have been actually assessed, and it is not sufficient that he is interested in property in respect of which somebody else has been assessed.

Wadsworth, J.—This petition raises the question of the precise effect of Provisos (B and C) of S. 3 (ii) of Madras Act IV of 1938. The petitioner was the judgment-debtor in a mortgage suit, being himself the mortgagor, and he sought the benefits of the Act under S. 19 in respect of the mortgage decree. He was held by the lower Court to be disentitled to those benefits on the ground that he was assessed to profession-tax in respect of the first half year of the financial year 1937-38. The lower Court also rejected the plea advanced on behalf of the creditor that the petitioner was also disqualified under Proviso (C). The petitioner was admittedly not assessed to profession-tax within the two years preceding the 1st October, 1937. His assessment was actually made on 15th January, 1938, but it was retrospective, so that it covers the half year beginning 1st April, 1937. The learned District Judge, applying S. 137-B of the Madras City Municipal Act, has held that a person who is assessed to profession-tax in respect of any portion of the two years immediately preceding the 1st October, 1937, comes within the mischief of Proviso (B) to S. 3 (ii) even though the assessment was not made within the two years immediately preceding the 1st of October, 1937. It is difficult to support the view taken by the learned District Judge, but an attempt has been made to support it by referring to the last words of S. 137-B of the City Municipal Act which are:

"The provisions of this Act and the rules made thereunder shall so far as may be apply as if the assessment was made in the half year or year to which the tax or fee relates."

It seems to us that this provision is obviously intended to make the machinery for the levy of the tax applicable to a retrospective assessment and to meet any possible objection which might be raised owing to the delay in making the assessment. The whole of S. 137-B was apparently drafted to meet the situation created by the decision in *Prince of Arcot v. Corporation of Madras*¹. But it must be noted that, in the case of a retrospective assessment, it is not provided that the date of the assessment shall be deemed to fall within the period to which the assessment relates; and it would obviously be impracticable to read this provision as having that effect, for there are various matters in respect of which the date of the assessment will be of importance, with regard to which it must necessarily be the actual date of the assessment and not some vague point of time within the period, to which the assessment relates. For instance, with regard to the right to object to an assessment or the right of appeal it must be the actual date, and not any notional date, which will determine limitation: and with reference to the preparation of the electoral roll, the electoral roll must obviously be prepared with reference to the assessments as they actually exist at the time when the electoral roll is prepared, and it could not be invalidated by any retrospective assessments made thereafter. Moreover, the words of Proviso (B) to S. 3 (ii) of Act IV of 1938 are perfectly plain and it is impossible to read them as if the criterion for the exclusion was the actual period for which the tax was payable and not the time within which the assessment was made.

An argument has been based on the form B prescribed under the Act for the certificate under S. 27, which form provides for details regarding the period for which an individual has been assessed to tax and does not provide for the entry of the date of the assessment. This may well be a defect in the drafting of the form but we cannot admit the proposition that the meaning of the Act is to be derived from the forms which have been prescribed by the Government under its rule-making powers. To us it is quite clear that the words "has within the two years immediately preceding the 1st October, 1937, been assessed" mean what they say and nothing else. We are therefore of opinion that the learned District Judge was wrong in holding that the petitioner was disqualified from claiming to be an agriculturist by reason of an assessment to profession-tax made after the 1st October, 1937, although relating to the period immediately before the 1st October, 1937.

A further contention advanced by the creditor rests on the fact that, though the petitioner was assessed to house-tax on properties having an annual rental of only Rs. 300, his wife has been similarly assessed on properties with a rental value of Rs. 432. Both the properties in the wife's name and the properties of the petitioner are covered by the suit mortgage executed by the petitioner. It is contended that both these properties belong to the petitioner and that the assessment which was made in respect of these properties must be regarded as the assessment of the petitioner. A similar contention was rejected by a Bench of this Court in the case of *Swaminatha Odayar v. Srinivasa Aiyar*¹. It has been argued that the terms of r. 7 framed under the Act lend some support to the creditor's contention. By this rule a person who has been assessed to property-tax, which assessment would disqualify him under Proviso (C) to S. 3 (ii), is permitted to get rid of the disqualification by proving that during the relevant period he was not the owner of the property in respect of which the assessment was levied. Presumably the intention of this rule is to cover cases in which the Municipal assessment register was not up to date so that the assessment would stand in the name of some one who does not actually pay it. We are not concerned now with the validity of this rule, but it may well be argued that Proviso (C) contemplates not only the assessment of an individual but also the ownership by that individual of the property in respect of which he has been assessed. It could not however be argued that Proviso (C) contemplates only the ownership of the property by the individual concerned and does not contemplate his assessment in respect thereof. Proviso (C) clearly requires that, in order to come within its scope, the individual must have been actually assessed. It is not sufficient for him to show that he is interested in property in respect of which somebody has been assessed.

In the result, therefore, we must allow this Civil Revision Petition with costs and remit the application to the trial Court for disposal in the light of this judgment.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 73—Rateable distribution—Person merely attaching before judgment—If entitled to claim rateable distribution.

The Court can only divide the assets among such persons as may have made application to the Court for the execution of decrees. So where a creditor merely gets an attachment before judgment he is not entitled to claim rateable distribution of assets realised in execution before he took out execution proceedings.

Meyyappa Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar, (1923) 46 M.L.J. 415: I.L.R. 47 Mad 483 (F.B.), referred.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Palghat dated 29th October, 1936 and made in M. P. No. 590 of 1936 to direct the decree-holders in S. C. No. 440 of 1935 to redeposit the amount they have withdrawn from Court.

P. Govinda Menon for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner filed S. C. No. 460 of 1935 against a debtor and attached before judgment some money that was in the hands of a garnishee. Some time later, the petitioner obtained a decree—we do not know its exact date, but it is said that it was some time before 7th March, 1936. He did not take out execution of this decree. The respondents obtained a decree in S. C. No. 440 of 1935 against the same debtor, and in execution they also attached on 26th November, 1935, this same sum of money in the hands of the garnishee. That money was paid into Court on 3rd March, 1936 and upon an application by the respondents, the money was paid to them on 7th March, 1936. The petitioner thereupon filed M. P. No. 590 of 1936, praying that the Court should recall the sum of money paid over to the respondents and distribute it rateably between them. That petition was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Palghat, and hence this revision petition.

The petitioner's contention is that he was entitled to a share in the money that had been paid into Court by the garnishee and that the lower Court acted illegally in paying that money over to the respondents. He contends that the Court was bound to see that the money was properly distributed among those who had a claim to it. As proof that such a duty is cast upon the Court, he refers to Ss. 63 and 64 of the Civil Procedure Code. S. 63 only indicates that the Court should adjudicate upon questions of this nature, and S. 64 explains the effect of an attachment. Neither of these sections indicates that the Court should suo motu ascertain who are the various claimants to a particular sum of money and then to divide that money among the persons who are entitled to a share of it.

S. 73 runs:

"Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor.....the assets.....shall be rateably distributed among all such persons."

Moidin
v.
Dakshayani Ammu.

So that it is clear that the Court can only divide the assets among such persons as may have made application to the Court for the execution of decrees. The present petitioner made no such application. He contends that his attachment before judgment becomes by some legal fiction an attachment in execution. He states as authority for this unusual proposition a decision of a Full Bench of this Court in *Meyyappa Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar*¹. What the Court there held was that "property attached in execution" in O. 21, r. 57, Civil Procedure Code, includes property attached before judgment when there has been a decree followed by an execution petition for the purpose of bringing the property attached to sale. This judgment does not say that proceedings taken before execution can be deemed to be proceedings taken after execution; but it only says that property attached before judgment may be considered to be property attached in execution when it is followed by an execution application for the purpose of bringing the attached property to sale. As the petitioner has put in no such application, the above decision has no application to this case.

This revision application could have been dismissed on the simple ground that the petitioner had a remedy by way of a suit afforded to him by S. 73 (2); but a decision on the point raised in the Court below has been given in order to avoid further litigation.

The revision petition is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), S. 54—Mortgage to creditor for his simple debt—Creditor filing suit and obtaining attachment—Debtor bonafide imagining that her assets are worth more than her liabilities and enough to pay off the other creditors as well—Doctrine of natural and obvious consequences of acts—If applicable to infer fraudulent motive under S. 54.

10th September, 1940.

Where two creditors had filed suits for recovery of their dues and obtained attachment of the properties of the debtor and the debtor thereupon executed mortgages to the creditors for their debts and where it was found that the creditors were neither related to the debtor nor persons for whose preference any special reason existed, and that at the time of the execution of the mortgages, the debtor thought that the property was worth enough to deal with the other debts also in due course, there is no fraudulent preference within the meaning of S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The question is not whether the assets were actually less than her liabilities but whether she honestly thought that they were more.

From the mere fact that a preference in favour of the creditors followed from the debtor's act, it cannot be inferred that it was a fraudulent preference. The legal maxim that intentions of parties must be judged by the natural consequences of their acts cannot be applied to determine the dominant intention in the mind of the debtor for purposes of S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of these two appeals is two mortgages executed on the 15th October, 1932 in favour of two of the creditors of Padmavati Ammal, against whom an insolvency petition was filed on 7th November, 1932 and who was finally adjudicated insolvent in 1934. The proceedings by the Official Receiver were, in the first instance, taken against three mortgages, all of which were executed on the same day. They were taken under Ss. 4, 53 and 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The learned Subordinate Judge of Chittoor dismissed the Official Receiver's applications. The learned District Judge of Chittoor has set aside the learned Subordinate Judge's order and annulled all the three mortgages. These are appeals by two of the mortgagees against the learned District Judge's order. The annulment by the District Judge, it must be mentioned, has been based on S. 54 alone; he does not hold that the mortgages are not fully supported by consideration; but he holds that they were fraudulent preferences of some of the insolvent's creditors to the detriment of the others.

I think these appeals must be allowed. The learned District Judge has held that the insolvent has fraudulently preferred these appellants not so much upon the finding of any positive facts which constitute any intention on her behalf to defraud, but mainly for the reason that a preference in favour of the appellants inevitably followed from her action. The learned Judge says:

"Intentions of persons must be judged, as intentions can only be, by the obylous and natural consequences of their acts"

No doubt, this is a legal maxim which applies very often when the Court has to find what the intentions of a particular party are, but, with regard to S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act where the burden of proof is upon the Official Receiver this method of discovering the intentions of a person who shortly afterwards becomes insolvent is not the correct method to adopt. The authorities in England are very clear in this matter: see *Sharp (Official Receiver) v. Jackson*¹ and Ex parte Taylor: In re Goldsmit,² and this principle, that the dominant intention in the mind of the insolvent must be found to have been actually to prefer a creditor before his alienation could be set aside, has also been adopted in India—see *Buchayyagari Ranga Reddi v. Official Receiver, Anantapur*³ and *Krishnan Chettiar v. Devarayan Chettiar*⁴. It is impossible therefore to support the learned District Judge's order, merely upon the fact that the appellants have actually received a preference in the disposal of the insolvent's estate.

I have been taken through the evidence with a view to examine whether on the evidence it is possible to hold that there was the dominant intention in the mind of the insolvent fraudulently to prefer the appellants. I am unable to hold that there is any material for any such finding. In the first place, it is conceded by the learned advocate for the Official Receiver that putting his case at the best, on the evidence available, the assets of the insolvent were, at the time these mortgages were executed, very nearly equal to her liabilities. The learned District Judge, it may be mentioned, refuses to consider any of the statements of the witnesses with regard to the value of the insolvent's properties. He refers to them as vague surmises and says that the only important fact is that when the properties other than the mortgaged properties were sold by the Official Receiver, only Rs. 400 were realised, and also that the Official Receiver leased them on a rental of Rs. 35 a year. These are no doubt important facts if the task of the Court were to estimate the real value of the insolvent's estate. But I do not think that the statements made by those very creditors themselves who support the Official Receiver in this case can be ignored, and one of them,—the principal opponent of the appellants Bhas-karamayya, has actually given evidence in this very case that the property of the insolvent which was not mortgaged was worth Rs. 14,000. Even taking as true the contention of the learned advocate for the Official Receiver that the actual value of the estate was less than the liabilities at the time of the mortgages, as the learned District Judge has himself pointed out, it is a truism that landed property is always over-valued by the owner. It is therefore extremely probable that the insolvent here thought that her property was worth considerably more than what it was really worth. If that were so, it seems clear to me that she must at the time she executed these mortgages have entertained honestly the belief that she could also deal with the other creditors in due course by the same method. The question to be decided is not whether her assets were actually less than her liabilities but whether she honestly thought that they were more. I think there is enough evidence in this case to justify the finding that she may have honestly so thought. The learned Judge also refers in para. 5 of his judgment to the fact that the question at issue in insolvency is not whether the assets are sufficient to pay the liabilities but whether the liabilities can be met, as they arise, by money payment. That is no doubt quite correct when the Court has to decide whether a person who is said to be insolvent should be adjudicated insolvent or not, but, when the question is to decide the intention which is present in a person's mind, it seems to me that unless it is presumed that the person in question knows the law of insolvency and points such as these, it is impossible to say that anyone who believes that he is possessed of landed property which is worth more than his liabilities is aware that insolvency is imminent. I am not prepared to hold that on the 15th October, 1932, the insolvent had any reason to believe that within two or three weeks an insolvency petition would be filed against her.

There is another point which, I think, should be considered in connection with S. 54. The learned Judge in the 5th paragraph of his judgment says that

"Where all a man's creditors are pressing for payment and he cannot pay them all with money, the honest thing, the truly voluntary thing, the thing which the law insists on, is that he should pay them all he can rateably."

There is no finding in this particular case that all the creditors of the insolvent were in fact pressing her for payment. Two of the principal creditors have given evidence, and they are not prepared to state distinctly and definitely that they exerted any pressure upon the insolvent or upon the insolvent's relative, Dhurvasa Rao. It is true that one of them, Bhaskaramayya, had filed a suit against the insolvent about three weeks before, but there is no proof that any intimation of that fact was given to the insolvent. The other creditor had not filed a suit at all, and there is no evidence that either of them had issued any kind of registered letter to her. On the other hand, both the appellants had not only filed suits, but had also applied for and obtained attachment. No doubt they also have not used any particular threatening language in any particular document sent to the insolvent, but it is clear that the actual attachment of the insolvent's properties amounts to such pressure as would reasonably lead the insolvent to take steps to deal with the debts owing to these creditors.

On a review of the whole evidence, I am of the opinion that there is no proof in this case that the dominant motive in the mind of the insolvent in executing these mortgages in favour of persons who were not related to her or for whose preference no special private reasons existed, was to prefer them fraudulently to the prejudice of her other creditors. The evidence seems to me to suggest rather that this was an honest attempt to deal with the more pressing claims upon her by mortgaging certain of her assets, and at the time she did so, she must have bona fide thought that she would be able to deal with the other debts in due course.

In the result, I set aside the order of the learned District Judge and restore the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, dismissing the Official Receiver's applications with costs throughout.

Leave to appeal is refused.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Ss 2 and 43—Non-resident foreign company—Loan to British Indian company through its branch—If the borrower company can be treated as agent of foreign company under S. 43—Whether foreign company has "business connection" in British India and is liable to assessment—Taming statute—Construction—Need for strict construction.

Two banking companies, one at Pudukottai (in a Native State) and another at Kanadukathan (in British India) were controlled by the same persons who owned almost all the shares in the two companies. The Pudukottai Bank had a branch at Kuala Lumpur in the Federated Malay States and the Kanadukathan Bank had twenty branches in Burma (in British India during the material period), one at Colombo and one at Bentong in the Federated Malay States. Between September, 1930 and February, 1933, loans of large sums were made by the Pudukottai Bank to the Kanadukathan Bank. The procedure adopted was as follows:—The Bentong branch of the Kanadukathan Bank received hundies from the Kuala Lumpur branch of the Pudukottai Bank and passed them on to the Rangoon Branch of the Kanadukathan Bank and the money was used in the business and earned profits. The Crown sought to tax the non-resident company treating the borrower company as its agent.

Held, (1) in revenue matters it is wrong to regard "the substance of the matter" as distinguished from the strict legal position; the real question will be whether in fact the non-resident company lent money to the British Indian company. The fact that the transactions were negotiated through the branches does not affect the question, as the business transacted was the business of the two Banks.

(2) the Pudukottai Bank had a business connection with the Kanadukathan Bank in British India during the year of assessment and the profits and gains forming the subject-matter of the assessment accrued to the Pudukottai Bank directly or indirectly through such business connection in British India. The Kanadukathan Bank can be treated as the agent of the Pudukottai Bank within the meaning of S. 43 for the purposes of the Act.

SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Madras dated 17th November, 1938, which was given upon a reference of a question of law made to the High Court by the Commissioner of Income-tax under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act (XI of 1922). The question was as follows:

"Whether on the facts of this case the income-tax authorities were entitled to hold that the income from the first six items of loans referred to in para. 21 of the Income-tax Officer's assessment order accrued and arose to the Pudukottai Bank directly or indirectly through or from a business connection in British India within the meaning of S. 42 (1), Income-tax Act, between the Kanadukathan Bank and the Pudukottai Bank."

The Commissioner of Income-tax submitted that this question should be answered in the affirmative. The High Court (consisting of Sir Lionel Leach, C.J., Madhavan Nair and Varadachariar, JJ.) decided that the submission of the Commissioner was right and answered the question in the affirmative. From this decision the appellant, the Bank of Chettinad, Ltd., has appealed to His Majesty in Council. The reference arose out of the assessment of the Bank of Chettinad, Ltd., Kanadukathan (hereinafter for the sake of brevity referred to as the "Kanadukathan Bank") as agent of the Chettinad Bank, Ltd., Pudukottai (hereinafter referred to as the "Pudukottai Bank"), for the assessment year 1933-34. The assessment proceeded on the basis that certain profits or gains accrued to the Pudukottai Bank, resident out of British India, directly or indirectly through or from a business connexion in British India and that under S. 42 (1), Income-tax Act of 1922, such profits or gains were chargeable to income-tax in the name of the Kanadukathan Bank, resident in British India, which was treated as the agent of the Pudukottai Bank under S. 43 for all the purposes of the Act.

The material facts may be stated as follows: Raja Sir Annamalai Chettiar of Chettinad with his three sons had a large money-lending business with many branches in Burma, Ceylon, the Federated Malay States and French Cochin China. In 1929 they formed the Kanadukathan Bank which has its headquarters at Kanadukathan in British India. Kanadukathan lies about two miles from the border of the State of Pudukottai and 18 miles from the town of Pudukottai, the capital of the State. In 1930 they formed the Pudukottai Bank and also registered in Pudukottai a company called the Chettinad Corporation, Ltd., both of which have their registered offices at Pudukottai. The businesses carried on by the Raja and his sons were wound up and all the assets and liabilities transferred to the three companies. The assets and liabilities of the branches in Burma (which until 1st April, 1937, was a part of British India), were transferred entirely to the Kanadukathan Bank. The assets and liabilities of the branches in the Federated Malay States were mostly transferred to the Pudukottai Bank. The assets and liabilities of the branches in Ceylon were transferred partly to the Colombo branch of the Kanadukathan Bank and partly to the branches of the Pudukottai Corporation, Ltd., in Ceylon. Part of the value of the excess over liabilities was adjusted against the paid-up capital of the three companies. The balance was apportioned and the sums treated as being deposits of the Raja and other members of his family with these companies.

The nominal capital of the Kanadukathan Bank is Rs. 3,00,00,000 and the paid-up capital Rs. 1,00,00,000, divided into 20,000 shares of Rs. 500 each. All the shares of the company are held by the Raja and members of his family. The directors are the Raja, his wife and two outsiders, neither of whom holds any shares: one is an employee and the other the agent of the Raja. The nominal capital of the Pudukottai Bank is Rs. 2,00,00,000, and its paid-up capital is Rs. 1,70,00,000, divided into 20,000 shares, of which 10,000 are Rs. 700 each paid-up and 10,000 of Rs. 1,000 each fully paid-up. All these shares, except three, are held by the Raja and the members of his family. The directors are the Raja, his wife and his son, and two outsiders, each of whom holds one share. There is no doubt that the two companies are controlled by the same people. The Kanadukathan Bank has 22 branches, 20 in Burma, of which one is at Rangoon, and one at Bentong, in the Federated Malay States.

and one at Colombo. The Pudukottai Bank carries on no money-lending business at Pudukottai, but it has a branch at Kuala Lumpur, situated about 30 miles from Bentong in the Federated Malay States. It appears that between September, 1930 and February, 1933, loans amounting to Rs. 1,32,86,888 were made by the Pudukottai Bank to the Kanadukathan Bank. The loans were carried out through the Kuala Lumpur branch of the Pudukottai Bank and the Bentong branch of the Kanadukathan Bank. They fall under the following nine heads, as stated in the reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax:

				Rs.
(1)	..	..	..	45,00,000
(2)	..	..	..	9,74,100
				($6,34,327)
(3)	..	..	..	5,24,191
(4)	..	..	..	2,35,000
(5)	..	..	..	19,38,505
(6)	..	..	..	4,40,000
(7)	..	..	..	5,15,092
(8)	..	..	..	34,60,000
(9)	..	..	..	7,00,000
Total	..	..	..	1,32,86,888

The Bentong branch of the Kanadukathan Bank did no money-lending business and the only duties of the officer in charge of that branch appear to have been to receive hundis from the Kuala Lumpur branch of the Pudukottai Bank and to pass them on to the Rangoon branch after making the relevant entries in the books. The first six of the above-mentioned items represent monies used in the Rangoon business of the Kanadukathan Bank in accordance with the procedure hereinbefore indicated. They are the six items mentioned in the reference to the High Court, and the income arising from the said loans is the subject-matter of the assessment, which is now in question. The Commissioner of Income-tax in his reference stated that

"In substance these loans represent money lent by the Pudukottai Bank to the Kanadukathan Bank, but the transactions have been unnecessarily complicated by resorting to a series of entries which are as superfluous as they are confusing."

Their Lordships think it necessary once more to protest against the suggestion that in revenue cases "the substance of the matter" may be regarded as distinguished from the strict legal position. In *Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Duke of Westminster*¹, disapproval of this doctrine was expressed in the opinions of Lord Tomlin and Lord Russell of Killowen. A passage from the opinion of Lord Russell of Killowen at p. 24 may usefully be cited. It is as follows:

"I confess that I view with disfavour the doctrine that in taxation cases the subject is to be taxed if in accordance with a Court's view of what it considers the substance of the transaction, the Court thinks that the case falls within the contemplation or spirit of the statute. The subject is not taxable by inference or by analogy, but only by the plain words of a statute applicable to the facts and circumstances of his case. As Lord Cairns said many years ago in *Partington v. Attorney-General*²: 'As I understand the principle of all fiscal legislation it is this: If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be.'"

The question on this part of the case is not whether "in substance" the loans represented money lent by the Pudukottai Bank to the Kanadukathan Bank, but it is whether in fact the Pudukottai Bank lent the said money to the Kanadukathan Bank. Their Lordships have no doubt that on the facts of the case the said six items did represent loans made by the Pudukottai Bank to the Kanadukathan Bank, and that the money was used in the branch of the Kanadukathan Bank at Rangoon, which was then in British India. The fact that the transactions were negotiated through the branches of the banks does not affect this question: the branches were not separate entities, but were parts of the two respective banks, and it is obvious that the business so transacted by the two branches was the business of the two banks.

The questions to be considered are whether on the facts of this case the Pudukottai Bank had a business connection in British India and whether the profits in question accrued or arose to the Pudukottai Bank directly or indirectly through or from such business connection within the meaning of S. 42 (1) of the Act. It was argued on behalf of the appellant bank that in order to bring the case within the section it must be shown by the income-tax authorities that the Pudukottai Bank, non-resident in British India, had a business connexion in British India in relation to actual transactions in question, that a business connexion arises out of business transactions and that the transactions in this case, namely, the above-mentioned loans, were made not in British India but in the Malay States and were to be repaid in the Malay States in the Malay States currency. Consequently, it was argued that although the profits of such transactions did accrue to the Pudukottai Bank, they did not accrue through a business connexion in British India. S. 42 (1) is as follows:

"In the case of any person residing out of British India, all profits or gains accruing or arising to such person, whether directly or indirectly, through or from any business connexion or property in British India, shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India, and shall be chargeable to income-tax in the name of the agent of any such person, and such agent shall be deemed to be, for all the purposes of this Act, the assessee in respect of such income-tax."

The terms of the section are very wide, and their Lordships are not prepared to place upon them the limitation for which the appellant contends. The words are wide enough to cover profits or gains which can be said to accrue or arise to the Pudukottai Bank directly or indirectly through or from any business connexion which may exist between the Pudukottai Bank and the Kanadukathan Bank in British India. That the Pudukottai Bank had a business connexion with the Kanadukathan Bank in British India cannot on the facts be doubted, and the transactions in question could not have been carried out but for the existence of the Kanadukathan Bank which was in British India, and the business connexion between that bank and the Pudukottai Bank.

It has already been shown that the two banks are controlled by the same people, namely, the Raja and his family. It further appears that the main function of the Pudukottai Bank was to finance the Kanadukathan Bank, that the loans advanced by the Pudukottai Bank to the Kanadukathan Bank represented a large part of the capital of the Pudukottai Bank, that the flow of business between the two banks was secured by the complete control exercised by the Raja and his family over the business of both banks, so that the loans could be safely made without security and for indefinite periods. In view of these facts their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court was right in holding that the Pudukottai Bank had a business connexion with the Kanadukathan Bank in British India during the year of assessment and they are further of opinion that the profits and gains, the subject-matter of the assessment, accrued to the Pudukottai Bank directly or indirectly through such business connexion in British India.

There remains the question whether the Income-tax Commissioner was correct in treating the Kanadukathan Bank as the agent of the Pudukottai Bank within the meaning of S. 43 of the Act. It is to be noted that the agent contemplated by the section is so to speak an artificial creation, for it is provided that any person having a business connexion with a person residing out of British India, upon whom the Income-tax Officer has served a notice of his intention of treating him as agent of the non-resident person is to be deemed to be such agent. In view of the above-mentioned conclusions, it is clear that the Income-tax Officer was acting within the power conferred upon him by S. 43 in treating the Kanadukathan Bank as the agent of the Pudukottai Bank for the purposes of the Act. Several cases were cited to their Lordships, but, with one exception, they were not of much assistance, for the facts in the cited cases were different from those of the present appeal, and the decision in each case must of course depend upon its own facts. The exception is *Commissioner of Income-tax v. Remington Typewriter Co. (Bombay), Ltd.*¹ The headnote of that case is as follows:

"A company incorporated in the U. S. A. and hereinafter called 'the American company', carried on business in New York, and there manufactured and sold typewriter machines. The respondent company had been incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, and had purchased from the American company for shares the goodwill of that company in the Bombay Presidency and adjoining territory; the American company held all its shares except three issued to that company's nominees. Two other companies had been incorporated in India, each being in substance in the same position towards the American company as the Bombay company; their respective business territory covered the rest of India."

It was held that there was a business connexion within the meaning of S. 43 and S. 42, sub-S. 1, Income-tax Act, 1922, between the American company and each of the Indian companies, and consequently under S. 43 the respondent company could be deemed for the purposes of the Act to be the agent of the American company, and as its agent could be charged to tax under S. 42, sub-S. 1, in respect of profits made by the American company upon machines exported to British India. The question whether the necessary business connexion existed was argued before the Board, although no appeal had been lodged by the respondents and their Lordships had no doubt that the necessary business connexion did exist. It was stated in the judgment that:

"The Bombay company was formed for the express purpose of acquiring from the American company and carrying on in a particular area the American company's business of selling the American company's manufactures. Although no contractual obligation exists by which the Bombay company is compelled to purchase any of the manufactures of the American company the flow of business between the two companies is secured by the fact that the ultimate and complete control of the Bombay company is vested in the American company, which owns all its shares."

It was further held that the profits and gains in question accrued or arose to the American company directly or indirectly through or from a business connexion in British India. This case is material, because in their Lordships' opinion, if the appellant's contention in this appeal were correct, namely, that the business connexion existed only in respect of actual business which was transacted by the branches of the two banks outside British India, the above-cited case should have been decided the other way in so far as it related to the matter now under consideration. For the above-mentioned reasons their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed and that the appellant should pay the respondent's costs of this appeal. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (II of 1927), S. 73—"Excepted temple"—Scheme for administration—Jurisdiction to frame.

S. 73 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act must be strictly construed. In spite of the amendments to the section [consequent on Vasudevan Adisarpad v. Bhawadasan Nambudiri, (1933) I.L.R. 57 Mad. 315 and Vythilinga Pandarasannadhi v. Ranganatha Mudaliar, (1933) 66-M.L.J. 98: I.L.R. 57 Mad. 362] enlarging its scope it still does not include any suit to settle a scheme. The reason appears to be obvious, namely, that provision has already been made for the framing of schemes in the case of excepted temples by Ss. 62, 63 and 65 of the Act.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Guntur in I. A. No. 139 of 1938 in O. S. No. 3 of 1935.

V. Rangachari for Appellants.

P. Somasundaram for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to a temple at Rajavole in the Guntur District which is an 'excepted temple' within the meaning of that expression in the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act. Plaintiff as a worshipper at that temple filed a suit under S. 73 of the Act to remove the defendant from his trusteeship, and appoint another trustee in his place. The suit was compromised, and as part of the terms of the compromise a scheme was framed for the future administration of the temple. Plaintiff then applied under O. 23, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, for a decree in the terms of the compromise, and the learned District Judge of Guntur, overruling defendant's objections to the application granted the decree. Defendant now appeals.

Of the grounds of objection only two need now be considered. The first was that defendant in consenting to the compromise, had been subjected to undue influence. No serious attempt has been made to substantiate this ground in appeal. I agree with the learned District Judge in rejecting it.

The second ground is that the Court had no jurisdiction to frame a scheme and therefore no jurisdiction to incorporate in its decree a scheme framed by the parties. It appears from para. 4 of the learned District Judge's order that before him the proposition that the Court is entitled to frame a scheme under S. 73 of the Act was not disputed. Before me this question is the main subject-matter of the appeal, and as its decision is one affecting the jurisdiction of the Court I cannot refuse to adjudicate upon it merely because of what appears to me an unwise and ill-advised concession made in the District Court.

To my mind it is clear that the appeal must succeed on the very simple ground that S. 73 does not, on its very face,

subba Rao
v.
Sivaramayya.

Venkata-

authorise a suit to frame a scheme. That S. 73 must be construed strictly is laid down in Vasudevan AdisERP v. *Bhawadasan Nambudiri*¹, where, on an interpretation of the section as it then stood, it was held that the Court had no power to direct "accounts and enquiries" and again in Vythilinga Pandarasannadhi v. *Ranganatha Mudaliar*², where the decision was that a suit in regard to the administration or management of a kattalai was not maintainable under the section. The scope of the section has been enlarged by amendments enacted as the result of these judgments but it still does not include any suit to settle a scheme. The reason appears to be obvious, namely, that provision has already been made for the framing of schemes in the case of excepted temples by Ss. 62, 63 and 65 of the Act.

I accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and direct that the suit be restored to his file and disposed of according to law. As the appellant failed to present his case properly before the District Judge he must pay his own costs. Respondent's costs of the appeal will be costs in the suit.

If the decree debt is one binding on the joint family the decree-holder can have a remedy against the sons after partition by way of a separate suit but he cannot proceed by way of execution as against their interest in the joint family property. P. Satyanarayana Rao for Appellant.

V. Govindarajachari for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Burn, J.—This appeal and this revision petition are brought against the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Guntur in E. P. No. 84 of 1937 in O. S. No. 34 of 1931. The E. P. was dated 1st March, 1937. The suit had been decreed on the 14th December, 1931, against ninth defendant for a sum of Rs. 23,741-1-2 with interest and costs. It was alleged in the E. P. that certain sums had been recovered in execution in 1936 and 1937 and that an amount of Rs. 30,582 plus further interest and costs was still due. The prayer in the E. P. was for execution against five defendants impleaded in the E.P. as supplemental defendants 10 to 14. The supplemental tenth defendant is the Official Receiver of Guntur and defendants 11 to 14 are said to be the minor undivided sons of K. Venkatasubba Rao the eighth defendant in the suit. K. Venkatasubba Rao had been adjudicated insolvent in I. P. No. 74 of 1931 and certain items of the joint family property had been sold by the Official Receiver for a sum of Rs. 6,555. The decree-holder alleged that he had attached the properties of the eighth defendant before judgment in O. S. No. 34 of 1931. He said that he desired attachment by means of a prohibitory order of a sum of Rs. 5,244 representing the 4/5th share of the supplemental defendants 11 to 14 (the minor sons of the eighth defendant) of the sum of Rs. 6,555. He prayed that the Official Receiver the tenth defendant might be ordered to deposit this amount in Court so that it might be paid to him to the credit of this decree in O. S. No. 34. He prayed also for the issue of a sale notice regarding the remaining joint family properties which had been attached and for payment of 4/5th of the sale proceeds of such items to him. The Official Receiver opposed this application and the minor sons also opposed it. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled these objections and ordered that the preliminary attachment of the sum of Rs. 5,244 should be made absolute. Hence this appeal and the revision petition which are filed by the Official Receiver.

Mr. Govindarajachari on behalf of the respondent decreeholder raised a preliminary objection to the maintainability of the appeal and after hearing his arguments and the arguments of Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao for the appellant we find ourselves obliged to accept the preliminary objection. Mr. Govindarajachari's contention was that the Official Receiver did not in this proceeding represent any of the parties to the decree and that consequently no appeal would lie from the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. Mr. Satyanarayana Rao attempted to show that the Official Receiver could be considered to be a representative of the sons of the insolvent eighth defendant. It has been pointed out by Rankin, C.J., in the case *Mohitosh Dutta v. Rai Satish Chandra Chaudhuri Bahadur*¹, that no hard and fast rule can be laid down regarding the position of the Receiver in insolvency in such a case as this. The learned Chief Justice observes:

"It appears to me that any general statement to the effect that a Receiver is or is not a representative for the purposes of S. 47 of the Code is necessarily misleading. It all depends on the purpose and nature of the application made by the Receiver whether he is a representative of the judgment-debtor or not. For some purposes he would be entitled as representing the judgment-debtor to litigate matters under S. 47 of the Code; but where he comes to the executing Court for the purpose of saying that as the judgment-debtor's property now belongs to the Receiver the Court cannot sell for the judgment-debtor's debt that which is the property of another person because it has vested in the Receiver for the benefit of the creditors, then, for that purpose the Receiver is not, in my judgment, a representative of the judgment-debtor. The Receiver in such a case, if he is not acting under

1. (1931) 35 C.W.N. 971.

S. 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act but acting under the usual provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, is really a third party making a claim."

To the same effect is the decision of a Bench of this Court in *Official Receiver of Kistna v. Imperial Bank of India*¹. The facts of each case have to be taken into consideration in order to find out whether the Official Receiver is a representative of the judgment-debtor or not. In the present case the Official Receiver contended that all the property of the insolvent had vested in him with effect from the date of the insolvency petition. He was therefore in the position of a third party objecting to attachment under O. 21, r. 58 of the Code of Civil Procedure and when his objection was disallowed by the learned Subordinate Judge he had no right of appeal but had the right of filing a suit under O. 21, r. 63 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As for the contention that he was a representative of the sons of the insolvent, that is based on the fact that in 1933 a suit for partition was filed against the eighth defendant on behalf of his eldest son a minor at that time who was the only son of the insolvent then in existence. That was O. S. No. 372 of 1933. Before it was decided in 1936 two other sons had been born to the insolvent. A decree was passed for partition and in that the Official Receiver was appointed as a Special Receiver with directions to pay out of the insolvent's estate all the debts that were properly binding upon the estate and to distribute the rest between the insolvent eighth defendant and his minor sons. It is however not possible to hold that in this execution proceeding the Official Receiver was representing the sons in his capacity as Special Receiver in the partition suit. As a matter of fact the sons were not parties to O. S. No. 34 of 1931 for the simple reason that none of them had been born when that suit was filed. They were not parties therefore to the decree. We are told moreover that in his capacity as Special Receiver in the partition suit the Official Receiver did file a claim under O. 21, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, which was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge on the 28th March, 1938.

We think it is clear that in this case the Official Receiver is not a representative of any of the parties to the suit and therefore has no right of appeal. Sustaining Mr. Govindarajachari's preliminary objection we must dismiss A. A. O. No. 469 of 1938.

Mr. Satyanarayana Rao then proceeded to argue C. R. P. No. 1427 of 1938 which was filed as an alternative remedy. His main contention is that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction in this case to attach the sum of Rs. 5,244 as representing the share of the insolvent's minor sons. To understand this it is necessary to mention the facts which have been very perfunctorily dealt with in the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. O. S. No. 34 of 1931 was filed on the 7th April, 1931 and the decree was passed on the 14th December, 1931. On the 11th April, 1931, the insolvent's property had been attached before judgment. Six days after that Insolvency Petition No. 74 of 1931 was filed against the eighth defendant and he was adjudicated insolvent on the 10th October, 1932. The partition suit (O. S. No. 372 of 1933) was filed as already mentioned on the 14th July, 1933 and on the 14th August, 1936, a preliminary decree for partition was passed. This E. P. was filed on the 1st March, 1937. Now it is quite clear that after partition the interest of the sons cannot be pursued in execution of a decree passed against the father alone. There are many cases in which this has been laid down and it is only necessary to refer to the latest decision in this Court, *Kuppan Chettiar v. Masa Goundan*¹. If the decree-debt is one binding on the joint family the decree-holder can have a remedy against the sons after partition by way of a separate suit but he cannot proceed by way of execution against their interest in the joint family property. Mr. Govindarajachari does not dispute this statement of the law but he contends that the attachment before judgment which was made on the 11th April, 1931, puts this case into a different category altogether. His contention is that since the decree-holder in O. S. No. 34 attached the whole of the joint family property before judgment that attachment enables him to proceed now against the interest of the sons in spite of the fact that they were not parties to the suit. We are unable to accept this contention. The principle laid down in the case cited and in the other cases of the same sort does not make any distinction between attachments effected before judgment and attachments attempted after judgment. It must be borne in mind that when this attachment before judgment was made no son had been born to the eighth defendant. We have been told from the Bar by Mr. Govindarajachari that the insolvent's eldest son (the first plaintiff in the partition suit) was born on the 29th October, 1931, and that therefore he must have been in gremio matrix on the date of attachment. The documents filed before us do not show the date of birth of any of the insolvent's sons. But that is a matter of no importance, because the respondent in this case was not at any time purporting to act against the shares of the sons in pursuance of the attachment effected before judgment. His application was expressly for a fresh attachment of a sum of money in the hands of the Official Receiver. For this reason it is also unnecessary to consider a subsidiary contention of Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao that upon adjudication the whole of the insolvent's property vested in the Official Receiver with effect from the date of the Insolvency Petition, making the attachment before judgment of no avail (vide Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri).

On this ground alone the revision petition must be allowed. Mr. Satyanarayana Rao for the petitioner has raised two other points. One is that this decree-holder was made a party to the partition suit (O. S. No. 372 of 1933). It is alleged that in that suit he did not claim any priority over other creditors and that he is bound by the decree in that suit. The decree provided for what was virtually an administration of the estate of the insolvent eighth defendant in O. S. No. 34 of 1931 directing the Official Receiver as Special Receiver to sell so much of the insolvent's property as was necessary to discharge all his legitimate debts and divide the surplus between the insolvent and his sons. In the present E. P. it is clear that the decree-holder in O. S. No. 34 of 1931 is attempting to get an advantage over the other creditors of K. Venkatasubba Rao. He is trying to collect Rs. 5,244 towards his decree alone without regard to the debts of the insolvent which are binding upon his estate. It is we think quite true to say as Mr. Satyanarayana Rao says that this sum of Rs. 5,244 cannot in any sense be held to be the property of the minor sons of K. Venkatasubba Rao. It represents 4/5th of the sale proceeds of certain items of joint family property. It has no separate existence as the property of the minor sons. It is merely a part of the joint family estate and in O. S. No. 372 of 1933 it has been found that that sum is liable for the discharge of certain other debts besides the one due to the decree-holder in O. S. No. 34 of 1931. It is impossible therefore to say that the minor sons of K. Venkatasubba Rao are entitled to this sum of Rs. 5,244. They have been declared to be entitled to their respective shares of whatever may be left after Venkatasubba Rao's debts have been discharged. This contention also we think must prevail. Mr. Govindarajachari has not been able to show us any reason why the decree-holder in O. S. No. 34 of 1931 should be allowed to ignore the decree in O. S. No. 372 of 1933 to which he was a party, and to proceed in execution of his decree in a manner which is contrary to the terms of that decree.

Another contention of Mr. Satyanarayana Rao is that since the cash attached was in the hands of the Special Receiver in O. S. No. 372 of 1933 leave of the Court was necessary before it could be attached. He has referred us to the case *Thayumana v. Ramaswami*¹ and the case cited in that decision. It is not necessary to pronounce upon the validity or otherwise of this contention since we are satisfied that on the grounds already mentioned the petition must succeed.

Mr. Govindarajachari attempted to argue that revision could not be allowed in this case because the Official Receiver had a remedy by way of suit under O. 21, r. 63. He refers us to the Full Bench decision *Ittiachan v. Velappan*². In that judgment dealing with a similar revision petition (266 of 1884) the learned Judges have observed "we have no power to interfere under S. 622, Civil Procedure Code—the petitioner's remedy is by suit." From this we are asked to infer that the Full Bench laid down that whenever there is a remedy by way of suit the remedy by way of revision cannot be allowed. We can only say that this decision has never been considered in this Court as laying down any such proposition. In point of fact the learned Judges do not say that because the petitioner has a remedy by way of suit therefore they have no power to interfere by way of revision. Cases in which this Court has interfered in revision in spite of the fact that the petitioner had another remedy are too numerous to be quoted. The principle that revision should not be allowed where another remedy is available is a principle which may very conveniently be applied at the stage of admission. This revision petition was admitted by

1. A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 51. 2. (1885) I.L.R. 8 Mad. 484. (F.B.).

Mr. Justice Varadachariar nearly two years ago and since it has been admitted we think that it would be wrong at this stage to say that it must be dismissed merely because the Official Receiver might have proceeded by way of suit. Since it is clear to us that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to attach this money in the hands of the Official Receiver and Special Receiver it would be an unnecessary multiplication of legal proceedings to refer the petitioner now to a suit. We are satisfied that we have jurisdiction to act under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and to allow this petition.

The order of attachment of the sum of Rs. 5,244 is accordingly set aside and E. P. No. 84 of 1937 dismissed. The petitioner will recover his costs of this petition from the first respondent (plaintiff in O. S. No. 34 of 1931) both here and in the Court below.

JUDGMENT.—The only question to be decided in this revision relates to the jurisdictional value placed by the plaintiff in her suit for redemption in which she asked for certain surplus profits to be decreed in her favour in addition. The lower Court relying on *Jalaldeen Marakayar v. Vijayasami*¹ and *Grandhi Potlanna v. Satyananda Charyulu*², held that the value which the plaintiff had placed on her relief for redemption would cover the relief in regard to surplus profits as well and that the latter need not be valued separately. The defendants have filed the present revision to test the correctness of this order.

Since the value, determinable for the computation of court-fees and for purposes of jurisdiction, is, under the provisions of S. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, to be the same, the determination of the latter would depend on the decision as to the requisite court-fee required on the present plaint. Learned counsel for the petitioners contends that the plaintiff is asking for two "distinct subjects" within the meaning of S. 17 of the Court-Fees Act and the plaint is therefore chargeable with the aggregate amount of the fees to which the plaint would be liable, when embracing either of such subjects separately. The court-fees are, unless otherwise provided, to be paid ad valorem and if the plaintiff is asking for two distinct subjects, it would follow that the fee would be chargeable for each subject separately. But the question is whether the relief claimed by the plaintiff for surplus profits is a distinct subject.

Reliance was placed by learned counsel for the petitioners in this connection on *Nilakantan Nambudripad v. Ananthakrishna Aiyar*³, but that case does not bear out his contention as two distinct alternative reliefs forming different matters were being claimed in that case and the court-fee was required to be paid in respect of each relief separately. The claim for redemption in that suit was based upon the alleged right of the plaintiff as a mortgagor while the alternative relief was based on a contract for a further mortgage which was distinct from the earlier mortgage right. As the alternative claims were held to comprise distinct matters which could have been made the grounds for separate suits, they were held to form "distinct subjects" within the meaning of S. 17 of the Court-Fees Act. It was, however, stated in that judgment that "where reliefs are claimed in the alternative with reference to the same cause of action, S. 17 would not govern the case." This observation is fatal to the petitioners' contention and when this was pointed out by me to their learned counsel, he had to concede it.

Schomberg.

It is true that the plaintiff has, in her plaint, asked for surplus profits separately and this was the main ground on which the correctness of the lower Court's order was impugned. But having read the plaint carefully, I am of opinion that the reliefs claimed by the plaintiff, both for redemption and for recovery of mesne profits, are based on her right to redeem and arise out of the same cause of action. S. 7, sub-cl. (ix) of the Court-Fees Act provides that in suits against a mortgagee for recovery of the property mortgaged, the fee would be "according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage." In so far as a suit for redemption is a suit against a mortgagee for the recovery of the property mortgaged, the fee would have to be paid on the principal money expressed to be secured by the mortgage deed although the major portion of the principal amount may have been paid or may be alleged to have been paid before the suit is instituted. Similarly, the amount of interest which may have accumulated on the mortgage and which the mortgagor will be required to pay in addition to the principal due under the deed, will have to be disregarded, in computing the fee to be paid for the redemption suit.

Since the main relief claimed by the plaintiff is one for redemption and her prayers for surplus profits or for accounts are only subservient to the main relief claimed by her and as the ascertainment of the amount payable by one party to the other is a condition of redemption and is incidental thereto, the valuation put by the plaintiff in her plaint is correct. The fact that the plaintiff has stated the amount which would be according to her, due by the defendant-mortgagee is, to my mind, immaterial. The taking of an account has to be ordered by a Court under the terms of a preliminary decree passed in a redemption suit (O. 37, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code) and if it appears that the defendant-mortgagee has been overpaid, he would be directed under r. 9 not only to re-transfer the property, but to pay to the plaintiff-mortgagor the amount which has been found due to him. In such a case, the plaintiff could not have been, under the provisions of S. 7, sub-cl. (ix) of the Court-Fees Act asked to pay any additional court-fee. Why should she be compelled to pay additional court-fee when she has added a prayer in respect of a matter which the Court is bound to inquire into and which must, for that reason, be regarded as more or less superfluous? I would therefore respectfully agree with the reasons given by Mr. Justice Sundaram Chetty in *Grandhi Pothanna v. Satyananda Charyulu*¹ and with what was decided in *Chhiddu Singh v. Jhanjhan Rai*².

The revision fails for the above reasons and is dismissed with costs.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), Ss. 8 and 12—Debt scaled down under S. 8 (3)—From what date to carry interest.

Reading S. 8 as a whole, the date mentioned in sub-S. (1) is the date up to which all debts falling under that section have to be scaled down and the balance due after scaling down should carry interest from 1st October, 1937, at the rate mentioned in S. 12.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Tirumangalam dated 30th March, 1939 and made in M. P. No. 277 of 1938 in O. S. No. 343 of 1936.

down under S. 8 (3) of Madras Act IV of 1938 is to carry interest under S. 12 of the Act. The debt in this case was contracted on 14th September, 1932, and the decree thereon was passed on 21st December, 1936. It was scaled down to Rs. 298-14-11 being the amount by which the sums paid by way of principal, and interest fell short of twice the amount of the principal and there is no dispute before us regarding the amount:

In applying S. 12 of the Act, the Court below was of opinion that when a debt is scaled down under sub-S. 3 of S. 8 it has to be scaled down up to the commencement of the Act and the reference to 1st October, 1937, in sub-S. (1) has no application to cases falling under sub-S. (3). We consider that this view is erroneous. It is true that sub-S. (3) does not mention the date up to which debts have to be scaled down thereunder, but the latter part of that sub-section which makes repayable the principal amount or such portion of the principal amount as is outstanding, if it happens to be smaller than the amount arrived at by the process indicated in the first part, clearly refers back to the result of applying sub-S. (1) under which all interest payable on the 1st October, 1937, is wiped out. As sub-S. (3) thus involves a comparison between the amount arrived at by applying sub-S. (1) and that arrived at by applying the first part of sub-S. (3), in order to ascertain which is smaller, it is clear that the amount payable under the first part of sub-S. (3) must be ascertained with reference to the same date, as otherwise there will be no proper basis for comparison. Sub-Ss. (2), (3) and (4) are, in our view, in the nature of provisos to sub-S. (1) whose operation is limited and qualified by those provisions. We are, therefore, of opinion, reading S. 8 as a whole, that the date mentioned in sub-S. (1) is the date up to which all debts falling under that section have to be scaled down. It follows that sums which remain payable in respect of debts scaled down under that section carry interest from 1st October, 1937, at the rate mentioned in S. 12. The petitioner will thus be entitled to interest on Rs. 298-14-11 from 1st October, 1937, at the decretal rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

The revision petition is allowed and the order of the lower Court will be modified accordingly. The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 19—Extent of puisne mortgagee's right to scale down when owner of equity of redemption is a non-agriculturist.

A puisne mortgagee impleaded in a suit on the first mortgage is a judgment-debtor and the mortgage debt is payable by him. The mere fact of the sub-mortgage by the puisne mortgagee, an agriculturist to a non-agriculturist does not take the debt outside the purview of the Act. The agriculturist judgment-debtor is entitled to the full benefit of the Act.

Form of decree, where one debtor is an agriculturist and another a non-agriculturist indicated.

Wads-

Wadsworth, J.—This petition raises questions under S. 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938. The decree in question was passed on a mortgage executed in 1916 by the deceased father-in-law of the first defendant, who has not been proved to be an agriculturist. The appellant (petitioner here) was the second defendant in the suit, he having taken an usufructuary mortgage over the same properties on 22nd May, 1920, undertaking to discharge the prior mortgage. Third defendant (the District Board) has acquired the equity of redemption of certain items and is quite clearly not an agriculturist. On 15th January, 1936, the applicant consented to the passing of a preliminary decree on the prior mortgage and on 6th March, 1937, a final decree was passed. The puisne mortgage right of the applicant has been sub-mortgaged to one Appoji Naidu, who has deposited Rs. 2,700 to the credit of the decree and it was contended in the lower Court by the plaintiff that this deposit satisfied the decree and that there was no longer any decree to be scaled down. This contention was repelled by the lower Court and it has not been contended before us that this view was wrong. The lower Court held, however, that the applicant was not entitled to the benefits of the Act because the scaling down of the decree in his favour would result in a benefit to other defendants who are not agriculturists.

We have already held in C.R.P. No. 653 of 1939 that the representative of a puisne mortgagee who was a judgment-debtor was entitled to be regarded as a debtor under S. 7 and to scale down the decree under S. 19 of the Act and we dissented from the decision of Newsam, J., in *Narayana-chari v. Annamalai Chettiar*¹. But that was a case in which there was not the complication of the owner of the equity of redemption being a non-agriculturist, so that the decree could be scaled down as a whole. It is argued by Mr. Ramaswami Aiyangar for the decree-holder that the right of an agriculturist judgment-debtor to scale down a decree should not be allowed to enure for the benefit of a non-agriculturist judgment-debtor, a proposition with which we are in agreement. But we find it difficult to accede to the further contention that, the mortgage being one and indivisible, it is wrong in theory and difficult in practice to scale down the decree against the agriculturist judgment-debtor, while leaving it unamended as against the non-agriculturist judgment-debtors. The theoretical argument is based on the absence from S. 19 of any words excluding the application of the general law governing mortgages. But S. 19 is only the machinery section. The substantive provisions are contained in S. 7 which says:

"Notwithstanding any law.....or decree of Court to the contrary, all debts payable by an agriculturist at the commencement of this Act, shall be scaled down....."

Having regard to our previous decisions, we must hold that the applicant is a judgment-debtor and that the decree debt is payable by him. It follows that this debt is to be scaled down, notwithstanding the decree and notwithstanding the provisions of the general law which prevent the person who acquires a partial interest in the hypotheca from denying the liability of his interest to satisfy the whole of the mortgage debt. We are unable to accept the contention that a debt which is payable by an agriculturist falls outside the purview of the Act merely because it is also payable by a non-agriculturist and it seems to us obvious that the mere fact that the applicant has sub-mortgaged his interest to a non-agriculturist will not deprive the applicant of any benefits to which he may be entitled under the Act as a person liable to satisfy the decree. The practical difficulties on which Mr. Ramaswami Aiyangar has laid emphasis, seem to us to be more apparent than real. It will, of course, be necessary to modify the form of decree, reciting separately the amount payable by the puisne mortgagee and declaring that on the payment of this amount by him, the interest of the puisne mortgagee will not be liable to be sold or foreclosed and the hypotheca will be sold only subject to that interest; and that on failure of the puisne mortgagee to pay the amount declared to be due from him within the time allowed, the whole of the mortgaged property including the interest of the puisne mortgagee will be liable to be sold for the full amount of the decree. This procedure will give to the agriculturist judgment-debtor the full benefit of the relief to which he is entitled under the Act and will safeguard the rights of the decree-holder as against those judgment-debtors who are not entitled to the benefits of the Act.

The petition is therefore allowed with costs and the application is remitted to the lower Court for disposal in the light of this judgment.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), Ss. 8 and 9—Mortgage bond of 1929—Later promissory note in 1937 for interest due on mortgage—Decree on promissory note—If decree debt to be scaled down under S. 9 as one incurred after 1932 or under S. 8 as one incurred before 1932—Promissory note if a fresh advance.

Where for interest due on a mortgage of 1929, the debtor executed a promissory note in January, 1937 and a decree was obtained on the promissory note, the decree is to be scaled down, under S. 8 of the Act treating the promissory note as a renewal of the liability under the mortgage bond to pay interest; and as the claim represents only interest on the mortgage the whole claim must be disallowed. It is not necessary for scaling down that the original debt itself must be the subject-matter of the proceeding before the Court. The execution of the promissory note for interest due on the mortgage does not amount to payment of interest on the debt and a fresh advance of the sum as principal under the note.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—This is a petition to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dindigul dated 5th September, 1938, whereby it entered satisfaction of the decree in S. C. S. No. 40 of 1937 on application by the judgment-debtor, respondent before us, under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The respondent executed a mortgage for Rs. 800 in favour of the petitioner on 16th September, 1929, and for interest due on the mortgage, he gave on 23rd January, 1937, a promissory note for Rs. 595-7-0 the sum being endorsed on the mortgage bond as received for interest. The decree which is sought to be scaled down was obtained on this promissory note. The respondent applied in the Court below alleging that he was an agriculturist and that by virtue of the combined operation of Ss. 8 and 9 of the Act, the decree must be deemed to have been satisfied. The application was allowed and full satisfaction of the decree was accordingly recorded. There was no dispute that the respondent was an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act.

Learned counsel for the petitioner contended that the promissory note on which the decree was passed represented a distinct debt consisting of the principal sum Rs. 595-7-0 and the interest accruing thereon, and as this debt alone was the subject matter of the proceeding for scaling down, the only relief the respondent could obtain was the scaling down of the interest payable on this debt. We are unable to accept this contention. It is true that, the debt having been incurred in 1937, it has to be scaled down in the manner mentioned in S. 9 of the Act. But in view of the proviso to sub-S. (1) of that section the promissory note which was admittedly taken for interest due on the mortgage bond of 1929 must be taken to be a renewal of the previous liability to pay such interest and therefore dealt with under S. 8. This section clearly provides that all interest outstanding on the 1st October, 1937, shall be deemed to be discharged, and we are unable to discover in the terms of the section any justification for the view that it is only the interest payable in respect of the debt which is made the subject-matter of the proceeding before the Court that can be scaled down and not the debt where such debt itself consists only of interest due on another debt. It is obvious that to apply the section in the manner suggested for the petitioner would render its provisions practically nugatory. For, a creditor could defeat the object of the section by the simple expedient of suing for the interest alone in the first instance and then suing for the principal, as in the case of most debts there is usually a distinct covenant to pay interest. Similarly, the provisions of Ss. 9 and 13 dealing with other classes of loans could also be evaded by adopting the same device. We have therefore no hesitation in rejecting the contention which would thus have the effect of largely defeating the vital provisions of the Act. These sections clearly enact that interest due on the various classes of debts for which they respectively make provisions should be dealt with in the manner mentioned therein, and it is the duty of the Court whenever a claim is made for interest on debts falling under one or other of these classes to scale down the claim in accordance with these provisions whether or not the debt in respect of which such claim is made is the subject-matter of the proceeding; that is to say, for example, where a claim is made for interest on a debt incurred before the 1st of October, 1932, the Court should apply sub-S. (1) of S. 8 and disallow the claim, although the creditor might not have put the debt itself in suit.

It was then argued that the execution of a promissory note for interest due on another debt amounted to a payment of interest on the debt and a fresh advance of the sum as principal under the note. It is however difficult to see how it can have that effect, at any rate in the absence of any special bargain between the parties of which there is no evidence in this case. In rejecting a similar contention advanced in support of assessment to income-tax of interest for which a promissory note had been taken from the debtor, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed in *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Maharajahdiraj of Dharbhanga*¹:

"A debtor who gives his creditor a promissory note for the sum he owes can in no sense be said to pay his creditor; he merely gives him a document or voucher of debt possessing certain legal attributes."

It follows that the promissory note and the decree based thereon must be deemed to be discharged as interest outstanding on the mortgage debt on the 1st October, 1937. This is also the view taken by Abdur Rahman, J., in C. R. P. No. 769 of 1940.

The revision petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chingleput, dated 27th February, 1939 and made in E. P. No. 69 of 1938 in S. C. No. 15 of 1933.

V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar and K. Ramaswami Aiyangar for Petitioner.

M. S. Venkatarama Aiyar for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The point to which Mr. Rangaswami Aiyangar has directed a very interesting and careful argument does not appear to have been decided in any reported case. It can be very simply stated. On the 20th September, 1933, there was a decree in favour of the present petitioner against respondents 1 to 3 in this petition for Rs. 320-7-0. The respondents (the defendants in the suit) preferred a Civil Revision Petition early in 1934. It is numbered, I am told, 92 of 1934, and so it must obviously have been very early in the year. On the 31st of March, 1934, the decree-holder transferred his decree. On the 20th of September, 1934, the transferee decree-holder was recognised by Court. On the 6th of May, 1936, the Civil Revision Petition was heard and decided. The decree of the 20th September, 1933, was set aside and a re-trial was ordered. Before the Civil Revision Petition was decided, the transferee decree-holder had realised the amount of the decree from the judgment-debtors, the present respondents 1 to 3. On the re-hearing, only Rs. 75 with proportionate costs was decreed. The present respondents 1 to 3 then applied under S. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the recovery of the amount paid by them to the transferee decree-holder and they made as respondents to that application both the original decree-holder and the transferee. It was mentioned to me that the transferee decree-holder was not made a party to the Civil Revision Petition which resulted in the re-hearing. It is against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge on the application for restitution that this Civil Revision Petition comes before me.

The learned Judge took the view that when a decree-holder, after having obtained a decree, assigns it to a third party, he is presumed to have the benefit of the decree and, when the third party to whom he has assigned the decree realized the amount from the defendant, the right to claim restitution as against the original decree-holder arises. He therefore made an order for restitution against both the original decree-holder and the transferee decree-holder for an amount which may be said to represent the original decree after deducting the amount of the second decree and making allowances for costs and interest. Mr. Rangaswami Aiyangar has argued that that order is an illegal order and that the only person against whom restitution can be made is the transferee decree-holder and not the original decree-holder. S. 144, which has been frequently discussed in cases, is worded in the most comprehensive terms, and I think the result of the cases is that it should be widely construed. Its object is to put right what was originally an error of the Court and to restore the parties to the position they would have occupied. It is argued that, after the transfer has been made, the original decree-holder ceased to be a party. In my view, that position is covered exactly by S. 144. In the decision reported in *Govindappa v. Hanumanthappa*¹, the more difficult position, as to whether the transferee decree-holder can be made the subject of an order under S. 144 has been decided and decided against the transferee decree-holder. It seems to me that the case before me is precisely covered by S. 144 and that the word 'party' should be given a wide meaning, because it is clear that it is not confined only to the original parties to the suit, but applies also to persons who would become subsequently concerned. That, I think, may be derived from the observations in two cases. The first is in Doraisami Aiyar v. Annasami Aiyar.² At p. 310, Subrahmania Aiyar, J., states:

Kadirvelu
v.
Kempu
Chettiar.

"The principle of the doctrine of restitution is that on the reversal of a judgment the law raises an obligation in the party to the record who received the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he had lost. . . . That obligation it is the duty of the Courts to enforce unless it is shown that restitution would be clearly contrary to the real justice of the case."

Now the present party, the original plaintiff, unquestionably received the benefit from the erroneous judgment because he was able to sell his decree to the transferee decree-holder.

2. (1900) 10 M.L.J. 307: I.L.R. 23 Mad. 306.

Kadirvelu
Chettiar
v.
Kempu
Chettiar.

In the Allahabad case *Brij Lal v. Damodar Das*¹, Walsh, J. after reiterating that S. 144 is very wide in its terms, says that the word 'party' is not used in that section in the sense 'party to the suit', the expression ordinarily found in other parts of the Code, but must mean 'party to the application'. I think that what the learned Judge intends is that it is not confined to the expression 'party to the suit' but may include any other persons who are parties to the application. In my view, the fact that a party to a suit who has obtained a decree wrongly against another person prefers to get the immediate benefit of it by a sale, that is to say, a transfer, rather than waiting to execute against the party, in no way affects the rights of the original party to recover in restitution what he has paid over under pressure of the original erroneous decree. The fact that he has paid it over to a nominee of the original plaintiff seems to me wholly irrelevant to his right to recover against the person who caused him to make that payment, namely, the original plaintiff. I think that any other view might open the door to fraudulent transfers to men of straw and might defeat the very object of S. 144. I think the order of the lower Court was a proper order and I do not propose to interfere with it in any way although it was at one time suggested that the order might be varied by directing that the remedy should be first exhausted against the transferee decree-holder. That, however, is not a matter for consideration in revision. This petition will be therefore dismissed with costs of the fourth respondent.

I should like to add, and counsel agree, that the references in Govindappa v. Hanumanthappa,² to Tangi Joghi v. Hall,³ are evidently printing errors and that throughout that case the references were intended to be to the case of Doraisami Aiyar v. Annasami Aiyar,⁴ reported in the same volume at p. 306.

District Munsif, but on appeal, the learned District Judge of Salem has allowed execution to proceed.

There appears to have been some dispute in the Court of the District Munsif as to whether the land which is the subject-matter of this appeal was or was not part of an estate, as now defined by the Act. However, the respondent, who was the appellant before the learned District Judge, and against whom the District Munsif decided this point, did not raise it in his grounds of appeal and I need not therefore consider it either.

It is clear that at the present time and at the time when this execution application was presented, the appellants here were in occupation of land which was part of an estate. They now rely upon S. 6 (1), Expl. (2) of the Estates Land Act, which enacts that any person who was in possession on 30th June, 1934, of any land which is now an estate by virtue of the Act of 1936 shall have occupancy rights. It is contended, on the other hand, by the respondent, that he is protected by S. 127 of Act VIII of 1934. The first sub-section of that section runs as follows:

"Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), nothing in this Act or in any repeal or amendment effected thereby shall affect any right, title, interest, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of this Act under a decree or order of a competent Court."

It is pointed out for the respondent that his decree is dated 26th January, 1934, before the Act VIII of 1934 came into force and it is argued that under the provisions of this section, the rights which he has acquired cannot be attacked. I am unable to see how this section can apply to the facts of the present case. It is clear from the language of the section that it relates only to such repeal or amendment as Act VIII of 1934 itself brings about. Explanation 2 to S. 6 (1) was enacted, not by Act VIII of 1934 but by Act XVIII of 1936. It is impossible therefore that S. 127 of Act VIII of 1934 could control or in any way apply to Explanation 2 to S. 6 (1) of the Act as we now have it. This contention on the part of the respondent must therefore be overruled.

It is next contended on behalf of the respondent that if he is not permitted to execute his decree, it will infringe the well-known principle of law that the executing Court cannot go behind the terms of the decree. This argument also I am unable to accept. The plea which the judgment-debtors are now putting forward in no way affects the validity of the decree. If their contention is accepted, it does not in the slightest amount to an assertion that the decree in 1934 ought not to have been passed. No new facts are alleged which would in any way involve the reopening of the decision then arrived at by the Court. All that they are pleading is that certain events have happened, namely, a new Act has been passed, the effect of which renders the decree which is perfectly valid in itself inexecutable in practice. I see no reason or principle of law upon which the appellants should be debarred from raising this plea. On the other hand, in *Shyam Mandal v. Satinath Banerjee*¹, I find it stated that a particular objection which is there being dealt with is one that could properly be taken in proceedings in execution of the decree.

"The judgment-debtor, when he takes such objection, does not attack the decree, he merely urges that the decree, though properly made, has, by reason of events subsequent, become incapable of execution."

I hold therefore that by reason of Expl. 2 to S. 6 (1) of the Act, the appellants cannot be evicted from the land and that they are entitled to raise this plea against the decree-holder when he attempts to execute his decree.

In the result, this appeal must be allowed and the order of the learned District Munsif must be restored with costs throughout.

Leave granted.

Wadsworth, J.—The question in this Civil Revision Petition is whether, having regard to the terms of Proviso D to S. 3 (ii) of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, the petitioner is an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of S. 15 of the Act. The petitioner owns the kudivaram interest in certain lands in the village of Kolathur, which is an estate under the Madras Estates Land Act, paying a peishcush of Rs. 1,200. Some years ago he purchased the zamin rights of the estate and in 1927 he was recognised by the Collector as the landholder. In 1934 he executed two usufructuary mortgages, each covering one moiety of the zamin right in the estate. He retained his ryoti lands and thus became the tenant of his mortgagees in respect of those lands. In 1935 the respondent (one of the mortgagees) applied to the Collector for recognition as the landholder of the estate. His application was opposed by the mortgagees of the other half of the zamin and the petitioner was also a party to the proceedings. The Collector recognised the respondent as the landholder, holding that the petitioner was no longer entitled to collect the rents and that the respondent was entitled to a larger share of the income than either of the mortgagees of the other half. The question is whether in view of this order, the petitioner can be deemed to be a landholder of an estate in respect of which a sum exceeding Rs. 500 is paid as peishcush. The lower Court held that he was a landholder and therefore disentitled to the benefits conferred on agriculturists by S. 15 of Act IV of 1938.

The question is by no means free from difficulty. Proviso D to S. 3 (ii) excludes from the category of agriculturists any person who "is a landholder of an estate under the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, or of a share or portion thereof in respect of which estate, share or portion any sum exceeding Rs. 500 is paid as peishcush....". The exclusion of a landholder of a share or portion of an estate paying a peishcush exceeding Rs. 500 seems to indicate that the Legislature had in mind the qualification of ownership of the zamin interest rather than the qualification of recognition by the Collector. But the definition of a 'landholder' in the Estates Land Act as a person owning an estate or a part thereof or entitled to collect the rents of a whole or any portion of the estate, has the following subsidiary clause:—

"Where there is a dispute between two or more persons as to which of them is the landholder for all or any of the purposes of this Act or between two or more joint landholders as to which of them is entitled to proceed and be dealt with as such landholder, the person who shall be deemed to be the landholder for such purposes shall be the person whom the Collector subject to any decree or order of a competent Civil Court may recognize or nominate as such landholder in accordance with rules to be framed by the local Government in this behalf."

One of the rules framed under this section provides that where two landholders have equal claims to recognition, the Collector shall recognize the more competent.

Under this provision of law, the respondent has been recognized by the Collector as the landholder for all the purposes of the Act. It is argued that by reason of this recognition, the other joint landholders (including the petitioner) ceased to be landholders for any of the purposes of the Act and that since the definition exists only for the purposes of the Act, they ceased to have the status of landholders at all.

Now there can be no doubt that the acceptance of this view of the law would lead to serious anomalies. Take the case of an estate paying a peishcush of Rs. 2,000, which is enjoyed in two equal moieties by A and B. The Collector would have to decide whether A was more competent than B and the result would be that the more competent man who was recognized as the landholder would not be an agriculturist, while the less competent man, though owning a portion of an estate paying a peishcush of Rs. 1,000, would be entitled to the benefits of Act IV of 1938 as an agriculturist, though it appears to have been intended that he should not be so entitled. In fact the result of this interpretation of Proviso D would be practically to nullify the exclusion from the category of agriculturists of landholders of a share or portion of an estate paying a peishcush exceeding Rs. 500.

At the same time there are serious difficulties in interpreting the word 'landholder' in this proviso in accordance with its dictionary sense as a proprietor or owner and without regard to the definition in the Madras Estates Land Act. The word 'landholder' is used in Ss. 3 (ii) (b), 3 (iv), 15, 16 and 17 of Act IV of 1938 and in each of these sections it appears to be used in its technical sense as a landholder under the Estates Land Act. Moreover in Proviso D to S. 3 (ii), though the words "under the Madras Estates Land Act," appear grammatically to qualify 'estate' rather than 'landholder' the whole phrase seems to have reference to that Act and it is to be presumed that the legislature had in mind the definition of the term 'landholder' in that Act rather than the dictionary meaning of the word.

The solution of the difficulty seems to us to lie in a more careful reading of the second clause of S. 3 (5) of the Estates Land Act. This clause seems to contemplate two classes of dispute. One is a dispute between two or more persons as to which of them is the landholder for all or any of the purposes of the Act, that is to say a dispute regarding title. The other is a dispute between two persons who are admittedly joint landholders as to which of them is entitled to proceed and be dealt with as the landholder, that is to say, it is a dispute not regarding title but regarding the right of management. In the latter class of cases, the proper order to be passed by the Collector is not one recognizing the successful party as the landholder for all purposes under the Act, but one recognizing him as entitled to proceed and be dealt with as the landholder. When such an order is passed, though the successful party would be solely entitled to conduct proceedings and to perform the functions of the landholder so long as the order is in force, it would not have the effect of taking the joint proprietor out of the definition of 'landholder' in the first clause of the sub-section. It is true that the Collector's order in the present case purported to recognize the respondent as the landholder for all purposes under the Act, but this order can have no larger effect than the recognition which the Collector was empowered to make.

It follows that, notwithstanding the recognition of the respondent as the landholder, the petitioner as owner of the estate must also be deemed to be a landholder within the definition in S. 3 (5) of the Madras Estates Land Act. He is therefore not an agriculturist under Act IV of 1938. The petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief-Act (IV of 1938), S. 19—Decree on mortgage—Purchaser of equity of redemption—If judgment-debtor—Liability of, if 'debt' under Act liable to be scaled down.

The purchaser of the equity of redemption at a sale in execution of a money decree against the mortgagors claimed to have the mortgage decree amended under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938.

Held, in the absence of any definition in the Act, there is no obvious reason why the term 'judgment-debtor' should not be understood as including a person whose liability is a 'debt', as defined by the Act, more especially as that definition includes a judgment debt. Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi, (1907) 17 M.L.J. 417; I.L.R. 30 Mad. 537, applied. Ganapathi Bhatta v. D'Souza, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 317, overruled.

The liability of the purchaser of the equity of redemption, is a 'debt' within the meaning of the Act. Perianna v. Sellappa, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 1068; I.L.R. (1939) Mad. 218, relied on.

It is immaterial whether or not the debtor had the agriculturist character when the debt was originally incurred, where it was incurred prior to 1st October, 1937.

application under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act for scaling down the amount payable under the decree dated 14th August, 1932, in O. S. No. 678 of 1932 on the file of that Court.

The respondent obtained the decree on foot of a mortgage to which he claimed to be subrogated and was proceeding with its execution when the petitioner, having purchased the equity of redemption in the properties on 17th April, 1936, in execution of a money decree against the mortgagors, intervened with a claim to have the respondent's decree amended under S. 19 of the Act. There is no dispute that the petitioner is an agriculturist but the respondent objected that the petitioner was not a 'judgment-debtor' within the meaning of that section. The Court below upheld the objection and dismissed the application. It appears to have been conceded in the Court below that the defendants in the mortgage suit against whom the decree was passed were not agriculturists at the commencement of the Act as, after the purchase by the petitioner as aforesaid, they had no agricultural lands left in their possession, and it was presumably a matter of indifference to them whether or not the amount of the decree was reduced.

Before dealing with the main question as to whether or not the petitioner can be regarded as a judgment-debtor within the meaning of S. 19 of the Act, we will mention, only to dismiss, the suggestion that, in view of the definition of 'debt' in S. 3 (iii), unless the debt for the repayment of which the decree was passed was a debt due by an agriculturist even at its inception, S. 19 could have no application. The object of the Act is clearly to provide relief for debtors who are agriculturists at the commencement of the Act (See S. 17) while S. 19, read with the definition of 'agriculturist' seems to require that the debtor seeking relief should be an agriculturist at the time of the application, and the first paragraph of S. 19 further requires, with a view to prevent abuse of the provisions of the Act, that the debtor should also have been an 'agriculturist' on the 1st October, 1937, as the proposal of affording relief to indebted agriculturists was made known that date. Thus, it is clear that the agriculturist character of the debtor is not relevant for purpose of scaling down debts under the Act except with reference to these three dates, and it is immaterial whether or not the debtor had such character when the debt was originally incurred where it was incurred prior to the 1st October, 1937.

Turning now to the main question whether the petitioner can be said to be a 'judgment-debtor' within the meaning of S. 19, it will be observed that the definition of that term in S. 2 (10), Civil Procedure Code, as meaning "any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made" has not been incorporated in this Act. On the other hand, the definition of 'debt' in S. 3 (iii) includes debts payable under a decree or order of a Court. According to the decision in *Perianna v. Sellappa*¹, the liability of the petitioner as the purchaser of the properties subject to the mortgage decree is a 'debt' within the meaning of the Act. In these circumstances, if the contention of the respondent were to be accepted, it would have the startling result, that though the petitioner as well as his liability comes within the purview of S. 7 which provides that the debt 'shall be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter', that is, of Chapter II of the Act which contains the substantive provisions as to scaling down of debts, he would be excluded from such relief by reason of the 'procedure' provided in S. 19 for obtaining it being inapplicable to him. On the other hand, it stands to reason that the procedure provided in a statute for enforcement of the substantive rights conferred thereby should be construed as far as possible, so as to give effect to and not to nullify those rights. This is by no means in conflict with the principle we have often reiterated in connection with this Act, namely, that its provisions being of an expropriatory character should be strictly construed and its scope ought not to be extended beyond what is clearly and expressly indicated by its terms. In the absence of any definition in this Act, there is no obvious reason why the term 'judgment-debtor' should not be understood as including a person whose liability is a 'debt' as defined by the Act, more especially as that definition includes a judgment-debt.

As pointed out by learned counsel for the petitioner, there is authority for the view that even under the Civil Procedure Code, the term 'judgment-debtor' notwithstanding the definition contained therein, includes those who claim through or in his right. In *Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi*², it was held by a Bench of this Court that S. 258 corresponding to O. 21, r. 2 of the present Code was applicable to persons in the position of the respondent before us. The learned Judges observed:

"We think however that the word 'judgment-debtor' in S. 258 should be construed as including those who claim through him or in his right. To hold otherwise would lead to obvious hardships which we cannot think were contemplated"

This decision was followed by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in *Matharasappa Chettiar v. Muthu Chettiar*¹ and was referred to with approval by Wadia, J., in *Shivbasappa Chinnappa v. Marigowda Huchangowda*².

The respondent's learned counsel placed reliance on the decision of Horwill, J., in *Ganapathi Bhatta v. D'Souza*³, which no doubt supports his contention. The learned Judge held that the word 'judgment-debtor' in S. 19 must be understood in the sense defined in the Civil Procedure Code, and therefore a purchaser of the equity of redemption from a Receiver in the insolvency of a judgment-debtor was not entitled to apply under that section. Distinguishing *Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi*⁴, the learned Judge observed that:

"Even there it was not said that persons claiming through judgment-debtors were also judgment-debtors. It only says that S. 258 applied to those claiming through them and in their right as well as to judgment-debtors."

We cannot agree with this view of that decision. The learned Judges there referred to the contention for the appellant before them based upon the definition of 'judgment-debtor' in the Code of Civil Procedure, and they expressly held in the passage quoted above that the word 'judgment-debtor' in S. 258 included those who claimed through or under him. Nor is there any change in this respect in the present Code, as the learned Judge appears to have supposed. The learned Judge also placed reliance upon *Thiruvengadam Pillai v. Doridla Subbiah*⁵, as expressly deciding the point. The case itself related to the right of a transferee of a decree to apply under O. 21, r. 53 to execute the decree when such decree had been attached by a creditor of the decree-holder. In support of their conclusion that the assignee of an attached decree was not in the same position as the decree-holder himself for purposes of execution, the learned Judges observed :

"We may also point out that the definition of judgment-debtor, as given in S. 2 cl. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not include the assignee of the judgment-debtor."

The observation is thus purely obiter, if it is to be understood as anything more than a statement of a fact. However that may be under the Code of Civil Procedure, we consider that there are as already indicated cogent reasons for not construing the word 'judgment-debtor' in the restricted sense of the definition in S. 2 (10) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and we are accordingly of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to apply under S. 19 of the Madras Act IV of 1938 for amendment of the decree by scaling down the amount payable thereunder in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the question whether the petitioner could rely on S. 146, Civil Procedure Code, when the defendants in the mortgage suit had ceased to be agriculturists at the commencement of the Act.

We set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case for disposal in the light of our judgment herein. The petitioner will have his costs of this revision petition.

Appeal against the judgment and order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Somayya dated 8th January, 1940 and made in the exercise of the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 344 of 1939 in Petition No. 148 of 1938.

K. V. Ramachandra Aiyar and S. Tyagaraja Aiyar for Appellant.

A. V. Seshayya for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—The appellant in this case is the Official Assignee of Madras, who represents the estate of one C. Subramania Iyah, an insolvent. Before his adjudication, the insolvent borrowed a sum of Rs. 300 from the respondent, who is a money-lender and as security for the loan deposited with him two policies of insurance on his life. The deposit was evidenced by a document in writing and the question which arises in this appeal is whether this document amounts to an assignment of the insolvent's interest in the policies. It was held by Somayya, J., that the document constitutes an assignment, and the appellant challenges the correctness of this finding.

The document is in the form of a letter signed by the insolvent in favour of the respondent and commences thus:

"I have taken from you a loan of Rs 300 in words Rupees Three Hundred only at $1\frac{1}{2}$ pies per rupee per mensem on the pledge of the articles noted below on the following conditions."

It will be sufficient for the purposes of this appeal to state three of the conditions, namely, Nos. 4, 6 and 7, which read as follows:

"4. I authorise you to hold and retain the below mentioned jewels with you as a collateral security for a general balance of account i.e., not only for the aforesaid debt but also for any sums that I might have borrowed or may borrow from you or for any balance of account that may be due to you.

6. I have received to-day a copy of this letter giving full description of the pledge.

7. If I fail to redeem the articles within six months, or if I fail to pay interest for six months you may realize your dues either by sale or by public auction of all or any of the pledged properties after seven days' notice by post or by personal service or by registered post to the address given above. I shall be responsible for any deficiency and you will refund the surplus if any."

Immediately following the signature are these words:

"Particulars of Pledge.

One Postal Endowment Assurance Policy No. 22786 for Rs. 1,500.

One National Insurance Company Table No. III Endowment Assurance sum assured Rs. 1,000 Policy No. E. 114692."

The letter was in fact a printed form used by the respondent for an advance on the security of jewellery with certain details filled in by pen. No attempt was made to alter this very inappropriate form to make it read as a transfer of the respondent's interest in these policies.

Leach, C.J.

The learned Judge has rightly pointed out that it is well established that the transfer of an actionable claim referred to in S. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act may be one of absolute assignment or by way of security. His reasons for holding that the letter signed by the insolvent operates as a transfer are that the law does not require any particular form of writing and that he was satisfied that there was here a writing by which security was created. We find ourselves unable to concur in the opinion of the learned Judge that the document operates as an assignment. It is quite true that the form of the instrument or words used are not of importance, provided that it is clearly indicated that the owner of the actionable claim is transferring his interest. A mere intention to create a pledge would not amount to an assignment within the meaning of S. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. This was pointed out by the Privy Council in *Mulraj Khatau v. Visvanath Prabhuram Vaidya*¹. In that case the appellant claimed to be entitled to an insurance policy which had been assigned to him in writing. The respondent also claimed to be entitled to it on the ground that it had been deposited by the owner with him by way of pledge, but Lord Moulton in delivering the judgment of the Board pointed out that a pledge does not satisfy the requirements of S. 130.

Now when the document in this case is read, what does it amount to? It amounts to an instrument evidencing the deposit of the policies of insurance by way of pledge, and nothing more. Under this document the respondent has merely the rights of a pledgee of movable property. A mortgagee is a transferee but a pledgee is not, although the pledgee has a special interest in the property as the holder of security. He may sell the property pledged if the condition of repayment is not fulfilled, but that does not make him in any way the owner or transferee of the property. The only difference which I can see between this case and *Mulraj Khatau v. Visvanath Prabhuram Vaidya*¹ is that in this case there is a document evidencing the pledge whereas in the other case the pledge was unaccompanied by any acknowledgment. An instrument evidencing a pledge and nothing more certainly cannot be read as an assignment.

The learned advocate for the respondent has referred us to *Rama Iyen v. Venkatachalam Pattari*¹ and *Muthukrishna Aiyar v. Veeraraghava Aiyar*², but the facts in those cases are very different from the facts in the present case. In the first of those cases, on the back of a promissory note was endorsed a direction to pay the amount to a certain person to whom the instrument was delivered. It was held that the direction to pay coupled with the delivery of the instrument amounted to an assignment within the meaning of S. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. There are many differences between that case and the present one, but it is only necessary to mention that here there is no direction to the insurance companies to pay the amounts of the policies to the respondent. In the second case the instrument read as follows:

"As I have received Rs. 600 from you by mortgaging the following, i.e., the house.....and the promissory note mentioned as '2' in the Schedule.... for Rs. 500 executed by my brother Sankarasubbier on the 21st November, 1901.....I promise to repay the said sum of Rs. 600 with interest thereon at one per cent. per month within a year from the date hereof failing which I shall repay the principal and interest thereon at 1½ per cent. per month and add the interest to principal every year and repay the same with compound interest at the rate aforesaid failing which you may proceed against the mortgaged properties, other properties or personally for the collection thereof." (*Muthukrishnan v. Veeraraghava Aiyar*³.)

There was disagreement in this case between Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ. and consequently the appeal was placed before a Bench of three Judges. It was held that the mortgage had operated as an assignment of the promissory note. The difference between that case and the present one is that in that case there was a mortgage and a mortgage implies a transfer of the mortgagor's interest in the property, whereas in the present case there has been merely a pledge and a pledge has not the same significance.

For the reasons indicated the appeal will be allowed with costs here and below.

Where on a conviction for murder the Sessions Judge sentenced an accused to transportation for life on the ground that the guilt was proved only by circumstantial evidence, though strong,

Held, that it matters not how an accused's guilt is established whether by the testimony of eye-witnesses or by the testimony of combined circumstances provided that it is established beyond all reasonable doubt. The measure of proof must be the same in either case.

The High Court can enhance the sentence to one of death as the lower Court had manifestly failed in its duty to impose the only possible sentence.

Appeal against the order dated 2nd July, 1940, of the Court of Session of the Guntur division in Sessions Case No. 22 of 1940 and Case taken up in revision by the High Court calling on the accused in Guntur Division Sessions Case No. 22 of 1940 to show cause why the sentence passed on him should not be enhanced.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Mockett, J.—The appellant has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Guntur of the murder of a little girl one Seetharamamma. The trial Court imposed a sentence of transportation for life and the learned Judge who perused the judgment of the trial Court ordered the issue of a notice to the prisoner to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced to a sentence of death.

Mockett, J.

[After dealing with the evidence His Lordship concludes.]

In our view the guilt of the accused has been proved beyond any shadow of doubt and we have no reason to suppose that the evidence for the prosecution is other than true.

This appeal will therefore be dismissed.

In considering the question whether the sentence should be enhanced, it is well to remember that the appellant has been convicted of the murder of a little girl whom he was proved to have taken from her house for reasons which have been shown to be false. He was never intending to take her to her grandfather. The moment the girl's mother heard of his supposed intention she was surprised. She states she wondered why after the quarrel between herself and the wife of the accused, the accused should take her daughter away without her permission because he remembered that when P. W. 1 left the house that day there was no question. The accused never asked her permission to take her daughter so far away as Tekkallapad nine miles distance. We cannot doubt therefore that this murder was premeditated and deliberate. Why exactly it was perpetrated is known only to the appellant. The learned Judge dealt with the question of sentence as follows:

"As to the punishment since the guilt of the accused has been proved by strong circumstantial evidence this is not a case calling for capital punishment. I therefore sentence him to transportation for life."

That reason namely that the conviction was based on circumstantial evidence has been in innumerable cases condemned by this High Court. It was condemned in 1914 by Ayling and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ., in *Muniyandi v. Emperor*¹, in 1921 by Ayling and Krishnan, JJ., in *Public Prosecutor v. Paramandi*² and again in 1929 condemned by Waller and Krishnan Pandalai, JJ., in *Chava Indramma v. Emperor*³. There is thus ample authority for so self-evident a proposition. It must surely be obvious that it matters not how an accused's guilt is established whether by the testimony of eye-witnesses or by the testimony of combined circumstances provided that it is established beyond all reasonable doubt and the measure of proof must be the same in either case. Our attention has been drawn to some decisions the effect of which is as stated in the headnote in Gunduthalayan, In re⁴:

"Where on a conviction for murder the Sessions Court awarded a sentence lesser than death, the High Court will not enhance the sentence, unless it is satisfied that on the evidence in the case the sentence of death is the only possible sentence which could have been passed by the Sessions Court."

As on a conviction for murder the law provides for an alternative sentence we have no doubt that when using the phrase

1. (1915) M.W.N. 34.

4. (1929) 58 M.L.J. 490; I.L.R. 53 Mad. 585.

'the only possible sentence' the Court intended to express the view that it was only in cases in which the lower Court had manifestly failed in its duty that the High Court would impose the sentence of death. As stated by Waller, J., in *Chava Indramma v. Emperor*¹, because the lower Court had failed in its duty there was no reason why the High Court should do the same. In this case we consider that the trial Court's duty was to impose the sentence of death. There must be cases in which that is manifestly so and perhaps as good an example as can be given is the case of the deliberate murder of a small child for purposes of robbery or any other purpose such as this case. No doubt examples can be multiplied but such an example may be mentioned. For reasons which are wholly unsupportable and which Mr. Vepa did not attempt to support the learned Judge has passed the lesser sentence. There are no other reasons justifying such a course. It is our duty to pass a sentence of death.

We therefore enhance the sentence of transportation for life to a sentence of death and direct that the accused be hanged by the neck until he be dead.

Held, if electricity had been used only for lighting the temple and its approaches the Devasthanam will be entitled to exemption. As the power-house was, however, used for supplying electricity to shops and a hotel yielding a profit it was liable to assessment to property-tax. The property set apart for public purpose may or may not be used for the purpose. But to claim exemption from taxation it should not be used for any other purpose.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on 21st. August, 1940, the Court (Venkataramana Rao, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the Municipal Council, Palni, is entitled to levy property-tax in respect of the electric power-house installed by the Sri Dandayuthapani Devasthanam at the foot of the Palni Andavar Hill on which the shrine of Dandayuthapani is situate. The Devasthanam claims exemption under S. 83 of the District Municipalities Act on the ground that it is a place set apart for public worship and is actually used for such worship. The learned District Munsif took the view that the said power-house was not set apart for public worship and that the electric energy from the said power-house was being utilised for lighting, not only the temple, but also certain shops and a coffee hotel which have been leased out by the Devasthanam authorities to strangers and therefore no exemption can be claimed under S. 83 of the Act. An appeal was preferred against this decision by the Devasthanam and the learned Subordinate Judge before deciding the appeal called for a finding as to whether the Palni Andavar Hill including the temple or only the latter is a place set apart for public worship. The learned District Munsif submitted the finding that the hill itself, and not merely the temple must be held to be a place set apart for public worship. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted this finding and held that though the electric energy generated from the power-house was also being supplied to light a coffee hotel and some fruit stalls on the top of the hill, they were intended to further public worship as fruit is presented by pilgrims to the deity and, incidentally to add to the amenities of pilgrims and therefore, the power-house was set apart for public worship and was being so used. Against this decision the Municipal Council has preferred this appeal.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri who appears for the Municipality contends that the learned Judge has misconstrued S. 83 of the District Municipalities Act. The Palni Andavar Hill bore S. No. 811 and comprised 129 acres 67 cents. Under the Municipal Town Survey in 1896 S. No. 811 was split up into several numbers and the hill alone was given S. No. 862 wherein the power-house is now situate. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri is not able to challenge the finding that S. No. 862 at any rate is a place set apart for public worship. Still the question arises whether the plaintiff can claim exemption in respect of the power-house. The learned Subordinate Judge in arriving at the conclusion which he did, relied on *The Municipal Council, Srirangam v. The Srirangam Devasthanam*¹, which took the view that if a certain place was set apart for public worship, any portion of that place, though not actually used for public worship, would be exempt from taxation. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri canvasses this position and argues that in order that exemption may be claimed under that section, it is not enough that a certain area is set apart for public worship but no portion of the area should be used for any other purpose than public worship and if any portion of that area is used for purposes other than public worship, the Municipality will be entitled to levy the tax. In this case it is admitted that the electric energy is also supplied to light a coffee hotel from which the Municipality derives income. Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar contends that the electric energy generated in the power-house is mainly used for lighting the temple and for facilitating public worship and that the fact that incidentally some income is derived by letting a portion of the place to a coffee hotel would not make the place any the less a place actually used for public worship. S. 83 of the District Municipalities Act so far as it is relevant for the purposes of this case runs thus:

"The following buildings and lands shall be exempt from the property tax: (a) places set apart for public worship and either actually so used or used for no other purpose....."

Two conditions are required in order to claim exemption from property-tax on the ground that a certain place is used for public worship, namely, (1) the place must be one which has been set apart for public worship; and (2) (a) it must either be actually so used; (b) or used for no other purpose. The place need not be one where worship is actually carried on but it may be a place which is used in aid of or for facilitating public worship. It cannot be denied that lighting the temple and the hill is necessary for facilitating public worship. It may therefore be said that the place where the electrical energy is generated for the purpose of lighting the temple and the hill is a place actually used for public worship. But the question still remains whether the place must be exclusively used for the said purpose. The context indicates, and there is a good deal of force in the argument of Mr. Venkatarama Sastri, that the place must be exclusively used for that purpose and if any portion of the place is used for purposes other than public worship it cannot be said to be a place actually used for public worship. Though as was held by K. S. Menon, J., the word 'or' in S. 83 is disjunctive still the words 'used for no other purpose' throw light on the interpretation of the words 'actually so used'. In my opinion the decision in *The Municipal Council, Srirangam v. The Srirangam Devasthanam*¹ requires re-consideration. If I differ from that decision there will be two conflicting decisions and it is very undesirable, especially in the case of a taxing statute, that there should be this uncertainty. I therefore think it desirable that this second appeal should be decided by a Bench.

This second appeal came on for final hearing this day* before the Bench.

Leach, C. J.

The Chief Justice.—The Municipal Council of Palni has assessed to the property-tax leviable under S. 81 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, a power-house belonging to the Sri Dandayuthapani Devasthanam. The power-house is situate at the foot of the Palni Andavar Hill and within the municipal limits. The trustees objected on the ground that this building was exempt from taxation by reason of the provisions of S. 83 (1) (a) of the Act. The property having been assessed to this tax and the tax having been paid, the trustees instituted a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Palni for the recovery of the amount. The District Munsif found against the plaintiff and dismissed the suit, but on appeal his decision was reversed and the suit was decreed. The Municipal Council now appeals to this Court.

It is common ground that the whole hill was set apart for religious purposes. On the top of the hill is a famous temple which is approached by means of a long flight of steps. At the top of the hill there are also shops and a hotel which supply the needs of the pilgrims who visit the temple. In 1929, the trustees built the power-house and installed electric plant for the purpose of lighting the way up to the temple and the temple itself. Later on, they supplied electricity to the shop-keepers and the hotel-keeper for which the trustees charged profitable rates. The fact that electricity was supplied to the shops and to the hotel led the Municipal Council to assess the power-house to the property-tax. If the power-house is to be exempt from this tax, the building must come within the purview of S. 83 (1) (a) because there is no other section in the Act which can relieve the trustees from the obligation of paying the property-tax.

1. (1936) M W N. 1088.

* 19th September, 1940.

S. 83 (1) reads as follows:

"The following buildings and lands shall be exempt from the property-tax—

(a) place set apart for public worship and either actually so used or used for no other purpose, choultries, buildings used for educational purposes, including hostels, public buildings and places used for the charitable purpose, of sheltering the destitute or animals, libraries and play-grounds which are open to the public and such ancient monuments protected under the Ancient Monuments Preservation Act, 1904, or parts thereof as are not used as residential quarters or as public offices."

It is not necessary to go beyond the words "places set apart for public worship and either actually so used or used for no other purpose", as it is clear that the power-house is not a building of the nature of any of those subsequently mentioned. In our opinion, the words "places set apart for public worship and either actually so used or used for no other purpose" read with the opening words of the section mean that there shall be exemption for places set apart for public worship and used for that purpose and for places set apart for public worship, but not actually in use. If a place is used for a purpose other than public worship, the place does not fall within the exemption, even though the intention was that it should be used for public worship. It has been suggested that the use of the word 'or' instead of 'and' makes a difference. It does make a difference, but not the difference suggested. If the word were 'and' and not 'or' there would only be exemption when a place was set apart for public worship and actually used for that purpose, but as a result of using the word 'or' there is exemption when the place has been set apart for public worship, but is not actually in use. The drafting leaves much to be desired, but it is obvious that the intention is to exempt buildings which are intended for religious purposes and are not being used for secular purposes.

What is the position here? The hill has been set apart for public worship and it cannot be disputed that if this power-house were merely used for lighting the temple and the approach to it the power-house would be exempted from taxation. But, inasmuch as the power-house, which stands on a part of the hill, is being used for commercial purposes as well as purposes of public worship, the conditions of the exemption are not fulfilled. The Municipal authorities are not suggesting that because a part of the hill, namely, the site of the power-house, is being used for other purposes the whole hill and everything erected thereon should be deemed to be taken out of the section. Their case is merely confined to the power-house and we consider that it is well founded.

In the course of arguments two decisions of this Court were referred to, namely, *The Municipal Council, Srirangam v. The Srirangam Devasthanam*¹ and *The Municipal Council of Tirupati v. Sree Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu*². The first case certainly supports the trustees, but we consider that it was wrongly decided. The second case is not really in point. In *The Municipal Council, Srirangam v. The Srirangam Devasthanam*¹, the council wished to assess to property-tax certain shops within the Srirangam temple. The learned Judge (K. S. Menon, J.) considered that as the word 'or' and not the word 'and' was used in S. 83 (1) (a), the shops were not taxable. We have said sufficient to indicate that in our opinion this argument cannot be accepted and that the decision of K. S. Menon, J., ought not to be followed. In *The Municipal Council of Tirupati v. Sree Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu*², the question was whether buildings used for stabling Devasthanam horses which were employed in carrying drums in temple processions or allowed for the use of pilgrims to whom honour was shown by the Mahant were exempt from the property-tax. It was held that they were exempt. This decision is not open to criticism, because the buildings were used for purposes connected with worship in a public place. If the power-house with which this appeal is concerned were merely used for lighting the approach to the temple and the temple itself, there would, as I have already indicated, be no doubt, that the Municipality would not be entitled to levy the tax. But the powerhouse is being used for commercial as well as religious purposes and this brings it within the taxing section.

The appeal will be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs here and in the two Courts below.

Act (Punjab Act VIII of 1925) the mosque and land adjacent thereto were included as belonging to the Sikh Gurdwara. Among the claims preferred was one dated 16th March, 1928, by the Anjuman Islamia of the Punjab "on behalf of the Muhammadans" claiming that the land and the property were dedicated for a mosque and did not belong to the Gurdwara. The Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, on 20th January, 1930, held, that the Anjuman's case failed by reason of adverse possession and previous decisions. The claim of certain mahants that the property was their private property was also rejected. After the dismissal of an appeal by the latter claimant to the High Court on 19th October, 1934, the property and building were given into the custody of the managers of the Gurdwara. On the night of 7th July, 1935, the mosque was demolished by the Sikhs. On 30th October, 1935, the present suit was filed against the Sikh Committee in management praying for (i) a declaration that the building was a mosque in which the plaintiffs and all followers of Islam had a right to worship; (ii) an injunction restraining any improper use of the building and any interference with the plaintiffs' right of worship; and (iii) a mandatory injunction to reconstruct the building. There was no prayer for possession of the property or ejectment of the defendants. The "mosque" itself was made the first plaintiff suing by a next friend and some of the other plaintiffs were minors or women. Both the trial Court and the High Court on appeal dismissed the suit. On further appeal to the Judicial Committee, Held, (i) Mahomedan Law is applicable to Muslim religious institutions only in so far as it has not been modified by legislation and the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) is applicable to immovables made wakf though the ownership in such property is said to be in God.

(ii) Muslim law is not the common law of India but is under legislative enactments applied by British Indian Courts to certain matters and to certain persons as part of the law of the land which the Courts administer as being within their own knowledge and competence. It is the duty of the Courts themselves to interpret the law and to apply it and not to depend on the opinion of witnesses however learned they may be. Only on foreign law opinions of experts are allowed to be admitted.

Observations of Sulaiman, J., in Asis Bano v. Muhammad Ibrahim Husain, (1925) I.L.R. 47 All. 823, adopted.

(iii) Suits cannot be brought by or against Muslim institutions like a mosque, as artificial persons in the British Indian Courts.

(iv) The property in question having been possessed by the Sikhs adversely to the wakf and to all interests thereunder for more than twelve years, the right of the mutawali to possession for the purposes of the wakf came to an end under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act and the title derived under the dedication from the settlor or wakif became extinct under S. 28. The individual character of the right to go to a mosque for worship matters nothing when the land is no longer wakf, and is no ground for holding that a person born long after the property has become irrecoverable can enforce partly or wholly the ancient dedication. The rights of the worshippers stand or fall with the character of the property and do not continue apart from their right to have the property recovered for the wakf and applied to its purposes. Notice of the rights of individual beneficiaries does not modify the effect under the Limitation Act of possession adverse to the wakf.

(v) The suit is also barred on the general principles of res judicata, by the decision in the suit of 1855 and also under S. 37 of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act by the decision of the tribunal rejecting the petition of the Anjuman Islamia.

(vi) There is always a presumption that change of Sovereignty would not affect private rights to property.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN.—Before 1935 there had stood for many years to the south of what is now called the Naulakha Bazaar, in the city of Lahore, a structure having three domes and five arches, which had been built as a mosque (masjid) and which retained, notwithstanding considerable disrepair, sufficient of its original character to suggest, or even to proclaim, its original purpose. It had a projecting niche (mehrab) in the centre of the west wall such as is used in mosques as the place from which the imam leads the prayers. Its dedication is no longer in dispute, having been established as of the year 1134 A.H. or 1722 A.D. by the production and proof of a deed of dedication executed by one Falak Beg Khan. By this deed, Sheikh Din Mohammad and his descendants were appointed mutawalis. The deed speaks of a school, a well and an orchard as being among the appurtenances of the mosque and gives the total area of the dedicated property as three kanals and fifteen marlas; but it is not now necessary to ascertain with precision the limits of the original curtilage.

No less well established than the dedication is the fact that from about 1762 A.D. the building, together with the courtyard, well and adjacent land, has been in the occupation and possession of Sikhs. The occupation of Lahore by the "Bhangi Sardars" in 1762 was the commencement of Sikh power in this part of India. Sikh rule continued under Ranjit Singh, who in 1799, established himself by force of arms as the local ruler. It ended only in 1849, ten years after the death of Ranjit Singh, when the Punjab as a result of the second Sikh war became part of British India by annexation. At some time during the Sikh domination, land adjacent to the mosque building (but to the north of what is now the Naulakha Bazaar) became the site of a Sikh shrine (gurdwara) and the tomb of a Sikh leader named Bhai Taru Singh situated thereon was held in reverence. The land, which in 1722 had been dedicated to the purposes of a mosque, came to be held and occupied by the managers and custodians of the Sikh institution and the mosque building was used by them. Until about 50 years ago, part of the building was used for the worship of the Granth Sahib or holy book of the Sikhs. Other parts have been used for secular purposes being let out to tenants, or used for storing chaff (bhusa) or holding rubbish.

By a tradition which can not be ignored (though their Lordships are thankful to be free of any duty to investigate its truth) the land adjacent to the building was regarded by the Sikhs as a place of martyrs (shahid ganj), it being commonly held among them that Bhai Taru Singh had on this spot suffered for his religion at the hands of Muslim rulers and that many others including women and children had been executed here. Thus communal feelings have long been in a state of tension as between Muslims and Sikhs with respect to this masjid shahid ganj. Its history after 1760 is summarized in the trial Judge's finding that "this mosque has not been used as a place of worship by Muslims since it came into Sikh possession and control;" in the Chief Justice's statement that "there has been a complete denial to the Muslims of all their rights;" and in the language of Bhide, J., that:

"It is scarcely likely that the Mahomedans would have been allowed to have access to the building for any purpose whatever during this period (1760 to 1853)."

These findings are not in any way blunted by the consideration that a pious mutawali might properly have let parts of the waqf property to tenants appropriating the rents to the purposes of the waqf. The possession of the Sikhs has been hostile not merely to the claim of other persons to the office of mutawali of this mosque, but hostile to the waqf itself and all interests thereunder. On the other hand it is true that the building has been frequently and indeed has been generally referred to as a mosque by those who have had its custody as well as by others and that it retained to the end the outward appearance of a mosque.

In 1849, at the time of the British annexation, the mosque building and the property which had been dedicated therewith were in the possession of certain Sikhs, mahants of the gurdwara. It is unnecessary to decide whether they held it under a revenue-free grant made to them by the Sikh authorities as it is certain that they held it and used it for their own purposes and for the purposes of the gurdwara as already described. The facts are made plain by the action taken to recover the property for the purposes of Islam soon after Sikh authority had given place to British. A criminal case brought in 1850 by one Nur Ahmad claiming to be mutawali and proceedings in the Settlement Department, brought by him in 1853, came to nothing as he had been long out of possession. A civil suit with a like object was brought and dismissed in 1853. On 25th June, 1855, yet another suit by Nur Ahmad was brought in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, Lahore, against the Sikhs in possession of the property: it was dismissed by that officer on 14th November, 1855, by the Commissioner on 9th April, 1856 and on further appeal by the Judicial Commissioner on 17th June, 1856.

In 1925 the Sikh Gurdwaras Act (Punjab Act 8 of 1925) was passed for the purpose of ascertaining what Sikh shrines were in existence and what property they owned; and of vesting the management of such shrines in certain committees (and other bodies). This step had become necessary to bring to an end disturbances which had been caused by disagreement between different schools or sects among the Sikhs. On 22nd December, 1927, by a Government notification the old mosque building and land adjacent thereto was included as belonging to the Sikh gurdwara "Shahid Ganj Bhai Taru Singh." Seventeen claims were made by various petitioners to have rights therein. One dated 8th March, 1928, was by Mahant Harnam Singh and others to the effect that the property belonged to them personally and not to the institution of which they were the head. Another dated 16th March, 1928, was by the Anjuman Islamia of the Punjab "on behalf of the Mahomedans" claiming that the land and property were dedicated for a mosque and did not belong to the gurdwara.

Both sets of claimants failed before the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal which decided on 20th January, 1930, that the mahants' possession had been held on account of the gurdwara and that the Anjuman's case failed by reason of adverse possession and previous decisions. No appeal was brought by the Anjuman from the latter decision but against the former an appeal brought by the mahants was dismissed by the High Court on 19th October, 1934. In the result the property and building were given into the custody of the defendants and on the night of 7th July, 1935, the building was suddenly demolished by or with the connivance of its Sikh custodians under the influence of communal ill-feeling. Riots and disorder ensued and much resentment was felt and expressed by the Muslims.

The plaint in the present suit was filed on 30th October, 1935, in the Court of the District Judge, Lahore, against the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee, and the Committee of Management for the Notified Sikh Gurdwaras at Lahore—the authorities who were in possession of the disputed property as being property belonging to the gurdwara. It contained no claim for possession of the property or ejectment of the defendants or that the property be handed over to the hereditary mutawali. The relief claimed was a declaration that the building was a mosque in which the plaintiffs and all followers of Islam had a right to worship, an injunction restraining any improper use of the building and any interference with the plaintiffs' right of worship: and a mandatory injunction to reconstruct the building. The learned District Judge dismissed the suit by decree dated 25th May, 1936, and an appeal to the High Court was dismissed on 26th January, 1938,¹ by Young, C.J. and Bhide, J., Din Mohammad, J., dissenting.

By the Punjab Laws Act, 1872, the Mahomedan law is made applicable to the religious institutions of the Muslims but only in so far as it has not been modified by legislation. Thus, the Limitation Act, 1908, applies though limitation is not an original principle of Mahomedan law. The length of time which had elapsed since the property claimed had been lost to Muslims and the repeated failure of the attempts previously made to recover it for their use and benefit, were manifest objections to the grant of the relief sought. To assist in surmounting these difficulties, the suit was brought by eighteen plaintiffs of which the first was the mosque itself suing by a next friend—not the waqf or institution or charity in some abstract sense but the mosque in the sense of the site and building. The declaration sought was "that plaintiff 1 was and is the site of a waqf mosque," the injunction sought was that the defendants "should not use plaintiff 1 for any purpose which may be contrary to its sanctity" and the mandatory injunction asked for was "to reconstruct that portion of plaintiff 1 that is, the mosque which they demolished."

The choice of this curious form of suit was motivated apparently by a notion that if the mosque could be made out to be a "juristic person" this would assist to establish that a mosque remains a mosque for ever, that limitation cannot be applied to it, that it is not property but an owner of property. A second feature of the suit as framed is that a number of the plaintiffs were minors or women. This was thought to be of some assistance to the plaintiffs in meeting objections taken under the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925, to the competence of the suit, but it was also relied upon before the Board in argument as relevant to the general question of limitation.

A third feature of the suit has reference to the method of trial, the learned District Judge having been persuaded that the mode by which a British Indian Court ascertains the Mahomedan law is by taking evidence. The authority of Sulaiman, J., to the contrary, *Asiz Banu v. Muhammad Ibrahim Husain*¹, was cited to him but he wrongly considered that S. 49, Evidence Act, was applicable to the ascertainment of the law. He seems also to have relied on the old practice of obtaining the opinions of pandits on questions of Hindu law and the reference made thereto in *Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sethupathy*². No great harm, as it happened, was done by the admission of this class of evidence as the witnesses made reference to authoritative texts in a short and sensible manner.

But it would not be tolerable that a Hindu or a Muslim in a British Indian Court should be put to the expense of proving by expert witnesses the legal principles applicable to his case and it would introduce great confusion into the practice of the Courts if decisions upon Hindu or Muslim law were to depend on the evidence given in a particular case, the credibility of the expert witnesses and so forth. The Muslim law is not the common law of India; British India has no common law in the sense of law applicable prima facie to everyone unless it be in the statutory Codes, e. g., Contract Act, Transfer of Property Act. But the Muslim law is under legislative enactments applied by British Indian Courts to certain classes of matters and to certain classes of people as part of the law of the land which the Courts administer as being within their own knowledge and competence. The system of "expert advisers" (muf-tis, maulvis or in the case of Hindu law pandits) had its day, but has long been abandoned, though the opinions given by such advisers may still be cited from the reports. Custom, in variance of the general law, is matter of evidence but not the law itself. Their Lordships desire to adopt the observations of Sulaiman, J., in the case referred to:

"It is the duty of the Courts themselves to interpret the law of the land and to apply it and not to depend on the opinion of witnesses however learned they may be. It would be dangerous to delegate their duty to witnesses produced by either party. Foreign law, on the other hand, is a question of fact with which Courts in British India are not supposed to be conversant. Opinions of experts on foreign law are therefore allowed to be admitted."

It has been made clear by learned counsel for the appellants that the plaintiffs do not now claim any relief extending beyond the actual site of the mosque building. The first question to be asked with reference to this immovable property is the question: In whom was the title at the date when the sovereignty of this part of India passed to the British in 1849? It may have been open to the British on the ground of conquest or otherwise to annul rights of private property at the time of annexation as indeed they did in Oudh after 1857. But nothing of the sort was done so far as regards the property now in dispute. There is nothing in the Punjab Laws Act or in any other Act authorising the British Indian Courts to uproot titles acquired prior to the annexation by applying to them a law which did not then obtain as the law of the land. There is every presumption in favour of the proposition that a change of sovereignty would not affect private rights to property: cf. *West Rand Central Gold Mining Co. v. Rex*¹.

Who then immediately prior to the British annexation was the local sovereign of Lahore? What law was applicable in that State to the present case? Who was recognized by the local sovereign or other authority as owner of the property now indispute? These matters do not appear to their Lordships to have received sufficient attention in the present case. The plaintiffs would seem to have ignored them. It is idle to call upon the Courts to apply Mahomedan law to events taking place between 1762 and 1849 without first establishing that this law was at that time the law of the land recognized and enforced as such. If it be assumed, for example, that the property in dispute was by general law or by special decree or by revenue-free (muafi) grant vested in the Sikh gurdwara according to the law prevailing under the Sikh rulers, the case made by the plaintiffs becomes irrelevant. It is not necessary to say whether it has been shown that Ranjit Singh took great interest in the gurdwara and continued endowments made to it by the Bhanji Sardars as was held by Hilton, J. (20th January, 1930) presiding over the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal. Nor is it necessary that it should now be decided whether the Sikh mahants held this property for the Sikh Gurdwara under a muafi grant from the Sikh rulers. It was for the plaintiffs to establish the true position as at the date of annexation. Since the Sikh mahants had held possession for a very long time under the Sikh State there is a heavy burden on the plaintiffs to displace the presumption that the mahants' possession was in accordance with the law of the time and place. There is an obvious lack of reality in any statement of the legal position which would arise assuming that from 1760 down to 1935 the ownership of this property was governed by the Mahomedan law as modified by the Limitation Act, 1908.

The rules of limitation which apply to a suit are the rules in force at the date of institution of the suit, limitation being a matter of procedure. It cannot be doubted that the Limitation Act of 1908 applies to immovables made wakf notwithstanding that the ownership in such property is said, in accordance with the doctrine of the two disciples, to be in God. Thus in *Abdur Rahim v. Narayan Das Aurora*¹, it was expressly stated by Lord Sumner delivering the judgment of the Board:

"The property in respect of which a wakf is created by the settlor is not merely charged with such several trusts as he may declare, while remaining his property and in his hands. It is in very deed 'God's acre' and this is the basis of the settled rule that such property as is held in wakf is inalienable except for the purposes of the wakf."

Yet in that very case it was taken as plain that if Art. 134, Limitation Act, did not apply to a wakf the claim to recover possession of wakf property was governed either by Art. 142 or Art. 144.

The rule of Hanafi law that wakf property is taken to have ceased to be held in human ownership is applied to all such property even if the wakf be a wakf-al-al-aulad or wakf for the benefit of descendants. The result of the rule is not that the property cannot in any circumstances be alienated but that it can only be alienated for proper purposes and save as provided by the terms of the endowment with the leave of the Court. In some circumstances it can even be taken in execution. In the particular case of a mosque, like that of a graveyard, the wakf property is intended to be used in specie for a certain purpose—not to be let or cultivated so that the income may be applied to the purposes of the wakf. This and other facts make some case for a contention that such property cannot be alienated on any conditions or with any sanction, though their Lordships are by no means satisfied to affirm so wide a proposition. But the Limitation Act is not dealing with the competence of alienations at Mahomedan law. It provides a rule of procedure whereby British Indian Courts do not enforce rights after a certain time, with the result that certain rights come to an end. It is impossible to read into the modern Limitation Acts any exception for property made wakf for the purposes of a mosque whether the purpose be merely to provide money for the upkeep and conduct of a mosque or to provide a site and building for the purpose. While their Lordships have every sympathy with a religious sentiment which would ascribe sanctity and inviolability to a place of worship, they cannot under the Limitation Act accept the contentions that such a building cannot be possessed adversely to the wakf, or that it is not so possessed so long as it is referred to as ‘mosque’ or unless the building is razed to the ground or loses the appearance which reveals its original purpose.

The argument that the land and buildings of a mosque are not property at all because they are a “juristic person” involves a number of misconceptions. It is wholly inconsistent with many decisions whereby a worshipper or the mutawali has been permitted to maintain a suit to recover the land and buildings for the purposes of the wakf by ejectment of a trespasser. Such suits had previously been entertained by Indian Courts in the case of this very building. The learned District Judge in the course of his able and careful judgment noted that the defendants were not pressing any objection to the constitution of the suit on the ground that the mosque could not sue by a next friend. He went on to say:

"It is proved beyond doubt that mosques can and do hold property. There is ample authority for the proposition that a Hindu idol is a juristic person and it seems proper to hold that on the same principle a mosque as an institution should be considered as a juristic person. It was actually so held in *Jindu Ram v. Hussain Bakhsh*¹, and later in *Maula Bakhsh v. Hafisuddin*²."

That there should be any supposed analogy between the position in law of a building dedicated as a place of prayer for Muslims and the individual deities of the Hindu religion is a matter of some surprise to their Lordships. The question whether a British Indian Court will recognize a mosque as having a locus standi in judicio is a question of procedure. In British India the Courts do not follow the Mahomedan law in matters of procedure (cf. *Jafri Begum v. Amir Muhammad Khan*³, per Mahmood, J.) any more than they apply the Mahomedan criminal law or the ancient Mahomedan rules of evidence. At the same time the procedure of the Courts in applying Hindu or Mahomedan law has to be appropriate to the laws which they apply. Thus the procedure in India takes account necessarily of the polytheistic and other features of the Hindu religion and recognizes certain doctrines of Hindu law as essential thereto, for example that an idol may be the owner of property. The procedure of our Courts allows for a suit in the name of an idol or deity though the right of suit is really in the shebait, *Jagadindra Nath v. Hemanta Kumari*⁴.

Very considerable difficulties attend these doctrines—in particular as regards the distinction, if any, proper to be made between the deity and the image: cf. *Bhupati Nath v. Ram Lal*⁵, Golap Chandra Sarkar Sastri's Hindu Law, Edn. 7, pp. 865, et seq. But there has never been any doubt that the property of a Hindu religious endowment—including a thakurbari—is subject to the law of limitation: *Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das*⁶, and Isvar Bhuvaneshwari Thakurani v. Braja

*Nath Dei*¹. From these considerations special to Hindu law no general licence can be derived for the invention of fictitious persons. It is as true in law as in other spheres "entia non sunt multiplicanda praeter necessitatem." The decisions recognizing a mosque as a "juristic person" appear to be confined to the Punjab: *Shankar Das v. Said Ahmad*², *Jindu Ram v. Hussain Bakhsh*³, *Maula Bukhsh v. Hafisuddin*⁴. In none of these cases was a mosque party to the suit, and in none except perhaps the last is the fictitious personality attributed to the mosque as a matter of decision. But so far as they go these cases support the recognition as a fictitious person of a mosque as an institution—apparently hypostatizing an abstraction. This, as the learned Chief Justice in the present case has pointed out, is very different from conferring personality upon a building so as to deprive it of its character as immovable property.

It is not necessary in the present case to decide whether in any circumstances or for any purpose a Muslim institution can be regarded in law as a "juristic person." The recognition of an artificial person is not to be justified merely as a ready means of making enactments—well or ill-expressed—work conveniently. It does not seem to be required merely to give an extended meaning to the word "person" as it appears in the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1905, or in the definition of 'gift' contained in S. 122, T. P. Act. It is far from clear that it is required in order that property may be devoted effectively to charitable purposes without the appointment of a trustee in the sense of the English law. It would seem more reasonable to uphold a gift, if made directly to a mosque and not by way of wakf, as having been made to the mutawalli than to do so by inventing an artificial person in addition to the mutawalli (and to God in whom the ownership of the mosque is placed by the theory of the law).

Their Lordships do not understand that in this respect a mosque is thought to be in any unique position according to the authorities on Mahomedan law. "A gift may be made to a mosque or other institution" (Tyabji's Principles of Mahomedan Law, Edition 2, 1919, p. 401, cf. Abdur Rahim's Muhammadan Jurisprudence, p. 218). A gift can be made to a mad-rasah in like manner as to a masjid. The right of suit by the mutawali or other manager or by any person entitled to a benefit (whether individually or as a member of the public or merely in common with certain other persons) seems hitherto to have been found sufficient for the purpose of maintaining Mahomedan endowments. At best the institution is but a caput mortuum, and some human agency is always required to take delivery of property and to apply it to the intended purposes. Their Lordships, with all respect to the High Court of Lahore, must not be taken as deciding that a "juristic personality" may be extended for any purpose to Muslim institutions generally or to mosques in particular. On this general question they reserve their opinion; but they think it right to decide the specific question which arises in the present case and hold that suits cannot competently be brought by or against such institutions as artificial persons in the British Indian Courts.

The property now in question having been possessed by Sikhs adversely to the wakf and to all interests thereunder for more than 12 years, the right of the mutawali to possession for the purposes of the wakf came to an end under Art. 144, Limitation Act, and the title derived under the dedication from the settlor or wakif became extinct under S. 28. The property was no longer for any of the purposes of British Indian Courts, "a property of God by the advantage of it resulting to his creatures." The main contention on the part of the appellants is that the right of any Moslem to use a mosque for purposes of devotion is an individual right like the right to use a private road, *Jawahra v. Akbar Husain*¹, that the infant plaintiffs, though born a hundred years after the building had been possessed by Sikhs, had a right to resort to it for purposes of prayer; that they were not really obstructed in the exercise of their rights till 1935 when the building was demolished; and that in any case in view of their infancy the Limitation Act does not prevent their suing to enforce their individual right to go upon the property. This argument must be rejected. The right of a Muslim worshipper may be regarded as an individual right, but what is the nature of the right? It is not a sort of easement in gross, but an element in the general right of a beneficiary to have the wakf property recovered by its proper custodians and applied to its proper purpose. Such an individual may, if he sues in time, procure the ejectment of a trespasser and have the property delivered into the possession of the mutawali or of some other person for the purposes of the wakf. As a beneficiary of the religious endowment such a plaintiff can enforce its conditions and obtain the benefits thereunder to which he may be entitled. But if the title conferred by the settlor has come to an end by reason that for the statutory period no one has sued to eject a person possessing adversely to the wakf and every interest thereunder the rights of all beneficiaries have gone: the land cannot be recovered by or for the mutawali and the terms of the endowment can no longer be enforced: *cf. Chidambaranatha Thambiran v. Nallasiva Mudaliar*¹. The individual character of the right to go to a mosque for worship matters nothing when the land is no longer wakf and is no ground for holding that a person born long after the property has become irrecoverable can enforce partly or wholly the ancient dedication.

This seems to their Lordships a sufficient answer to the argument that the only article of the Limitation Act which affects the right of the plaintiffs (other than plaintiff 1) is Art. 120. Under that Article any plaintiff who had been of age for more than six years before the date of the suit would be barred as he has clearly been excluded from resort to the building for purposes of prayer. But the true answer to these plaintiffs and to the minor plaintiffs is that the rights of the worshippers stand or fall with the wakf character of the property and do not continue apart from their right to have the property recovered for the wakf and applied to its purposes. As the law stands, notice of the rights of individual beneficiaries does not modify the effect under the Limitation Act of possession adverse to the wakf. Were the law otherwise the effect of limitation upon charitable endowments would be either negligible or absurd. The plaintiffs may, if they choose, refrain from asking that the land be recovered for the wakf but they do not alter the character of their right by deserting the logic of their case.

It remains to say that in the opinion of their Lordships the present suit is concluded on the general principle of res judicata by the decision in the suit of 1855 and also under S. 37, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925, by the decision of the Tribunal (20th January, 1930) rejecting the petition of the Anjuman Islamia. The mere circumstance that the plaintiffs have chosen not to seek recovery of the land in dispute but ask for relief in the forms of declaration and injunction does not avail to enable them to litigate again the claim made by Nur Ahmad as mutawali to recover the property for the purposes of the wakf. The ground of the decision of 1855 does not affect the question of res judicata. S. 37 of the Act of 1925 is as follows:

"Except as provided in this Act no Court shall pass any order or grant any decree or execute wholly or partly, any order or decree, if the effect of such order, decree or execution would be inconsistent with any decision of a tribunal, or any order passed on appeal therefrom, under the provisions of this part."

It is sufficiently plain that if the present suit were to succeed the effect of the decree would necessarily be inconsistent with the decision of the tribunal rejecting the petition of the Anjuman Islamia. Unless therefore the case can be brought within the opening words of S. 37—"except as provided in this Act"—that section is fatal to the claim. Their Lordships are of opinion that the words of the exception have no reference to the provisions of cl. (ii) of S. 30 which states the circumstances under which a suit shall be tried notwithstanding that the claim was not put forward before the Tribunal. S. 37 assumes that a Civil Court has before it a competent suit in which one party or another would but for the section be entitled to a certain order or decree, and it provides that such order or decree shall not be made if the effect of it would be inconsistent with any decision of a Tribunal. The words of exception with which S. 37 opens are doubtless accounted for by the provisions of S. 34 authorizing appeals to the High Court. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellants will pay the respondents' costs.

Where a later promissory note in renewal of an earlier one is found to have been insufficiently stamped and hence inadmissible in evidence the prior promissory note cannot be said to have been merged in or wiped off by the later document.

The powers conferred on Courts under O. 1, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, are wide enough to enable the Court to make such an order.

The suit as framed was certainly based on the promissory note; but either as a matter of history as to how the promissory note came into existence or with the object of disclosing as to how the cause of action had accrued, it was stated in paras. 3 and 4 of the plaint that there were prior dealings between the parties and the last promissory note on which the suit was based, was only executed in renewal of a prior promissory note of 1930.

Narayana
v.
Gurramma.

The only questions that have been debated before me are whether the application made by the fourth defendant for transposition should not have been allowed and whether the fourth defendant should not have been permitted to continue the suit on the basis of the original cause of action as the promissory note which formed the basis of the present suit was found to be insufficiently stamped. After hearing learned counsel for the parties, I have no hesitation in holding that the fourth defendant should have been ordered to be transposed as a plaintiff and having regard to the allegations made in paras. 3 and 4 of the plaint, the suit should have been treated as one on the original cause of action. If the later promissory note of 1930 was found to have been insufficiently stamped, as it was in the present case and hence inadmissible in evidence, the prior promissory note of 1927 cannot be said to have been merged in or wiped off by the later document. It is true that the present suit was brought by the plaintiff on account of the endorsement made on the later promissory note of 1930 and an application was made on behalf of the fourth defendant only when it was discovered that the later promissory note was inadmissible in evidence, but the Court could certainly make an order, after it was moved to do so under the wholesome provisions of O. 1, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, when it was found to be necessary for the final adjudication of the questions involved in the suit and would have in any case avoided multiplicity of proceedings. Even if the rules of procedure had not permitted such a course, the Court would have been fully justified—nay perhaps obliged, to invent a procedure as long as it was not prohibited either expressly or impliedly from doing so and to grant relief. But this question does not fortunately arise in this case as the powers conferred on Courts under O. 1, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, are wide and the section has to be liberally construed.

Learned counsel for the respondent relied on two decisions one of which is reported in *Krishnaji Shivaji Pawar v. Hanmaraddi bin Mallaraddi Maidur*¹. This case has no application because the father who made a petition to be impleaded in that suit was not on the record and it was considered that a substitution of the name of the right plaintiff could only be ordered if the suit was not at the date of such substitution barred by limitation. This is not the case here. The second decision which is reported in Lakshmi Narasimhachariar v. Mangammal, has also no application as the petition for amendment was made in that case for the first time in appeal while here the petition was made in the trial Court before the suit was disposed of.

I would in the circumstances accept the revision and order the fourth defendant to be transposed as a plaintiff and permit him to amend the plaint so as to base the cause of action on the original promissory note of 1927 with such other facts as may entitle him to bring his suit within time. There is no reason however why the fourth defendant should not be put on terms and pay the costs to the other side. The application has been obviously made as the promissory note was found to be insufficiently stamped. Bearing in mind however that the defendants who had executed the promissory note were to blame themselves for this defect, I would order the fourth defendant to pay a sum of Rs. 25 only as costs to the defendants 1 to 3. So far as this revision is concerned, the parties will bear their own costs.

A sale deed in respect of land was executed in favour of X who paid the price to the vendor. But before the registration of the sale deed X entered into an agreement to have the land conveyed by the vendor to Y direct. Accordingly Y paid some cash and executed a promissory note to X. A registered sale deed in favour of Y was duly executed by the vendor at the instance of X and the next day Y executed a mortgage in favour of X to cover the amount due on the promissory note of the previous day. An application to scale down this debt was resisted on the ground that this was a liability excluded by S. 10 (2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938.

Held, X was not the seller of the property for he had no interest which he could convey. The title remained with the vendor at the time of the transfer to Y and though the vendor was under an obligation to X that obligation did not have the effect of vesting any title in X who cannot therefore be regarded as a seller and the amount due from Y will not carry any charge such as is provided for in S. 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wadsworth, J.—The petitioner in this revision petition entered into an agreement with one Seshayya to purchase land, paid the price and got a sale deed executed. When he was about to get the sale deed registered he was approached by the first respondent who himself wanted a conveyance of the same land. There was an agreement whereby the petitioner undertook to get the land conveyed by Seshayya to the first respondent and on that date the first respondent executed in favour of the petitioner a promissory note and paid a certain sum in cash. On the same day at the instance of the petitioner Seshayya executed a registered sale deed in favour of the first respondent and on the following day 11th August, 1921, the first respondent executed a mortgage to the petitioner to cover the amount embodied in the promissory note of the previous day. In 1937 the petitioner sued on his mortgage and on 6th November, 1937, he got a preliminary decree which was followed on 11th March, 1938, by a final decree for Rs. 2,575 and odd.

When Madras Act IV of 1938 came into force the first respondent applied under S. 19 of that Act to scale down the decree debt. The application was resisted on the ground that the debt in question was a liability for which a charge is provided under S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act and therefore by the operation of S. 10 (2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938 was excluded from the scaling down provisions. This plea was rejected by the lower Court and the petitioner seeks to revise that order. The only question therefore is whether the liability covered by the mortgage is one in respect of which a charge is provided under S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act.

S. 55 (4) (b) provides that the seller is entitled to a charge upon the property in the hands of the buyer for the amount of the purchase money or any part thereof remaining unpaid. Is the petitioner in this case a seller and is the money in respect of which this mortgage was executed, unpaid purchase money in the hands of the buyer? It seems to us quite clear that the answer to both these questions must be in the negative. The petitioner was not the seller of the property for he had no interest which he could convey. The title remained with Seshayya at the time of the transfer to the first respondent and though Seshayya was under an obligation to the petitioner, that obligation did not have the effect of vesting any title in the petitioner. So much follows from S. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act which lays down that a contract for the sale of immovable property does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property.

The petitioner relies on two decisions of the Privy Council. *Zamindar of Polavaram v. Maharajah of Pittapur*¹ was a case in which property had been purchased at Court auction by the decree-holder and 30 days had elapsed from the sale without objection, at which juncture there was a compromise whereby the sale was confirmed except with reference to one item which was to be left in the hands of the judgment-debtor subject to a payment representing the value thereof. The payment was not made. The mortgage by which it was secured was found to be unenforceable, and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that there was a charge in favour of the decree-holder purchaser for the amount due under the agreement of compromise as unpaid purchase price. Their Lordships held that the title of the decree-holder purchaser was complete although there had been no formal order of confirmation and that the recording of the compromise was a sufficient conveyance of that title to the judgment-debtor without the formalities of confirmation of the sale and a separate conveyance by the Court auction purchaser. That decision proceeded on the special facts of the case which have little or no similarity to the facts before us. It cannot be authority for the view that whenever a person who has no title but merely a right to a conveyance of title, arranges with his prospective vendor for a conveyance in favour of the third party, the rights of a seller subsist in favour of the person who has arranged for the conveyance but has not actually conveyed anything. The other decision is of *Kalyanasundaram Pillai v. Karuppa Mooppanar*¹, which is merely to the effect that when there is a gift deed registered after an interval of time, title passes as on the date of the execution deed and not as on the date of its registration. This again is no authority for the view that when there is a deed not made effective by registration it conveys title. Clearly there was no title in the petitioner which he could convey to the first respondent. He cannot therefore be regarded as a seller and the amount due from the first respondent to him will not carry any charge such as is provided in S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act.

The decision of the lower Court is correct and the petition is dismissed with costs.

Debtors cannot make more than one effective application for the conciliation of a particular debt under the provisions of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act. The meaning of the provision in the second part of S. 7 is that an applicant can make a fresh application (where his application has been rejected on formal grounds); the absence of any similar provision in S. 9 (when an application for conciliation has been dismissed on the merits) is conclusive that in such a case no fresh application can be made. Stay could not be ordered more than once under S. 25 in respect of the same debt.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Negapatam dated 13th December, 1939, in E. A. No. 995 of 1939 in S. C. S. No. 267 of 1937.

R. Somasundaram for Petitioners.

K. S. Desikan for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order passed by the learned District Munsif of Negapatam on the 13th December, 1939, in E. A. No. 995 of 1939 in Small Cause Suit No. 267 of 1937. The applicant before the District Munsif was the decree-holder in the small cause suit. The petitioners in this case are the defendants in the small cause suit. The facts which it is necessary to mention are that while execution proceedings were pending, the judgment-debtors filed a petition O. P. No. 61 of 1939 before the Debt Conciliation Board, Negapatam, and in consequence of that the sale of the judgment-debtors' property which had already been proclaimed was stopped on the 1st May, 1939, presumably under the provisions of S. 25 of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936. The judgment-debtors' petition O. P. No. 61 of 1939 was dismissed by the Debt Conciliation Board on the 28th June, 1939. After that dismissal the decree-holder proceeded with execution and the sale of the properties was fixed to take place on the 6th November, 1939. The learned District Munsif says that the judgment-debtors' pleader applied for an adjournment of the sale on the ground that he wanted time to raise the decree amount and accordingly the sale was adjourned to the 27th November, 1939. Instead of paying up the decree amount the judgment-debtors proceeded to file O. P. No. 197 of 1939 before the Debt Conciliation Board for the conciliation of the same debt and the Board intimated to the District Munsif that such a petition had been presented and requested the District Munsif to stay the sale proceedings in execution of the small cause decree. The decree-holder thereupon applied to the District Munsif to direct the sale advertised for the 4th December, 1939, to go on disregarding the fact that the judgment-debtors had filed an application before the Debt Conciliation Board. The decree-holder contended that the Debt Conciliation Board had no jurisdiction to stay the sale. The learned District Munsif after considering such authorities as there are, decided to follow a decision of Mr. Justice Stodart reported in Ellappa Chettiar, In re¹. The learned Judge held in that case that a judgment-debtor is not entitled to obtain a stay under S. 25 of Madras Act XI of 1936 in any individual suit or proceeding more than once. It was argued before the learned Judge that upon a second application to the Conciliation Board the judgment-debtors were again entitled to stay. The learned Judge thought that to admit such a proposition would lead to absurd results. There was nothing he said in the Act to prevent a debtor filing one application after another and if under S. 25 of the Act he could obtain stay of the suit or other proceedings as long as an application was pending before the Board he would be enabled to put his opponent to great trouble and inconvenience suffering little if any expense himself. That in the opinion of the learned Judge was not the intention of the law. This it may be said is the only direct decision upon this point so far pronounced.

Natesa

In the case reported in *Hirannayya v. Thippeswami*², Mr. Justice Stodart and myself held that S. 25 of the Act was mandatory and that a sale in execution held in violation of the provisions of S. 25 is void. Learned counsel for the petitioners relies strongly upon this decision which he says has been followed by other learned Judges. It does not however deal with the question with which this petition is concerned, namely, whether the Court of the District Munsif of Negapatam can be compelled to stay execution proceedings in respect of the same judgment debt more than once under the provisions of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act. Learned counsel for the petitioners has referred me to a case decided by Mr. Justice Wadsworth in *Roopchand Merlacha v. Sha Motaji Mekanaji*³, but that case also does not touch the point now in issue. That was a case in which an application under S. 4 of Madras Act XI of 1936 had been rejected under the provisions of S. 7 of the Act. The second part of S. 7 says:

"The rejection of an application under this section shall not preclude the applicant from making a fresh application."

The learned Judge therefore held that although the statutory bar imposed by S. 25 of the Act would cease to operate immediately upon the dismissal of an application under S. 7 yet upon a re-presentation of the application under the authority given by the second part of that section the bar would again come into operation. That is not the case with which I have to deal. Learned counsel has also referred me to a case decided by Mr. Justice Horwill and reported at *Sundaralingam v. Venkataramanayya*¹. In that case the learned Judge held that even though an application might be frivolous or vexatious nevertheless under S. 25 of the Act the Court would be bound to stop all further proceedings in connection with the debt which was being considered by the Conciliation Board. There is no question there of successive petitions by the same debtor in respect of the same debt.

After considering the matter as well as I am able I find myself practically in agreement with Mr. Justice Stodart. It has been pointed out to me by Mr. Desikan for the respondent that the wording of S. 4, sub-S. (1) is:

"A debtor may make an application for the settlement of his debts....."

He has also pointed out that when an application is dismissed under S. 9 of the Act there is no provision in S. 9 or elsewhere in the Act similar to the second part of S. 7. S. 7 provides for the rejection of an application if it does not comply with any of the requirements mentioned in Ss. 5 and 6. These requirements are all matters of a formal nature, and the meaning of the provision in the second part of S. 7 appears to be that if an application has to be rejected merely for want of some formality, the debtor should not be precluded from bringing a fresh application. The absence of any provision for a fresh application with regard to the same debt when the application has been dismissed on the merits would seem to indicate that in such cases the Legislature did not contemplate a fresh application by the same debtor. To suppose that a debtor may go on without limit making successive applications for the settlement of his debts under S. 4 and thereby causing an executing Court to stay its hand under S. 25 is equivalent to supposing that the Legislature intended to put it in the power of a debtor to postpone execution of a decree against him to the Greek Kalends.

I cannot believe that the Legislature intended debtors to be allowed to make more than one effective application for the conciliation of a particular debt under the provisions of this Act. The presence of the provision in S. 7 by which an applicant can make a fresh application if his application has been rejected on formal grounds and the absence of any similar provision in S. 9 appear to me to be conclusive on this point. For this reason I think the learned District Munsif was right in following the decision of Mr. Justice Stodart and in holding that stay could not be ordered more than once under S. 25 in respect of the same debt.

This petition is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Sastri, J.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—These revision petitions arise out of applications made by defendants 1 and 2 (judgment-debtors and respondents in C. R. P. No. 691 of 1939) under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act for scaling down the compromise decree in O. S. No. 1 of 1936 on the file of the lower Court. The suit was brought on a mortgage bond executed on 16th July, 1923, for the payment of Rs. 9,000 in eighteen instalments of Rs. 500 each payable every eight months commencing from 7th February, 1924. The decree-holder (the petitioner in C. R. P. No. 691 of 1939) started a kuri-chit as stake-holder with twenty subscribers each contributing Rs. 10,000 in twenty equal instalments on the terms and conditions set out in what is called the kurivari. According to these terms, the amounts collected from the subscribers in respect of each instalment was to be put up for auction among them and allotted to the bidder who offered the highest discount, such discount being distributed among the subscribers as 'profits'. The defendants 1 and 2 who had together subscribed for one 'ticket' in the kuri-chit on behalf of their tarwad were the successful bidders at the second auction held on 7th June, 1923, and they were paid Rs. 5,800 being the balance after deducting the discount of Rs. 4,200 offered by them. Having already paid two instalments, they executed the mortgage bond (Ex. I) according to the stipulation in the kurivari for the due payment of the remaining eighteen instalments amounting to Rs. 9,000. The respondents thereafter paid ten instalments but failed to pay the remaining eight instalments, and O. S. No. 1 of 1936 was brought for the recovery of these instalments with interest amounting in all to Rs. 7,640. The defendants 1 and 2 admitted the execution of the bond and pleaded that the interest claimed was penal while the other members of the tarwad, who got themselves impleaded as defendants 3 to 6 contested the liability of the tarwad for the debt. The suit was eventually compromised, the plaintiff agreeing to accept payment of a smaller sum in five instalments in full satisfaction of the claim and defendants 3 to 6 withdrawing their opposition and agreeing to pay the sum personally, and the decree now sought to be scaled down was passed on 14th April, 1936, in accordance with the compromise.

Various contentions were raised on either side in the Court below on a consideration of which the Court held that (1) the applicants for relief were 'agriculturists' as defined in the Act; (2) that S. 4 (f) of the Act had no application as the judgment-debtors could not, in any view, be regarded as trustees; (3) that the provisions of the Act were applicable to compromise decrees also; and (4) that for purposes of scaling down the decree the liability of the debtors must be taken to have accrued on the several dates fixed for payment of the instalments in the security bond, Ex. I. On these findings, the learned Judge directed the decree to be scaled down in accordance with S. 8 of the Act in respect of the instalments which fell due prior to the 1st October, 1932, and in accordance with S. 9 in respect of the instalments which fell due subsequently. From this decision, the decree-holder has preferred C. R. P. No. 691 of 1939 contending that the compromise decree cannot properly be regarded as a renewal of the liability under Ex. I, and the first defendant has preferred C. R. P. No. 257 of 1939 raising the contention that in respect of the entire amount decreed, the liability of the debtors must be held to have been incurred on the date of the security bond and not on the dates fixed for payment of the instalments thereunder, and that the entire debt has therefore to be scaled down under S. 8 of the Act.

As regards C. R. P. No. 691 of 1939, we have already held in *Ramamurthi v. Sitaramayya*¹, that the mere fact that a decree is based on a compromise does not exempt it from the operation of Act IV of 1938, that to the extent to which the compromise can be said to be a renewal of the debt upon which the suit was laid, it is liable to be scaled down with reference to the principal sums originally or subsequently advanced. Learned counsel for the decree-holder, however, laid stress on the observation at p. 296:

"It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to decide what would be the position in a more complicated case when the compromise is the result of mutual concessions and advantages which together make up an agreement from which it would be extremely difficult to disentangle that part which is a renewal of the original debt," and urged that having regard to the concessions made on either side under the compromise here in question, the liability thereunder could not be regarded as a renewal in whole or in part of the liability under the security bond. We are unable to agree with this contention. The observation relied on had no reference to cases like the one now before us involving an abatement of a portion of the claim by one side and the withdrawal of opposition and offer of additional security for the due payment of the reduced claim by the other, but envisaged cases, where, for instance, by some property being offered and accepted in full or part satisfaction of the claim, it becomes impossible to regard the transaction in any sense as a renewal of the original debt. No such difficulty arises here, and the decision referred to above applies equally to the facts of the present case.

Learned counsel next urged that, in any case, the liability of the defendants 3 to 6 who did not join in the execution of Ex. I could be taken to have arisen only on the date of the compromise decree, namely, 14th April, 1936, and should accordingly be scaled down under S. 9 of the Act. It is true that these defendants disputed the liability of their shares in the tarwad properties mortgaged under Ex. I, but the compromise obviously proceeds on the basis that Ex. I was binding on the entire properties mortgaged thereunder as contended by the decree-holder. In such circumstances, the correct view, it seems to us, is to regard the compromise as acknowledging and defining the antecedent liability of these defendants in respect of their shares of the properties mortgaged under Ex. I—see *Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain*¹. In this view, the liability of these defendants was, according to the decision in

*Perianna v. Sellappa*¹, a debt liable to be scaled down under the Act and must further be regarded as renewed or, at all events, included in a fresh document, under the compromise on which the decree was based—see our decision in *Doraikannu Odayar v. Veerasami Padayachi*².

Kannan
Nambiar
v.
Subramania Pattar.
Patanjali
Sastri, J.

Turning now to C. R. P. No. 257 of 1939, the only question we have to decide relates to the date on which the liability of the judgment-debtors can properly be said to have been incurred. The contention for the decree-holder is that the security bond (Ex. I) only affirmed the pre-existing liability of the judgment-debtors as subscribers to the kuri-chit to pay their subscriptions according to the instalments fixed in the kurivari, and did not change the character of such liability, that the liability to pay the future instalments of subscription could not be deemed to have been incurred before such instalments fell due, and that the position under the security bond was in no way different. Learned counsel for the judgment-debtors, on the other hand, contends that whatever might be the position with regard to the liability of a subscriber to pay the instalments of his subscription to the kuri before he bids for and receives the amount at an auction, he can thereafter be regarded only as a borrower of the sum received less the instalments already paid by him, undertaking to repay the loan in instalments that still remain to be paid, and the liability under the security bond which he executes for the due payment of such instalments is a debitum in presenti solvendum in futuro, incurred on the date of the bond itself. The question is one of some difficulty not the least part of which arises from the somewhat conflicting decisions dealing with these peculiar kuri transactions which are so common in some parts of this Presidency. On the whole, however, we are of opinion that the judgment-debtor's contention is supported by a preponderance of authority and must be accepted. It will be observed that the kurivari makes a distinction between the liability of a subscriber who has bid for and received the amount at an auction and the liability of one who has not yet been thus benefited. In the latter case, para. 5 provides that if the instalment is not paid on the date fixed for an auction, the subscriber will have no right to participate in the discount realised from the successful bidder at the auction, and, further, if it remains unpaid even after one month from the date of the auction, the stake-holder shall be at liberty to remove the name of the subscriber and admit another in his place, while, in the former, if the benefited subscriber commits default in paying any instalment remaining due, it is provided that "the money due for such instalment or the entire amount due for all the future instalments till the termination of the chit fund, shall be realised by the stake-holder together with profit at eight annas per day from the date of default", a provision which also finds a place in the security bond Ex. I. It is thus clear that the liability of a successful bidder at an auction held under the kuri is placed on a different footing from that of an ordinary subscriber, and it will not therefore be correct to say that the security bond merely affirmed the pre-existing liability to pay the instalments of the contribution to the kuri fund.

It has been repeatedly held by this Court—and it must now be taken as settled—that a provision in a kuri entitling the stake-holder to recover from the benefited subscriber the amount of all the instalments immediately on default in the payment of any one of them is not penal and is enforceable, although there has been some difference of opinion as to the ground on which such decision is to be based. In *Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Govindasami Odayar*¹, the learned Judges seem to have viewed the advance to the successful bidder at an auction as a loan to him, for they observed:

"The subscription at each of these intermediate instalments was available for loan to the successful bidder at the auction, which was held every six months, the successful bidder being the bidder who offered to accept the lowest proportion of the total subscription."

Relying upon this and the earlier decisions of this Court, Ananthakrishna Aiyar, J., held in *Kunju Nair v. Narayanan Nair*², that the transaction was in essence a loan of a common fund to one member and that it was "a debt in praesenti to be paid by particular instalments if certain conditions be duly observed, but otherwise to be paid up at once irrespective of the benefit of time and instalments."

The learned Judge pointed out that it had been so viewed in this Presidency since *Kamakshi Achari v. Appavu Pillai*³. In *Subbiah v. Shanmugham*⁴, Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., held that a provision for acceleration of payment of the future instalments was penal and unenforceable as there was no debitum in praesenti in such cases, but this decision was reversed on appeal in *Subbiah Pillai v. Muthiah Pillai*¹.

Kannan
v.

Patanjali
Sastri, J.

In *Raghavan Pattar v. Arumugham*², another Bench took the view that the successful bidder at an auction was a purchaser of the sum, and the contract thus being one of sale and not of borrowing, no question of penalty could arise. They approved the decision of Ananthakrishna Aiyar, J., in *Kunju Nair v. Narayanan Nair*³, though it was based on a different ground. It is, however, worthy of note that even in this view the liability for the 'purchase money' must be held to have been incurred on the date of the security bond taken from the 'purchaser.'

The decree-holder strongly relied upon the decision in *Marudakonar v. Veerammal*⁴, as showing that there is no present debt in such cases until the instalments actually fall due. That was a case where the stake-holder assigned to the plaintiff the security bond executed by a successful bidder who had received the kuri fund at an auction. The kuri, however, had to be closed down owing to the inability of the subscribers to pay their subscriptions. In rejecting the contention of the plaintiff's counsel before this Court that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount due under the security bond as the assignee thereof, unaffected by the discontinuance of the kuri, as payments under the bond were not conditioned on its continuance, Varadachariar, J., observed:

"It seems to me only reasonable to hold that in cases like the present the security bond must be interpreted in the light of the rules, and the obligation undertaken by it is not repayment of the benefit already received—as if it were a debt—but the payment of future subscriptions. Whether the continuance of the chit was a condition precedent or not, will not depend merely on the terms of the bond but must be decided with reference to the surrounding circumstances, including the rules of the chit fund."

Though this passage strikes a somewhat different note as to the nature of the obligation undertaken by a successful bidder at an auction under a kuri chit, it cannot be said that the learned Judge was making a definite pronouncement on the question whether or not such obligation was a debitum in praesenti solvendum in futuro, as that question did not arise for consideration. All that the learned Judge had to consider was whether such a bond could be enforced without reference to the obligation of the stake-holder under the rules of the kuri to continue it to the end. Mockett, J., the other learned Judge who took part in the decision made no reference to this aspect.

1. (1933) 65 M.L.J. 302.

2. (1934) 68 M.L.J. 283.

3. (1932) 65 M.L.J. 29.

We are therefore of opinion that in view of the several decisions of this Court referred to above, the liability of the judgment-debtors must be considered to have been incurred on the date of the mortgage bond, namely, July 16, 1923, and the decree must be scaled down under S. 8 of the Act. The same view was taken by one of us in C. R. P. No. 1483 of 1939.

In the result, C. R. P. No. 257 of 1939 is allowed and the order of the Court below will be modified accordingly. The petitioner will have the costs of this revision petition. C. R. P. No. 691 of 1939 is dismissed with costs. The case will be remanded to the Court below for disposal in the light of this judgment.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 3 (is), Proviso D—Total payments of land revenue by jenmi exceeding Rs. 500 only if other payments as ryotwari pattadar are included—Proviso D applicability of.

Where the total payments by a jenmi to the government (including amounts paid as ryotwari pattadar) on account of land revenue exceeds Rs. 500, Proviso D to S. 3 (ii) is applicable and excludes him from being an agriculturist under the Act.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of South Kanara, dated 3rd day of January, 1940 and passed in A. S. No. 419 of 1939—R. I. A. No. 846 of 1939 in O. S. No. 1069 of 1935, D. M. C., Kasaragod.

K. Kuttikrishna Menon for Appellant.

O. T. G. Nambiar for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—It is a plausible argument that as ryotwari pattadars are entitled to the benefits of this Act no matter how much land revenue they pay, a jenmi who is also a ryotwari pattadar and who in the former capacity pays less than Rs. 500 should also be so entitled.

But there are no words in the proviso restricting the land revenue payable by a jenmi to the revenue payable only on the land so held by him and taking the clause in its plain meaning we have here a jenmi whose total payments to Government on account of land revenue exceed Rs. 500. I cannot therefore hold that the Courts below have wrongly construed the proviso. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of respondent 2.

Under S. 15 of Act IV of 1938 only arrears of rent payable to a jenmi or intermediary could be deemed to be discharged by depositing the rent for faslis 1346 and 1347 but the liability to an assignee of such arrears of rent could not be scaled down. The words 'jenmi' and 'intermediary' in S. 3 (k) and (j) of the Malabar Tenancy Act do not include an assignee of the right to collect rent though under the corresponding provision S. 3 (5) of the Madras Estates Land Act the term 'landholder' does include any person entitled to collect rent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Wadsworth, J.—This Civil Revision Petition raises the question whether S. 15 of the Madras Act IV of 1938 can be invoked in favour of a tenant whose rent is payable to an assignee of rent from a Malabar jenmi. The petitioners here were the applicants in the Court below and they were the judgment-debtors. The suit was brought by the first plaintiff as assignee of the rent for the period from 1929-30 to 1936-37, his assignor being the second plaintiff, the jenmi. The assignment was dated 17th February, 1937, and there was a decree dated 9th October, 1939, in favour of the first plaintiff, the assignee, alone. Defendants applied under Ss. 19 and 15 of Act IV of 1938 to scale down this decree.

S. 15 (1) of the Act begins as follows:

"All rent payable by an agriculturist to a landholder or an under-tenure-holder under the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, or to a jenmi or intermediary under the Malabar Tenancy Act, 1929, which has accrued for the faisli year 1345 and prior faislis and which is outstanding on the date of the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to be discharged."

Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon for the petitioners has contended that the effect of these words is to give to the tenant a right to scale down the rent, whether or not it is due to a jenmi or intermediary on the date of the commencement of the Act, provided that in its origin it partakes of the character of rent due to a jenmi or intermediary. It is quite clear that the definitions of the words "jenmi" and "intermediary" in Ss. 3 (k) and 3 (j) of the Malabar Tenancy Act do not include an assignee of the right to collect rents, though under the corresponding provision, S. 3 (5) of the Madras Estates Land Act, the term "landholder" does include a person entitled to collect rent. It is not very apparent why an assignee of the right to collect rent in Malabar should have been treated differently from an assignee of the right to collect rent in other parts of the Presidency: but the fact remains that the terms "jenmi" and "intermediary" used in this section and in the succeeding Ss. 16 and 17 are not extended by any words in the Act so as to include an assignee of the right to collect rents, and the definitions in the Malabar Tenancy Act do not cover such an assignee. It seems to us apparent that, reading S. 15 (1) in its plain terms, there must be rent outstanding on the date of the commencement of the Act, which rent must be, as on that date, payable by an agriculturist to a landholder or an under-tenure-holder or to a jenmi or intermediary. If these conditions are not satisfied, the section had no application. It may be that the omission of any provision relating to an assignee of a right to collect rent in the case of a Malabar tenancy is a lacuna due to the inadvertence of those who drafted the Act: but, even so, the remedy is the amendment of the Act. Dealing with an expropriatory measure we cannot extend the language so as to expropriate more persons than those actually comprised within its terms. In the present case it seems to us clear that as the arrears with which we are concerned were not outstanding as rent payable to a jenmi or intermediary on the date of the commencement of the Act, the petitioners are not entitled to the benefit of S. 15 of the Act.

We may add that to read the term "jenmi" or "intermediary" in S. 15 (1) as including an assignee of the right to collect rent would lead to the difficulty that under S. 15 (4) there is no provision for notice to such an assignee, and in Ss. 16 and 17 the same terms are repeated with reference to safeguarding of certain rights of the landholder and with reference to limitation, which also have not been extended to cover an assignee.

In the result, therefore, we dismiss the Civil Revision Petition with costs.

The Chief Justice.—This matter raises the question whether a Debt Conciliation Board is entitled to give a certificate under S. 18 of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936, when it will be bound eventually to dismiss under S. 17 of the Act a petition for the settlement of the petitioner's debts. The respondent applied to the Debt Conciliation Board, Namakkal, for a settlement of his debts under the provisions of S. 4 of the Act. His only creditor was the petitioner in these proceedings, who has security. The petitioner appeared before the Board and informed it that he was not prepared to agree to a settlement of his debt. Before there can be a settlement of debts under the Act creditors representing more than fifty per cent. of the total amount of debts must agree to a settlement. If no amicable settlement is arrived at within twelve months from the date of the application the Board is bound by virtue of the provisions of S. 17 to dismiss the application. In this case the Board did not at once dismiss the petition as the result of the petitioner's objection, but proceeded to consider what would be the amount payable by the respondent to the petitioner if the debt was scaled down in accordance with the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. The Board had no power to scale down the debt, as was pointed out by this Court in *Jonnalagadda Ramaswami Chetty v. Ramachandra Rao*¹. The Board did not, however, purport to scale down the debt. It merely considered what would be the figure arrived at if the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act were applied. It found that on this basis the debt due to the petitioner would be reduced to Rs. 1,954. Thereupon the respondent expressed his willingness to pay this amount with interest at 6½ per cent. from 1st October, 1937, till the date of payment. The Board considered that this was a reasonable offer and granted a certificate under S. 18 (1) of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act. The petitioner says that the Board had no power to pass this order and therefore it should be quashed.

Sub-S. (1) of S. 18 states that where, during the hearing of any application made under S. 4, any creditor refuses to agree to an amicable settlement, the Board shall, if it is of opinion that the debtor has made such creditor a fair offer which the creditor ought reasonably to accept, grant the debtor a certificate, in such form as may be prescribed in respect of the debts owed by him to the creditor. The effect of a certificate is that when a creditor sues in a Civil Court for the recovery of his debt the Court cannot allow the plaintiff any costs in the suit, or any interest on the debt after the date of the certificate in excess of simple interest at six per cent per annum on the principal amount due on the date of the certificate. This provision is contained in sub-S. (2). Rules have been framed under the Act and they contain the form of certificate to be given under S. 18 (1). The form reads as follows:

"This is to certify that during proceedings No. of under the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936, between (debtor) on the one hand and (creditor) on the other hand, for the settlement of an alleged debt of Rs. the said creditor has, in our opinion, refused a fair offer of settlement made by the said debtor, which the said creditor ought reasonably to have accepted.

2. The following particulars of the debt were furnished by the said creditor under S. 10 (1) of the Act."

Action under S. 18 does not depend on a majority of the creditors agreeing to a settlement of the debts owing to them. The opening words of sub-S. (1) of S. 18, namely, "Where, during the hearing of any application under S. 4" make it quite clear that the certificate can be granted during the pendency of the proceedings if a fair offer has been made by the debtor and has been refused by the creditor. The form of certificate given in the rules emphasizes this. The fact that the Board may have to dismiss a debtor's petition as the Board will have to do in this case, does not deprive it of the right of exercising its power of certifying that a reasonable offer has been refused. As the Board did not purport to scale down the debt under the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, but merely took into consideration the provisions of that Act in order to consider what would be a fair offer by the respondent, it cannot be said that it has acted contrary to or without jurisdiction or even contrary to law.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 19—Application under to appellate Court—If original matter—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 7, r. 10—Applicability.

An application under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938 for scaling down a decree passed by an appellate Court was dismissed on the ground that the application ought to have been presented in the Court of first instance. In revision Held, that the nature of an application under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act was akin to an original petition and therefore O. 7, r. 10 which applies to a plaint in a suit, applies equally to such an application by force of S. 141, Civil Procedure Code and the application ought to have been returned for presentation to the proper Court.

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition is filed against an order dismissing an application under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938 on the ground that it was presented in the wrong Court. The application was in fact presented to the appellate Court, whereas in accordance with the decision in *Rentala Gangaraju v. Bikkina Bulli Ramayya*¹, it should have been presented in the Court of First Instance. The decision upon which the lower Court proceeded took a view of the law which was by no means universally accepted before that decision appeared and it cannot be said that the applicant in applying to the Court which actually passed the decree which he desired to scale down was going contrary to the obvious meaning of the section under which his application was framed. It was only by reading S. 19 along with S. 20 that this Court arrived at the conclusion that the proper Court to receive an application under S. 19 was the Court of First Instance. We must therefore take it that the application to the appellate Court was one which, according to the applicant's view of the law, was bona fide presented in the proper Court though by reason of the subsequent decision it became apparent that his view of the law was wrong.

harayana
v.
Peddi
Naidu.

That being so, should the lower Court have dismissed his application or should it have returned the application for presentation in the proper Court? The question is whether O. 7, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, read with S. 141 applies to an application of this nature. There is a good deal of case-law on the applicability of S. 141, Civil Procedure Code. The cases mostly depend on the decision of the Privy Council in *Thakur Parshad v. Fakir-ul-lah*², where their Lordships decided that S. 647 of the old Code (corresponding to S. 141) does not apply to proceedings in execution. The reasoning of that decision is that an elaborate procedure is set forth in the Code itself for proceedings in execution and it would be surprising if the framers of the Code had intended to apply another procedure mostly unsuitable by saying in general terms that the procedure for suits should be followed as far as applicable. Then follows the following sentence:

"Their Lordships think that the proceedings spoken of in S. 647 include original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and so forth and do not include executions."

The decision in *Sarat Chandra Bose v. Bisweswar Mitra*³ and other decisions of a like nature have added to this obiter dictum of the Privy Council the word 'only' and have laid it down that S. 141 extends the procedure of the Code as far as

2 (1894) 5 M.L.J. 3; L.R. 22 I.A. 44; I.L.R. 17 All. 106 (P.C.).

3 (1926) I.L.R. 54 Cal. 405.

narayana
v.
Peddi

it can be made applicable only to original proceedings in the nature of suits, such as proceedings in probate, guardianship and so forth. This view has not been universally followed, for this Court has held in *Venkatanarasimha Rao v. Suryanarayana*¹, that O. 9, r. 9 read with S. 141 can be applied to an application for the restoration of a petition dismissed for default which petition itself was preferred under O. 9, r. 9. In *Venkatarama v. Marudachala*², this Court has held that by virtue of S. 141, O. 9, r. 5 can be applied to an application for a personal decree in a mortgage suit.

It seems to me, however, that it is unnecessary for me to decide whether or not S. 141 should be restricted to original proceedings more or less in the nature of suits; for I am of opinion that an application under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938 can be brought under this category. An application under S. 19 is not an application to amend a decree so as to bring it in accordance with the judgment; nor is it an application which can be said to be ancillary to the suit in which the decree was passed. It is in substance an application to enforce a new right created by a statute which came into force after the decree was passed. It is in no way ancillary to the decree but destructive of the decree; and though it may result in the amendment of the decree and the recording of satisfaction it is not, in my opinion, an application in the suit in which the decree was passed, but an entirely separate proceeding to enforce a new right quite distinct from the right declared in the original suit. In this view therefore, even adopting the strict view of S. 141 taken by the Calcutta High Court in *Sarat Chandra Bose v. Bisweswar Mitra*³, I am of opinion that S. 141, Civil Procedure Code, extends to such an application the procedure provided in this Code, including that laid down in O. 7, r. 10. It follows that the Court below wrongfully failed to exercise its jurisdiction to return this application for presentation* in the proper Court.

The revision petition is therefore allowed with costs and the application will be returned to the applicant by the lower Court for presentation in the Court having jurisdiction.

Even in respect of a sale of mortgaged properties after 1st October, 1937, it is not enough that the judgment-debtor is the owner of the mortgaged properties to entitle him to the benefit of Ss. 19 and 23 of the Act. It must be shown that at the date of his application the judgment-debtor was possessed of other lands to entitle him to be deemed an 'agriculturist' within the meaning of the Act.

The decree in question in both the petitions was passed on a mortgage executed by the defendants 1 to 3. The applicants in the Court below were the legal representatives of the first defendant together with the second and third defendants. The eighth defendant in the mortgage suit was impleaded as puisne mortgagee of items 3 to 9 and 12 out of the 13 items in the hypotheca. interested should be sold first and the other items subsequently in the same sale. The ninth defendant was impleaded in the mortgage suit on the ground that she claimed a charge for maintenance.

On 17th April, 1936, a receiver was appointed, and he continued in possession right up to the time of the sale. A preliminary decree was passed on 28th August, 1936, for a sum of Rs. 6,869 and odd. There was no personal remedy. After a final decree had been passed, a sale was held on 18th October, 1937. At this sale, 12 out of the 13 items of property were sold, and realised a sum of Rs. 4,900 and odd. Item 6 which is the family house was not sold. Part-satisfaction was recorded on 19th November, 1937. Act IV of 1938 came into force on 22nd March, 1938, and the present applications were filed in April, 1938. The only respondent impleaded was the plaintiff-decree-holder, who was also the purchaser at the sale. The only evidence as to the agriculturist status of the applicants appears to relate to the mortgage lands, and the objections seem to have been based on such irrelevant matters as the object for which the money was borrowed, the possession of the lands, etc. In the lower Court, it seems to have been assumed that, if the applicants had a saleable interest in agricultural lands at the time of the sale in October, 1937, they were agriculturists entitled to the benefits of Ss. 19 and 23 of the Act. The lower Court does not discuss the evidence on this part of the case at all, and it appears to me probable that the learned Judge failed to realise the importance of proof that the applicants were agriculturists at the time when they made their application.

S. 23 of the Act starts with reference to a sale on or after 1st October, 1937, of property in which an agriculturist had an interest, but it seems to me clearly to require in the later portion of the section that the applicant must be a judgment-debtor claiming to be an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act, and that the Court has to be satisfied "that the applicant is an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of this Act." These words seem to me to contemplate a state of affairs in which the applicant has a saleable interest in agricultural land at the time when he makes his application. The same words are found in S. 19, "any judgment-debtor who is an agriculturist." In the definition of the term "agriculturist" in S. 3, we find that he is a person who has a saleable interest. Whatever time is contemplated in this definition, it cannot well be anterior to the commencement of the Act. S. 7 also contemplates the scaling down of debts payable by an agriculturist at the commencement of the Act.

Kumara-

v.

S. 23 is really an extension of S. 7 in that it permits an agriculturist to attack a sale held in execution of a decree during the period when the Act was under consideration. But I am not prepared to hold, having regard to the words of this section, that this remedy is open to a person who is not an agriculturist at the time when he makes the application. This is a view of the law which does not appear to have been present in the mind of the Court below, and it may be that the applicants could have proved that they were agriculturists, having regard to the facts existing at the time of their application, even though, so far as their interest in the properties sold is concerned, it cannot be said that they had a saleable interest in those properties at the time when they applied to set aside the sale.

A further difficulty is based on the fact that the applicants took out notice only to the decree-holder-auction-purchaser. The proviso to S. 23 requires that there should be notice to the decree-holder, the auction-purchaser and other persons interested in such sale. The words "other persons interested in such sale" would not, apparently, include all persons who were parties to the suit. The intention appears to be that notice should go to all persons interested in upholding the sale. If there are judgment-debtors who are anxious that the sale should be set aside, they have the right to come in as applicants if they are agriculturists; they are not persons who are interested in upholding the sale.

But the position of the eighth defendant, the puisne mortgagee, seems rather dubious. It was alleged in the Court below that he was a non-agriculturist. I have not been able to find any evidence to this effect. If he was a non-agriculturist, it seems to follow, on the basis of the decision of the Bench to which I was a party, in *Ramier v. Srinivasiah*¹, that he is not entitled to the benefit of any scaling down of the decree which may result from the application of the agriculturist judgment-debtors. If so much is conceded, it follows that if the decree is scaled down on the application of the present applicants, the whole of the burden of the balance of the decree amount after the scaling down will be thrown on item 6, the only item not sold, which is one of the items in which the eighth defendant claims an interest. On such facts, if they be correct, it would appear that the eighth defendant is interested in upholding the sale, although he does not claim any title under the court-auction-purchaser. I am of opinion that, if the facts are as alleged, he should have been given notice before the sale was set aside; and, although S. 19 does not expressly require notice to a non-agriculturist judgment-debtor, it is, to my mind, obviously desirable in a case where the result of the application under S. 19 may be to increase the burden of another judgment-debtor, that he should have notice.

In the result, therefore, I allow both these petitions, and remit both the cases to the trial Court which will dispose of the matters afresh in the light of this judgment, after giving notice to the eighth defendant and after recording a finding on such fresh evidence as may be tendered on both sides on the question whether the applicants were agriculturists entitled to the benefits of the Act at the time when their applications were presented. Costs will abide the result.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870 as amended in Madras), Sch. I, Art. 1 and Sch. II, Art. 17-B—Suit on promissory notes—Defendants alleging notes to be executed on behalf of temple—Decrees passed against defendants personally—Second appeals preferred—Personal liability sought to be got rid of—Court-fee payable—Subject-matter whether incapable of valuation.

Three second appeals arose out of three suits on promissory notes in two of which the executants had simply executed the notes in their personal capacity while in the third though there was a reference to a trust in the body of the note the executants had not signed as trustees. In all the three suits the defendants were sued only in their personal capacity and decrees were passed rendering them personally liable. The defendants preferred second appeals and therein pleaded that as the debts were contracted for temple purposes they should not have been made personally liable and that the decrees should have been passed against them as trustees of the temple rendering only the temple properties in their hands liable for the decree debt.

Held, that if the appellants had been sued as trustees and a decree had been passed against them personally and also against the trust property in their hands and an appeal was preferred against the said decree on the ground that they could not be rendered liable personally in the sense that they could not be arrested in execution of the decree, it might be urged that it was not possible to estimate the liability they were seeking to get rid of; but here the appellants were seeking to get rid of their liability to the extent of both their person and property in respect of the amount decreed against them, and therefore it could not be said that the subject-matter of the appeals was incapable of valuation so as to permit court-fee being paid under Art 17-B of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act, as amended in Madras. Court-fee must therefore be paid ad valorem on the value of the decrees.

Connected second appeals against the judgments and decrees of the Court of the District Judge, Coimbatore, in A. S. Nos. 290 and 291 of 1937 and A. S. No. 174 of 1938.

The question as to the court-fee payable on the Memoranda of Second Appeals came up in the first instance before the Master who made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE.

This is a court-fee reference. The second appeals arise out of suits on three promissory notes, in two of which the executants have simply executed the promissory notes in their personal capacity and in the third they executed it as trustees of a temple.* In all the three suits the defendants have been sued on the promissory notes executed by them and only in their personal capacity a decree is sought. The suit temple was a party 13th defendant only in the third suit. The lower appellate Court granted a decree to the plaintiff in all the three suits and second appeals have been preferred by the defendants. Ordinarily it should be expected that where the defendants seek the vacation of the decrees against them, the value of the appeals must be the amount decreed against them. But the contention of the appellants is that the subject-matter of the appeals is incapable of valuation for the reason that the correctness of the amounts due under the promissory notes is not disputed, but that the defendants' grievance is that decrees have been passed against them personally, when decrees ought to have been passed against the trust, namely, the temple. It is contended that in such cases the intrinsic value of the decree is not the measure of the value of the appeals. Two decisions are cited before me, those reported in *Jagannath v. Laxmi Bai*¹ and *Bulaqi Das v. Lal Chand*². Those decisions differ from the present cases in the fact that in those cases the decree had been passed both personally against the executants of the documents and also against the properties in their hands as legal representatives. There it was held that where property in the hands of the judgment-debtors is sufficient to satisfy the decree it may not be possible to estimate the value of the personal liability and if it is to be valued, it has been observed, that must be the difference between the decree amount and the value of the property. But in this case, it is quite immaterial that the defendants say that there ought to be a decree against the trust. The trust is not a party to two of the three suits and no decree has been passed against the trust, namely, the temple. Therefore it is not a question of measuring the personal liability according to the decision above quoted. If the contention of the appellants' advocate is correct, then the first Court which came to the conclusion that the monies that had been borrowed under the promissory notes have been utilised for the temple must have passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff against the temple properties in the hands of these defendants as trustees thereof, but it has dismissed those suits for the obvious reason that the suits were brought by the plaintiffs as against the defendants personally, as executants of negotiable instruments and the plaintiffs were prepared to stand or fall by the allegations and the case with which they have come to Court. If the Court held that the plaintiff is not entitled to get a personal decree against the defendants, then it is not open to the Court where the temple is not a party and is not represented by anybody to pass a decree against the temple by making the temple properties liable. Therefore under those circumstances, I cannot accept the contention of the appellants that what is sought is only the transference of liability from the defendants against the temple and against the properties of the temple in the hands of the defendants.

I therefore hold that the objection of the appellant cannot be upheld. The office view is correct and the court-fee ad valorem ought to be paid.

On this Reference the matter came up for orders before the Court.

B. V. Viswanatha Aiyar for Appellants.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this reference is, what is the correct court-fee payable on the three memoranda of second appeals preferred against the decrees of the learned District Judge of Coimbatore in A. S. Nos. 290 and 291 of 1937 and 174 of 1938? The suits out of which these second appeals arise were brought on three promissory notes. The main defence was that the appellants were not liable on the notes as the amounts were borrowed for the benefit of Kannika Parameswari Amman Temple of Peria Nagamam by them as trustees thereof and that a decree ought to be passed against the properties of the said temple in their hands. The decision of the learned District Judge was that two of the promissory notes purported to be executed by them in their individual capacity and not as trustees on behalf of the said temple and though there was a reference to the trust in the body of the third promissory note, the executants did not sign the said note as trustees and therefore they were personally liable on all the three notes. The legal effect of this decision of the learned Judge is that the executants are not only liable to be arrested in execution of the decrees against them but also the properties they own and possess are liable to be proceeded against for the satisfaction of the said decrees. Thus they seek to get rid of their liability against their person and property to the extent of the amount that has been decreed against them. On these facts the learned Master took the view that an ad valorem court-fee has to be paid on the value mentioned in the memoranda of appeals, that is, the amount of the decrees which have been passed against them.

1. (1934) I.L.R. 59 Bom. 439,

2. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 865,

Bala-

It is contended by Mr. Viswanatha Aiyar, the learned counsel for the appellants, that the subject-matter of the appeals is incapable of valuation and that the correct court-fee has been paid under Art. 17-B of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act. He submits that he was not bound to pay the ad valorem court-fee because the appellants were not disputing the amount of liability but were only contending that they were not personally liable. He relied on *Jagannath v. Laxmi Bai*¹ and *Bulagi Das v. Lal Chand*² in support of his contention. Art. 17-B of the Second Schedule to the Court-Fees Act runs thus:

"Plaint or memorandum of appeal in every suit where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act."

The question therefore is, is it not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute in these appeals?

2. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 865.

Bala-

Before a subject-matter in dispute can be said to be incapable of valuation, it must be established that it is not even possible to state approximately what would be the money value of the liability which a person seeks to get rid of by the judicial decision, that is, by no possibility could it be stated approximately what would be the money value of the detriment that a person may suffer by reason of the adverse decision against him. What is really contended for in these appeals is that the appellants ought to have been made liable in the capacity of trustees in which case only the trust property in their hands could be held liable but they are sought to be made liable in their individual capacity which has the result of affecting their individual person and their individual property. As aforesaid, by the appeals they seek to get rid of their liability, to the extent of both their person and property in respect of the amount that has been decreed against them. The contention therefore that the subject-matter is incapable of valuation is unsustainable.

Mr. Viswanatha Aiyar relied very strongly on S. 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act which is to the following effect:

"An agent who signs his name to a promissory note without indicating thereon, that he signs as agent, or that he does not intend thereby to incur personal responsibility, is liable personally on the instrument, except to those who induced him to sign upon the belief that the principal only would be held liable."

He contends that one of the defences of the appellants was that the plaintiff was aware of the fact that the borrowing was made on behalf of the trust, that they were induced to sign the promissory notes in the belief that the temple only would be held liable and that if this defence is upheld in their favour, it would result in the passing of a decree against the trust property and not against them personally and what they are now seeking to do in these appeals is only to get rid of their personal liability. This contention does not appear to me to be sound. If the defence which they have raised is upheld, it would involve the dismissal of the appeal and not the passing of a decree against the trust property in their hands. Even assuming that a decree could be passed against the trust property in their hands, the decree in so far as it negatives their personal liability in that their person and personal property will not be proceeded against is a decree which will be passed in their favour not as trustees but in a different capacity and therefore it cannot be said that it is incapable of valuation. If the appellants had been sued as trustees and a decree had been passed against them personally and also against the trust property in their hands and an appeal was preferred against the said decree on the ground that they could not be rendered liable personally in the sense that they could not be arrested in execution of the decree, it may be urged that it is not possible to estimate the liability they are seeking to get rid of. But the case here is different and I do not propose to examine the soundness of this view. Both the cases on which Mr. Viswanatha Aiyar relied are distinguishable on the facts of those cases and it is not necessary to canvass the correctness or otherwise of those decisions. In *Jagannath v. Laxmi Bai*¹, a decree was passed against the defendant personally though he was sued as the heir of the original debtor. The defendant did not dispute the liability of the property which came into his hands after the death of the debtor but contended that he was not liable to be proceeded against in the sense that he could not be arrested in execution of the said decree nor the property which he owned and possessed, apart from the property which he inherited from the debtor, is liable to be proceeded against. Murphy, O.C.J., took the view that as the assets in that case were sufficient to enable the decree-holder to recover the full amount due, it was not possible to estimate the money value of the liability which would remain after the exhaustion of the decree-holder's remedy against the said assets. This case therefore is distinguishable from the present appeals. *Bulagi Das v. Lal Chand*², is also a similar case where a person admitted his liability in respect of his share in the joint family property but disputed the personal liability in respect thereof.

The view of the learned Master that the appellants should pay ad valorem court-fee is sound and I therefore confirm his decision. Time six weeks for payment of court-fee from today.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 21, rr. 2 and 53 (3)—Person attaching decree in favour of his judgment-debtor—Whether entitled to adjust the attached decree by accepting a smaller amount—Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act III of 1913), S. 19.

The income-tax authorities having obtained a certificate under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act III of 1913) for arrears of tax attached a decree passed in favour of the assessee and applied under S. 19 of the Act for its execution. The income-tax authorities having previously entered into a compromise with the assessee's judgment-debtors by which they accepted an amount lower than that due under the decree in full settlement, the judgment-debtors applied for entering up satisfaction of the decree. The assessee contended that the attaching decree-holder had no power to adjust the decree by acceptance of any amount less than the exact dues under the decree and that the adjustment was collusive.

Held, an attaching decree-holder is a representative of the holder of the attached decree only by a legal fiction and that too for the purpose of lawfully executing the decree; he is in no sense an assignee of the rights under the decree and hence has power only to enforce the decree by process of the Court and of satisfying his own decree out of the proceeds of such execution. He has no power to adjust the decree so as to cause prejudice to the holder of the attached decree, for example, by accepting a smaller sum than was due under the attached decree.

Appellants 1 and 2 are brothers and respondent 1 (hereinafter called "the respondent") is their step-brother. Appellant 3 is the mother of appellants 1 and 2. On 21st June, 1923, the respondent brought a suit (No. 61 of 1923) in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Howrah against the appellants to recover Rs. 11,03,063 odd. On 19th April, 1926, the suit was decreed on a compromise, on terms that the appellants paid to the respondent Rs. 8,61,000, together with interest thereon and certain expenses, out of which Rs. 4,25,000 and a sum of money in the hands of the receiver in the suit were to be paid immediately and the balance in eighteen monthly instalments of Rs. 35,000 each. The payments were made by appellant 3 as agreed, but the respondent, instead of fulfilling the obligation imposed by O. 21, r. 2 (1) of certifying such payments to the Court, applied for execution of the compromise decree, ignoring the payments made up to that time. The appellants thereupon applied to have the said payments recorded as certified under O. 21, r. 2 (2); but the Court, by judgment dated 25th January, 1928, held that the application, save as regards three instalments (totalling Rs. 1,05,000) paid within ninety days of the date of the application, was barred by limitation.

In March, 1933, the income-tax authorities found the respondent to be liable for a sum of Rs. 3,86,000 for arrears of income-tax and filed a requisition before the certificate officer of Howrah, under the provisions of the said Public Demands Recovery Act, for the recovery of the said amount. The certificate officer duly issued a certificate against the respondent for the said amount and in execution thereof, on 1st April, 1933, he attached the said compromise decree under the said S. 19, the amount shown on the face of the said decree as being then due to the respondent thereunder being about Rs. 3,32,373. On 17th March, 1934, the Secretary of State for India, respondent 2 herein, to whom the said amount of income-tax was due, applied, under O. 21, r. 53, and under S. 19 of the said Act, to the first Subordinate Judge of Howrah for execution of the compromise decree. The respondent, as the original decree-holder, was joined as a party to such proceedings. The Subordinate Judge thereupon directed notice to issue on the appellants and the respondent to show cause why the execution proceedings should not be carried on as applied for by respondent 2.

On 21st June, 1934, the appellants showed cause by filing the present application, in which they alleged that the major part of the money due under the compromise decree had been already paid, that they had approached the certificate officer for adjustment of the compromise decree and contested before him the amount outstanding under it and made certain submissions in regard to it; that the certificate officer thereupon made inquiries and agreed to adjust the decree and accept Rs. 1,60,000 in full satisfaction of the amount due under it, provided that the money was paid at once, that the appellants forthwith made payment of the Rs. 1,60,000. They therefore prayed that the adjustment and full satisfaction of the compromise decree be recorded and the application of respondent 2 for execution thereof be dismissed.

On 27th June, 1934, the respondent, in pursuance of the notice served upon him as stated above, showed cause in a substantive application, urging certain contentions which gave rise to a case heard together with the present one and decided against the respondent in the first Court and not pressed on appeal to the High Court. It is therefore unnecessary to consider this part of the case. On 30th July, 1934, a further petition of objection was filed by the respondent in opposition to the appellants' application for recording the adjustment of the compromise decree. He urged in this application that the amount due under the compromise decree was more than Rs. 3,60,000, that, under the law, an attaching decree-holder had power only to execute the attached decree, but not to adjust it by acceptance of any amount less than the exact dues under the decree and that the adjustment appeared to be a collusive transaction between the appellants and respondent 2.

On 28th January, 1935, the Subordinate Judge gave his judgment. He held that respondent 2 had in fact accepted the sum of Rs. 1,60,000 in full satisfaction of the compromise decree, that the effect of the said S. 19 read with the said r. 53 of O. 21, was to place the attaching creditor in the same position as the decree-holder for all purposes and that respondent 2 was therefore within his rights when he, through his agent the certificate officer, granted full satisfaction of the compromise decree. He further held that the question whether the said adjustment was brought about by collusion, as alleged by the respondent, was outside the scope of the proceedings before him. He therefore allowed the appellants' application and directed that the adjustment and full satisfaction of the compromise decree be recorded and the execution case dismissed as on full satisfaction.

The respondent appealed to the High Court. Nasim Ali and R. C. Mitter, JJ., heard the appeal and, on 9th April, 1937, Nasim Ali, J., delivered the judgment of the Court. He agreed with the Subordinate Judge that respondent 2 had adjusted the compromise decree. The real question for determination was, he said, whether respondent 2, as the attaching creditor of the compromise decree, had the right at law to adjust it at the date of the adjustment in the manner alleged by the appellants. The learned Judge observed that as the compromise decree was not passed in his favour, he was not a "decree-holder" within the meaning of O. 21, r. 2; that on a proper construction of r. 53 of the said order and S. 19 of the said Act, the meaning of the words "representative of the holder of the attached decree," occurring in both these provisions, was limited by the words immediately following and that the rule meant that the attaching decree-holder was "deemed to be" such representative for the limited purpose of executing the decree, that is, enforcing it by process of the Court and of satisfying his own decree out of the proceeds of such execution. He was not a representative of the original decree-holder for all purposes. Such a construction of the rule, he thought, would seriously prejudice the original decree-holder by enabling the attaching decree-holder to accept, in satisfaction of the attached decree, a lesser amount than was due under it and thereby keep his claim under his own decree alive to the extent of the balance. The learned Judge further observed that the provisions of S. 146, Civil Procedure Code, did not make any difference. His conclusion was that respondent 2 had no right to adjust, in the manner pleaded by the appellants, the compromise decree attached by him and that the adjustment could not therefore be recorded under O. 21, r. 2. The result was that the appeal was allowed and the appellants' application for recording the adjustment and satisfaction of the decree was dismissed. Mitter, J., agreed with these conclusions. A decree was drawn accordingly.

From this judgment and decree, this appeal has been preferred to His Majesty in Council. In their Lordships' opinion, the question must primarily depend upon the interpretation of cl. 3 of the said S. 19, taken in the light of a similar provision occurring as cl. 3 of O. 21, r. 53. This latter clause is a new provision, introduced for the first time in the present Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908). It was apparently intended to give effect to decisions which arose under the old Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) on the interpretation of the term "representatives," occurring in S. 244 (c) of that Code. The latter section is the predecessor of S. 47 of the present Code and provides that certain questions mentioned therein, arising between parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and their "representatives," shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. The question arose whether an attaching decree-holder was a representative within the meaning of S. 244 (c) and in a series of decisions it was held that he was a representative for the purposes of S. 244: see, for example, *Sah Man Mull v. Kanagasabapathi*¹ and *Krishnan v. Venkatapathy Chetty*². It is thus clear from this antecedent history of cl. 3 of r. 53 that the representative character of the attaching decree-holder is limited to matters in execution of the decree.

This is also the inference suggested by the context of cl. 3. Immediately following the words "representatives of the holder of the attached decree," occurring in cl. 3 are the words "and to be entitled to execute such attached decree in any manner lawful to the holder thereof." The words "deemed to be," which occur in the clause, suggest a legal fiction of a two-fold character with regard to the attaching decree-holder: (1) the law regards him as the representative of the holder of the attached decree, and (2) as a consequence of this fiction, the law clothes him with the same rights as the decree-holder has to execute the decree against the original judgment-debtor. Two things are clear from this context, that he is a representative only by a legal fiction and that too for the purpose of lawfully executing the decree, that is, enforcing it by process of the Court and satisfying his own decree out of the proceeds of such execution. Similarly, the clause immediately preceding cl. 3 refers to the right of the attaching creditor to "proceed to execute the attached decree and apply the net proceeds in satisfaction," etc. As the analogy only arises by legal fiction, it must be limited to the purposes indicated by the context, and cannot be given a larger effect.

In their Lordships' opinion, the context as explained above is vital, and indicates that the intention of the Legislature was not to clothe the "representative" with all the rights of the holder of the attached decree in the sense of making him an assignee of such rights. This view gains further support from the other wording of r. 3. It does not say that the attaching decree-holder will be "deemed to be" the "holder of the attached decree." This would certainly have been a simpler way of stating the intention of the Legislature if it was to clothe the attaching decree-holder with all the rights of the holder of the attached decree as if he was his assignee. If the certificate-holder in S. 19 or the attaching decree-holder in r. 53 were intended to be the full assignees of the rights of the certificate-debtor or of the holder of the attached decree, one would not expect to find the latter's rights preserved for certain purposes, as they are in cl. (1) (ii) of S. 19 and cl. (1) (b) (ii) of r. 53. These clauses provide for the right of the certificate-debtor or of the holder of the attached decree to intervene and apply to the Court to execute its decree, under certain circumstances. Cls. 4, 5 and 6 of O. 21, r. 53 are not reproduced in the provisions of S. 19, Public Demands Recovery Act, and there is in that Act a later section, No. 26, which provides that the balance of the amount recovered by attachment shall be paid to the certificate-debtor.

For all these reasons, it appears to their Lordships that the intention of the Legislature was to make the certificate-holder, by a legal fiction, the representative or agent of the holder of the attached decree for the limited purpose of executing the decree, that is, enforcing it by process of the Court and of satisfying his own decree out of the proceeds of such execution. He was not to be an assignee of the decree, so as to acquire all the rights of the original decree-holder in the decree. Their Lordships are in agreement with the observations in *Anganna Reddi v. Subbaraya Chettiar*¹, where a distinction is drawn between the assignee of a decree and the attaching decree-holder acting as the representative of the original decree-holder under cl. 3 of r. 53.

The view of the High Court below as regards the serious prejudice which will be caused to the holder of the attached decree, if the opposite interpretation were accepted, has considerable force. There is no sound reason shown for placing in the hands of the attaching decree-holder a power to adjust the decree so as to cause prejudice to the holder of the attached decree, for example, by accepting a smaller sum than is due under the attached decree, crediting such sum in partial satisfaction of his own decree and claiming from his own judgment-debtor the balance which may be due. The facts which are beyond dispute in this case illustrate how the prejudice can arise. The amount recoverable under the attached decree was over Rs. 3,60,000. The attaching certificate-holder settled this for a much smaller amount of Rs. 1,60,000 in full satisfaction of that decree and credited only this amount in part satisfaction of his certificate debt of Rs. 3,60,000 retaining his right to claim the balance from the respondent, who, but for the adjustment, was entitled to receive under the attached decree the entire sum of Rs. 3,60,000.

In the course of the appellants' argument, their Lordships' attention was invited to a few rulings which may be briefly noticed. They do not support the appellants' contention. In *Unao Commercial Bank, Ltd. v. Mohar Gobind Rai*¹, no question arose about the power of the attaching decree-holder to adjust the attached decree to the prejudice of his judgment-debtor. In that case, the simple question was whether the attaching decree-holder was a representative of the original decree-holder (his own judgment-debtor), for recovering out of Court the amount of the decree under the provision of O. 21, r. 1 (b). It was argued that the power to receive such payment out of Court resided, under the terms of the said rule, in the decree-holder only. This argument did not prevail and it was held that under cl. 3 of r. 53 of the said Order, the attaching creditor was a representative of the decree-holder and, as such, he was entitled to take the money out of Court and certify payment in the same manner as the decree-holder himself could do.

The facts relating to the case in *Ramcharan Singh v. Jangbahadur Singh*² do not show that what was called in that case an adjustment of the decree between the attaching decree-holder and the original judgment-debtor was for any amount less than the amount of the attached decree, so as to cause prejudice to the holder of that decree. The only light thrown on this question in the report of the proceedings is in certain remarks of the High Court, when it remanded the case for the purpose of determining whether in arriving at the adjustment there was a conspiracy, as alleged by the holder of the attached decree, between the original judgment-debtors and the attaching decree-holder. There is nothing to show how this issue was subsequently determined. There is no doubt that, as held in that ruling, an adjustment between the attaching decree-holder and the original judgment-debtor does not fall within the prohibition contained in cl. 6 of O. 21, r. 53, but that does not meet the point which has been raised in this appeal.

The ruling next relied upon is *Brojo Nath Saha v. Gaya Sundari Dassya*³. This case arose under the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882, in which, as stated above, there was no provision like the one contained in the present cl. 3 of O. 21, r. 53. The point which arose in that decision was whether a petition in which the original judgment-debtor agreed to pay towards the decree a certain sum to the attaching decree-holder constituted an acknowledgment of liability, which, under S. 19, Limitation Act, operative at that time, gave rise to a new period of limitation. The question whether the compromise between the attaching decree-holder and the original judgment-debtor was a valid one was not agitated in that case. Reliance was placed on the fact that the acknowledgment was not addressed to the holder of the attached decree so as to save limitation. In answer to this contention, it was pointed out that the attaching decree-holder was a representative of the holder of the attached decree for the purpose of the acknowledgment and further, that under the Explanation to S. 19, Limitation Act, it was a sufficient acknowledgment for the purpose of saving limitation, although it was not addressed to the person entitled. The case throws no light upon the point now under consideration.

Similarly irrelevant, is the case in *Sesha Aiyar v. Tinnevely Sarangapani Sugar Mill Co., Ltd.*¹ In that case, the question arose under the Companies' Act (VI of 1882) and it was held that the Court would recognise the attaching decree-holder as a representative of the person holding a decree against the company, for the purpose of proving, in the course of liquidation, for the decretal debt in the name of the decree-holder and receiving and applying the dividends payable to him in satisfaction of his own judgment debt. Certain remarks of Bacon, V.C., in *Chatterton v. Watney*² were relied upon. But they do not affect the question raised in this appeal. The judgment in that case proceeds to explain the principle adopted in the English Judicature Act and in the Common Law Procedure Act, regulating what are called garnishee orders. The following observations contained in the judgment were relied on:

"If the judgment-debtor has the means of paying the judgment-debt by getting in debts which are due to him, he shall no longer have the power himself of getting in the debts, but they shall be the property of the judgment-creditor to the extent of the amount for which he has recovered judgment."

The principle underlying these observations has found qualified acceptance in the several clauses of O. 21, r. 53; but there is nothing in these remarks which can lend support to the present contention of the appellants. Reference was made in the argument of the appellants' counsel to the circumstances that in this case the attaching decree-holder's claim was larger than the amount of the attached decree. That, in their Lordships' opinion, will make no difference to the principle involved in this case. Their Lordships are therefore in agreement with the view of the High Court that respondent 2 had no right to adjust the attached decree in the manner pleaded by the judgment-debtor and that the adjustment cannot be recorded under O. 21, r. 2. There is, however, one matter in which the view of the High Court requires correction. It was contended before the High Court, that the interpretation which the High Court and the Board have placed on the material sections would have the effect of depriving the judgment-debtor of his right to pay off the judgment-debt amicably out of Court and thereby prevent execution. The High Court appears to have been of opinion that it would have this effect and that the remedy lay in the judgment-debtor paying the decretal amount into Court, under O. 21, r. 1 (a). Their Lordships do not share this view. They are of opinion that the receipt by the attaching decree-holder of the decretal amount out of Court amicably is only a mode of executing the decree. In the conclusion of his argument, the appellants' counsel urged that, irrespective of the merits of their appeal, the payment of Rs. 1,60,000 which was admittedly accepted by the second respondent in partial satisfaction of his claim, ought to be certified by the certificate-holder and recorded by the Court under the provisions of O. 21, r. 2. Under ordinary circumstances, their Lordships would perhaps have taken a strict view of this contention and negatived it on the ground that, in the appellants' petition of 21st June, 1934, which initiated the present proceedings, they asked only for an order recording the alleged adjustment and satisfaction of the decree and the dismissal, on that account, of respondent 2's application for execution. On perusing the appellants' petition, it is clear that it was not their intention to ask the Court to record the payment of the Rs. 1,60,000 as a pro tanto payment of the decree. O. 21, r. 2 relates to the certifying and recording of (1) a payment, or (2) an adjustment.

The appellants chose the latter course and did not rely upon the payment of Rs. 1,60,000 as a partial payment of the decree. Their case was that there was a complete adjustment and satisfaction of the entire decree. Although this is the strict view of the appellants' petition construed as a pleading, their Lordships cannot ignore the previous conduct of the respondent in omitting to fulfil the obligation imposed by O. 21, r. 2 (1) of certifying payments of very large amounts made by appellant 3, from time to time in satisfaction of the compromise decree. Ignoring these payments, the respondent applied for execution of the decree. Under these circumstances, it appears to their Lordships necessary to protect the appellants from a possible repetition of such behaviour. They will therefore direct that the payment of Rs. 1,60,000 made under the circumstances mentioned in the lower Courts' judgments, should be certified and recorded under the terms of O. 21, r. 2. This order will, of course, be without prejudice to the rights which any party may have in the matter on grounds to which their Lordships' attention has not been called. This direction, however, is in the nature of an indulgence shown to the appellants and will make no difference in the ultimate fate of their appeal.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed and the decree of the High Court confirmed, subject to the direction about certifying and recording the amount of Rs. 1,60,000. The appellants will pay the costs of the first respondent; the second respondent will bear his own costs. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

of law to be satisfied for creation of a trust—S. 6 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882).

A testator, the head of a big business firm, was not in a position to make gifts in cash but he had large assets, which were represented by land, buildings and stock in trade. What he purported to give to his wife was credited to her name in the books of the company. On the questions (1) whether there was a valid and completed gift of the amount mentioned in the account books and (2) whether, if there was no gift, there was a valid declaration of a trust in respect of this sum,

Held, that a gift of movable property unless it is effected by a registered deed, can only be completed by the delivery of the property to the donee. There is no difference here between Indian and English law.

That the testator in this case had the intention of making a gift was beyond question, but the entries in the books did not complete the gifts and what the law requires for completion was never carried out.

Milroy v. Lord, (1862) 4 De G. F. & J. 264: 45 E. R. 1185, relied on.

Heartley v. Nicholson, (1874) 19 Eq. 233 and Manchershaw v. Ardeskir, (1908) 10 Bom. L.R. 1209, followed.

(2) Held, further, that the words of a letter produced in evidence, namely, "This sum is entirely in the nature of a personal gift, etc.," did not create a trust. In fact the letter could only be read as evidencing an intention to create a gift. It could not savour of a declaration of trust and from the evidence there was nothing in the testator's subsequent conduct or acts which could be regarded as showing an intention to create a trust or constitute himself a trustee. For the creation of a trust the requirements of S. 6 of the Indian Trusts Act must be fulfilled.

Appeal from the judgment and order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Gentle dated the 28th day of April, 1939 and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in C. S. No. 75 of 1939.

T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, R. N. Aiyangar and C. Govindaraja Aiyangar instructed by King and Partridge for Appellants.

O. T. G. Nambiar for Respondent.

Leach, C.J.,

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The appeal arises out of an originating summons issued on the Original Side of this Court at the instance of the respondent. There are two questions involved. The first question is whether there was a valid gift of movable property. The second question is whether a trust was created, if there was no gift. The respondent is the sole executor and trustee of the will and codicil of Ethel Mary Chambers, deceased, who was the first wife of George Alexander Chambers, deceased, who was the sole proprietor of a business known as The Chrome Leather Company. It will be convenient to refer to Ethel Mary Chambers as the testatrix and to George Alexander Chambers as the testator. The testatrix died on the 23rd March, 1924 and the testator on the 16th November, 1937. The first appellant is his third wife and she and the second and the third appellants are the executors and trustees of his will and codicil. The fourth appellant is the son of the testator by his second wife, who predeceased him. The Chrome Leather Company had a leather business which was carried on some 12 miles from Madras, and the testator invested a large amount of capital in it. The balance sheet as at the 31st March, 1920 (which for the purposes of this case has been accepted as being correct) showed that the capital stood at Rs. 16,75,892-11-10. Nearly the whole of this amount, however, represented the value of buildings, land, plant, machinery and stock-in-trade. The cash in hand was in fact only Rs. 538-15-2. In the years 1917 and 1919 the testator caused certain entries to be made in the books of the Chrome Leather Company crediting the testatrix, their son (the respondent) and their two daughters, Phyllis Dora Chambers (now Mrs. P. Michell) and Sheila Florence Chambers with certain sums which were debited to his capital account. Separate accounts in the names of the testatrix, the respondent, and the two daughters were opened in the books and in these accounts the credits were entered.

Chambers

Leach, C.J.

On the 25th July, 1919, the testator wrote to the Chrome Leather Company instructing the firm to make such additions to the amounts standing to the credit of his wife and his children in the books as might be required to place 'the capital at their credit in the firm' at the following figures: The testatrix Rs. 2,00,000, the respondent Rs. 40,000, and the daughters Rs. 40,000 each. The letter proceeded:

"Please note also that as and from 1st April last these sums at their respective credits are to bear interest at 6 per cent. payable half-yearly and when the Chrome Leather Company is converted (either with or without the business of Chambers and Company) into a limited liability company preference shares at 6 per cent. with interest payable half-yearly are to be issued for the sums at their credit as stated above or such larger or lesser sums as may then be at their credit should they so desire. You have hitherto paid interest at 8 per cent. on the Rs. 45,000 which Mrs. Chambers has had with the firm, also on Rs. 15,000 which Mrs. Michell had. These payments may be deducted from the interest due on the 1st October, 1919, on the increased capital bearing interest at 6 per cent."

The business of Chambers and Company also belonged to the testator. In this letter the testator instructed his firm to write to the testatrix, his son and his daughters informing them of the amounts standing to their credit in the firm's books. These letters were written and in each it was said:

"This sum is entirely in the nature of a personal gift from Mr. Chambers to yourself and will bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum payable half-yearly commencing from the 1st of April last, vis., 1919.

We wish you to understand that so long as the Chrome Leather Company remains a private company you will not be entitled to withdraw more than 10 per cent. of the capital. In the event of this company being converted into a limited liability company, either with or without the business of Chambers and Company, you will be issued 6 per cent. preference shares to the value of the amount standing at your credit at that date. These preference shares will be subject to the same restrictions, namely, you will not be permitted to place these shares on the market to a greater extent than 10 per cent. annually."

The testator made similar allocations to other relations but it is not necessary to refer to them. His object in crediting the members of his family with these amounts appears from a letter which he wrote at a later date. The object was to ensure that his relations benefited as the result of his life's work and to prevent the Government of India 'grabbing' death duties on the whole of his estate.

On the 27th September, 1919, the testator instructed the Chrome Leather Company to place a further sum of Rs. 1,00,000 to the credit of the testatrix. This sum was re-transferred to the testator's capital account on the 3rd March, 1924, as the result of a letter which the testatrix wrote to the Company, no doubt written at the behest of the testator. The testatrix was then in the south of France. She sailed with the testator for India shortly afterwards but died at Colombo. Before she died the testatrix was paid in the aggregate the sum of Rs. 83,606-3-6 as interest on the sums standing to her credit in the books of the Chrome Leather Company.

By her will the testatrix bequeathed to her trustees the Rs. 2,00,000 standing to her credit after the re-transfer of Rs. 1,00,000, upon trust for the benefit of her son, her two daughters and their issue. For some months after her death interest on the Rs. 2,00,000 was credited to her account in the books of the firm, but as the result of depression in trade then prevailing the National Bank of India objected to any payment of interest until the overdraft which it had granted had been fully discharged. As the result, no further interest was credited in the accounts in respect of this sum. On or about the 3rd July, 1930, the testator caused to be opened in the books of his firm with effect from the 1st October, 1930, separate accounts showing the beneficiaries under the will of the testatrix as creditors and the firm as the debtor in respect of the amounts to which they were entitled according to the will of the testatrix.

In the year 1930 the testator contemplated carrying out a scheme which he had had in mind for many years of transforming the firm into a limited liability Company. When interest had ceased to be paid on the amounts standing to the credit of his relatives in the firm's books the auditors included in their statement a certificate that no interest had been allowed on these amounts and the testator was anxious that the certificate should be one without any qualification as it would affect the chances of a successful flotation of his business. The amounts were shown in the balance sheet as 'deposits' until the balance sheet for the period ending 31st March, 1923. Thereafter they were referred to as 'unsecured loans'. With the object of obtaining a clean certificate the testator sent to the respondent and the beneficiaries under the will of the testatrix draft letters to be signed and returned by them stating that interest on the amounts at their credit had not been paid for some time and waiving any claim for interest until circumstances enabled the company to make further payments. This led to correspondence with the respondent who had not merely his position as a beneficiary under the will of the testatrix to consider, but his position as a trustee under it. The whole of the correspondence which passed between the testator and the members of his family has not been included in the record, but in a letter dated 18th January, 1932, which the testator wrote to his daughter Phyllis, he said that he had been advised that as he had not received consideration for the transfers of his capital there was no legal claim against him. In the course of this letter he stated:

"I do not wish to withdraw from any undertakings I have made or promises I have given but I am certainly determined not to permit if I can prevent it any doubt to exist as to the position of my affairs when my time comes."

The same attitude was taken up by the testator in a letter dated 12th November, 1932, addressed to Messrs. Fraser and Ross, the firm's auditors. The certificate which they had then given did not meet with his approval as the qualifications had not been removed. In his letter to the auditors he said:

"Certain transfers from my capital in our books were made of my own free-will and I have no intention of cancelling same, but I have never received any 'loans', and there was never any consideration either given or accepted and as regards payment of interest I am under no obligation to any one."

Some days later the Rs. 2,00,000 was re-transferred to the capital account of the testator. This was, of course, done in assertion of his contention that he was under no legal obligation in respect of the allocations of capital to his relations and to avoid the auditors qualifying their certificate. When the respondent came to know of this he protested as a trustee under the will of the testatrix. The testator having died the respondent instituted the present proceedings in order that the legal position might be determined.

The present appeal is only concerned with the Rs. 2,00,000 which was credited to the testatrix in the books of the Chrome Leather Company. The first question which the Court is called upon to decide is whether there was a valid and completed gift of Rs. 2,00,000 by the testator to the testatrix. If this is answered in the negative the Court is required to say whether there was a valid declaration of trust in respect of this sum. The case was heard by Gentle, J., who held that there was no gift but that a trust had been created. I agree with the learned Judge that there was no completed gift, but I am unable to concur in his conclusion that the testator created a trust of the Rs. 2,00,000.

Before proceeding to state my reasons in detail, I wish to refer to certain of the authorities which have been quoted in argument. In *Milroy v. Lord*¹, Turner, L.J., pointed out that in order to render a voluntary settlement valid and effectual, the settlor must have done everything which, according to the nature of the property comprised in the settlement, was necessary to be done in order to transfer the property and render the settlement binding upon him. Lord Justice Turner proceeded:

"He may of course do this by actually transferring the property to the persons for whom he intends to provide, and the provision will then be effectual, and it will be equally effectual if he transfers the property to a trustee for the purposes of the settlement, or declares that he himself holds it in trust for those purposes; and if the property be personal, the trust may, as I apprehend, be declared either in writing or by parol; but in order to render the settlement binding, one or other of these modes must, as I understand the law of this Court, be resorted to, for there is no equity in this Court to perfect an imperfect gift. The cases I think go further to this extent that if the settlement is intended to be effectuated by one of the modes to which I have referred, the Court will not give effect to it by applying another of those modes. If it is intended to take effect by transfer, the Court will not hold the intended transfer to operate as a declaration of trust, for then every imperfect instrument would be made effectual by being converted into a perfect trust."

These observations were not in complete accord with what had been said in certain earlier cases, but they have since been accepted as correctly stating the law. In that case one Thomas Medley executed a voluntary deed purporting to assign certain of his shares in a bank to one Samuel Lord to be held by him upon certain trusts for the benefit of the plaintiffs. The shares were transferable only by entry in the books of the bank; but no such transfer was ever made. Lord held a general power of attorney authorising him to transfer Medley's shares and after the execution of the settlement, Medley gave him a further power of attorney which authorised him to receive the dividends on the shares. Lord received the dividends for three years, but Medley died without the formalities required for the transfer of the shares having been completed. It was held that as it was not the intention of the settlor to constitute himself a trustee of the shares, but to vest the trust in Lord there was no valid trust of the shares created in the settlor. It was further held that no valid trust of the shares was created in Lord, for although he held a power of attorney under which he might have vested the shares in himself, he did not do so, and was not bound to do so without directions from the settlor, since he held the power only as agent for the settlor.

In *Richards v. Delbridge*¹, Jessel, M.R., said:

"The one thing necessary to give validity to a declaration of trust—the indispensable thing—I take to be, that the donor or grantor, or whatever he may be called, should have absolutely parted with that interest which had been his up to the time of the declaration, should have effectually changed his right in that respect and put the property out of his power, at least in the way of interest."

A decision similar to that in *Milroy v. Lord*² was given in *Heartley v. Nicholson*³. A person who was the owner of a colliery gave a share in it to his daughter and at a meeting of the shareholders this was sanctioned. Subsequently the dividend on the share purported to have been transferred was paid by the father to the daughter but the formalities required for the transfer of the share so as to give the daughter a legal title to it were not carried through. There was no doubt about the father's intention, but it was not carried into effect before he died. In these circumstances it was held that expressions in letters, the signature of a minute in the books of the company, and the gift of the dividend did not amount to a declaration by the testator, nor to proof of an intention and determination on his part, that he would hold the share for the plaintiff. There was the intention to make a gift, but he had failed to carry out that intention.

There is no difference here between Indian and English law. A gift of movable property, unless it is effected by a registered deed, can only be completed by the delivery of the property to the donee. For the creation of a trust of movable property the requirements of S. 6 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, must be fulfilled. Before there can be a valid trust the author must indicate with reasonable certainty by words or acts (i) an intention on his part to create thereby a trust, (ii) the purpose of the trust, (iii) the beneficiary, (iv) the trust property and must transfer the trust property to the trustee, unless the trust is declared by will or the author of the trust is himself to be the trustee. *Milroy v. Lord*¹ was followed by the Bombay High Court in *Manchershaw v. Ardeshir*²; *Richards v. Delbridge*³ and *Heartley v. Nicholson*⁴ were there referred to with approval. Sargent, C.J., applied *Richards v. Delbridge*³ and *Heartley v. Nicholson*⁴, in *Ashabai v. Haji Tyab Haji Rahimtulla*⁵, where it was held that the fact that the father opened an account in his books in the name of his son to which money was credited did not raise a presumption that the father intended to create a trust in favour of his son of the sums appearing in the account. The Court's attention has also been drawn to *Bai Mahakore v. Bai Mangla*⁶, where Chandavarkar and Heaton, JJ., differed as to whether there was a trust or a gift, but I do not consider it necessary to pause to examine this case as the facts are in no way analogous to the facts in the present case.

What is manifest in this case is that the testator was not in a position to make gifts in cash of the amounts standing to the credit of his various relatives. He had large assets, but they were represented by land, buildings and stock-in-trade, and what he purported to give was a share in these properties. So far as the land and buildings were concerned the gifts could only be completed by an appropriately worded and duly registered deed. He could vest a part of the stock-in-trade by registered deed or by actual delivery to the donee, but there was no registered deed and there was no delivery. Of course when moneys were paid by way of interest on the alleged gifts those moneys become completed gifts. (See *Adams v. Loddell*¹.) That there was no completed gift of principal was the attitude which the testator himself took up when his right to withhold interest was questioned. That he had the intention of making gifts is beyond question, but the entries in the books did not complete the gifts and what the law requires for completion was never carried out.

On the question of the effect of the book entries the decision of the Privy Council in *Hariram Serowgee v. Madan Gopal Bagla*² has been quoted. In that case one Brijcomari carried on business on her own account and maintained account books. In 1896 she opened an account in the name of her granddaughter. This account was continued down to the granddaughter's death in 1904. In 1901 this account was credited with a sum of Rs. 2,00,000 and in 1903 with a further sum of Rs. 31,000. It was alleged that these were gifts to the granddaughter by the grandmother. There was no evidence that the grand-daughter ever knew what was done by the grandmother and the account was never operated upon. Whatever was done with regard to the account was done under the direction of the grandmother. The Judicial Committee held that the accounts were themselves mere book entries and did not confer or determine rights. Whatever else they showed they did not show completed gifts to the grand-daughter. In the present case the testator's family knew all about the allocations in the books of his firm and received certain payments of interest and to that extent the cases differ, but it does not follow that the book entries in the present case confer or determine rights. I have indicated that in my opinion they do not.

In holding that a trust had been created the learned Judge says that the testator has used language which, taken in connection with his acts and conduct, shows a clear intention on his part to divest himself of the beneficial interest in the sum of Rs. 2,00,000 and to exercise dominion and control over it exclusively in the character of a trustee. The learned Judge has read the letter of the Chrome Leather Company of the 6th August, 1919, to the testatrix as a declaration of trust and it is evident that it is on this letter that he has largely based his decision. I am unable to read the letter in the same way. In fact, in my opinion, the letter can only be read as evidencing an intention to create a gift. Having said "This sum is entirely in the nature of a personal gift" the testator adds restrictions with regard to realisation of the gift. I cannot see anything in the letter which savours of a declaration of trust and in my opinion there is nothing in the testator's subsequent acts or conduct which can be regarded as showing an intention to create a trust or to constitute himself a trustee. Some of his subsequent acts point positively in the opposite direction. If the transaction represented anything it represented a gift not the creation of a trust, but I have said sufficient to indicate that in my opinion the transaction cannot be regarded as a gift because neither the testatrix nor her beneficiaries ever received the property and there was no registered instrument.

For these reasons I hold that there was no valid gift of the Rs. 2,00,000 to the testatrix and no trust created in respect of this sum. In my opinion the appeal should be allowed with costs here and below and a certificate for two counsel granted.

The first proviso to O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, framed by the Madras High Court as it stood in 1937 was intra vires the rule-making powers of the High Court. In re O. N. R. M. M. Chettiar Firm v. The Central Bank of India, Ltd., (1937) Rang. L.R. 268 (F.B.), distinguished.

Where a person applies under O. 21, r. 90 for setting aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground of material irregularity or fraud, an opportunity must be given to the applicant of showing cause before an order, requiring security before admitting such application, is passed against him. The subsequent amendment of O. 21, r. 90, Proviso 1 has put this beyond controversy.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Kistna at Masulipatam dated 26th January, 1938 and passed in A. S. No. 236 of 1937—E. A. No. 778 of 1937, District Munsif Court, Bandar, in O. S. No. 834 of 1933, District Munsif Court, Gudivada.

B. V. Ramanarasu for Appellant.

A. Lakshmayya for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—On the 9th of May, 1934, the first respondent obtained a money decree in the Court of the District Munsif of Masulipatam against the third respondent and his son, the appellant, who is a minor. So far as the appellant was concerned, the decree was limited to his share in the family property and the assets of the estate of his deceased grandfather in his hands. On the 15th of March, 1937, 19.26 acres of land were sold by the Court in execution of this decree. This land had been attached by the decree-holder on the ground that it represented joint family property. The second respondent became the purchaser on the 14th April, 1937. The appellant then filed an application in execution proceedings asking that the sale be set aside. He asserted that the property sold was his self-acquired property, that no notice had been issued to him as required by O. 21, r. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that there had been material irregularity in the publication of the sale, the result of which was that the property had been sold at considerably less than its real value. This application purported to be made under the provisions of Ss. 47 and 151 and O. 21, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court has not been informed of the reason for invoking S. 151, but it is said that

Ram-

Leach, C.J.

S. 47 was invoked because under that section the appellant was entitled to an inquiry into his allegations that the property belonged to him and that the sale was bad by reason of notice not having been issued under O. 21, r. 22. O. 21, r. 90 applied in so far as the appellant sought to obtain the setting aside of the sale on the ground of material irregularity in its publication. The petition was not in order and it was returned to the appellant to remedy the defect. This was done and the petition was re-presented on the 21st June, 1937. On the 26th June, 1937, the Court ordered the appellant to enter into a security bond in the amount for which the property had been sold, namely, Rs. 1,450, and directed that the security bond should be filed by the 6th July, 1937. In requiring security to be furnished the Court acted under the provisions of O. 21, r. 90. It is not disputed that before this order was passed the appellant had an opportunity of being heard. The security was found to be unsatisfactory, and on the 19th August, 1937, the Court ordered the appellant to deposit in Court the amount in cash if he wished to proceed with his application. The appellant failed to deposit the amount within the time allowed by the Court—the time had been extended to the 23rd September, 1937—and in consequence the District Munsif dismissed his application. The appellant then appealed to the District Judge of Kistna. The District Judge, while agreeing with the dismissal of the application for default so far as the application related to O. 21, r. 90, pointed out that the Court should nevertheless have proceeded with the application so far as it came under the provisions of S. 47, but instead of directing the District Munsif to hear and decide that part of the application, the District Judge indicated that the proper course would be for the appellant to file a separate application under S. 47 and limit it to his allegations that the property was self-acquired and that the sale was bad because of the failure to give notice under O. 21, r. 22. The appellant has now appealed to this Court with regard to (a) the dismissal of his application for default in making the required deposit and (b) the requirement of the District Judge that he should file a separate application in so far as he claims under S. 47.

It has been accepted by the learned advocate for the second respondent, who alone is concerned with this appeal, that the District Judge should not have directed the appellant to file a fresh application under S. 47, and to that extent he agrees that the appeal should be allowed. But he says that no second appeal lies from that part of the decree which relates to the dismissal of the application for failure to find security under O. 21, r. 90. That contention must be accepted. A second appeal will not lie on that question, although we think that the present appeal so far as it relates to the provisions of O. 21, r. 90 may be treated as an application in revision, because, if the District Munsif had no power to require security to be given, his insistence on it would amount to a wrongful exercise of jurisdiction. Therefore we will proceed to treat the rest of the appeal as an application for revision.

At the time when the District Munsif required the appellant to furnish security, O. 21, r. 90, as amended by this Court read as follows:

"Where any immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, the decree-holder, or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, or whose interests are affected by the sale, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it:

Provided that the Court may, before admitting the application, call upon the applicant either to furnish security to the satisfaction of the Court for an amount equal to that mentioned in the sale warrant or that realized by the sale, whichever is less, or to deposit such amount in Court;

Provided also that the security furnished or the deposit made as aforesaid, shall be liable to be proceeded against only to the extent of the deficit on a re-sale of the property already brought to sale;

Provided further that no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud."

This rule has been amended since then and the nature of the amendment will be indicated presently.

The appellant contends that this rule is ultra vires of the powers conferred on this Court by S. 122 of the Code in that it says that the Court hearing the application may, before admitting it, call upon the applicant to furnish security. He would have it held that the decision of the Rangoon High Court in *In re O. N. R. M. M. Chettiar Firm v. The Central Bank of India, Ltd.*¹ has application here. In that case a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court of which I was a member, held that O. 21, r. 90, as framed by the Rangoon High Court, was ultra vires. But that rule differed very materially from the corresponding rule of this Court. Under the Rangoon rule no application could be heard unless the applicant, on filing his application deposited the amount mentioned in the sale warrant or an amount equal to the sum realized by the sale, whichever was less. If this rule were to be enforced it meant that no one aggrieved by a sale held in execution proceedings could cross the threshold of the Court with an application for an order setting it aside as unlawful for non-compliance with the provisions of the Code, unless he brought with him in cash the amount mentioned in the sale warrant or the amount for which the property had been sold. This Court's rule as it stood even at the time of the sale did not go so far as that. The Court has full power to regulate its procedure, but that does not mean that a man may not be heard at all until security is furnished by him. Under O. 21, r. 90, as originally framed by this Court, security could be required before the application was admitted. That did not mean, however, that an order requiring security might be passed without hearing the person affected by the order. In fact it would be wrong of a Court to pass any such order without hearing the applicant. In order to prevent any misunderstanding as to the effect of the first proviso to O. 21, r. 90 this Court has reframed it and the proviso now reads as follows:

"Provided that the Court may, after giving notice to the applicant, call upon him before admitting the application either to furnish security to the satisfaction of the Court for an amount equal to that mentioned in the sale warrant or to that realized by the sale whichever is less, or to deposit such amount in Court."

This puts it beyond all controversy that an opportunity must be given to an applicant of showing cause before an order requiring security is passed against him. Although this amendment was made subsequent to the District Munsif's order in this case, the proviso, as it then stood, should be read as giving a right to the applicant to be heard on the matter of security. That opportunity was given to the appellant and consequently he has no grievance.

His learned advocate has, however, argued that the Court has no power in any circumstances to require security to be furnished. He says that although the filing of an application may be entirely unwarranted, the Court cannot insist on security being furnished. That is an argument which we are not prepared to accept. A person has the right of being heard, but once he has been heard, the Court can put him on terms before allowing him to proceed further with such a matter. We hold that the rule as it stood in 1937 was intra vires the Court's powers and that therefore the District Munsif had power to pass the orders which he did on the 26th June and on the 19th August, 1937.

The result is that the appeal succeeds so far as it concerns the decree of the District Court requiring the appellant to file a fresh application under S. 47, but it stands dismissed in all other respects. Inasmuch as the second respondent has succeeded on the main question, that relating to the validity of the first proviso to O. 21, r. 90, we consider that he is entitled to his costs.

The District Munsif will now be directed to proceed with the hearing of the petition so far as it concerns the allegations which do not relate to O. 21, r. 90, and security will not be required.

The second petition filed in pursuance of the order of the District Judge is unnecessary and will be withdrawn by the appellant.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 115—Revision—Ex parte decree—Setting aside of—Finding not recorded for setting aside of decree—Whether finding required under the Code—Interference in revision whether justifiable.

Interference in revision under S. 115, Civil Procedure Code, depends on some error pertaining to jurisdiction. If the recording of a finding regarding the presence of sufficient cause for interference is not a mandatory requirement for an order setting aside an ex parte decree under O. 9, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, it cannot be said that such an order is passed without jurisdiction merely because the Judge does not set forth the reasons for passing the order. It is most desirable that a finding on the facts should be given explicitly but the absence of such a finding is not a ground for interference in revision.

V. Govindarajachari for Petitioner.

K. Kotayya for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner seeks to revise an order setting aside an ex parte decree against the respondents on terms that the respondents should deposit suit costs which deposit was made.

The only contention which might call for interference in revision is that by inference from the terms of O. 9, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, it is obligatory, upon the Court to record a finding that the defendant who seeks to set aside an ex parte decree was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. In the present case, the respondents filed an affidavit alleging sufficient cause for their non-appearance. There was a counter-affidavit filed by some lawyer acting for the lawyer of the plaintiff denying these allegations. The learned District Munsif does not discuss the truth of the allegations on one side or the other but simply lays down the terms upon which the ex parte decree should be set aside. Now, O. 9, r. 13 merely requires the applicant to satisfy the Court that summons was not duly served or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing. It does not in terms require the Court to record a finding that it is so satisfied. There are two decisions of single judges of this Court taking opposite views on this question whether it is obligatory upon the Court to record a finding. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, J., in the case of Vaithi Chetti v. Govindam Pillai holds that it is mandatory to record such a finding. The only authority quoted is the decision of the Privy Council in *Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain*², a decision which is not in any way concerned with setting aside ex parte decrees, but has to do with setting aside sales in execution for material irregularities. Moreover, I have been unable to find in the report of that decision the observation upon which the learned Judge relies. I must take it that the decision of Ananthakrishna Aiyar, J., is not based on authority. There is a more recent decision of Stodart, J., in *Venkatarama Aiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹, in which the learned Judge observes that while it is most desirable that the Court should state why it thinks the ex parte decree should be set aside, O. 9, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, does not make it obligatory for the Court to state its reasons and he holds that the failure to record findings on the merits of the case is not a ground for interference in revision. With great respect to the learned Judge who held the contrary view, it seems to me that the view of Stodart, J., is correct. Interference in revision under S. 115, Civil Procedure Code, depends on some error pertaining to jurisdiction. If the recording of a finding regarding the presence of sufficient cause for interference is not a mandatory requirement for an order setting aside an ex parte decree it cannot be said that such an order is passed without jurisdiction merely because the learned Judge does not set forth the reasons for passing the order. It is of course most desirable that a finding on the facts should be given explicitly but I am of opinion that the absence of such a finding is not a ground for interference in revision.

The Revision Petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

The administration in insolvency of a deceased debtor's estate under S. 108 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act must necessarily mean that the uncharged assets of the estate are to be utilised for the benefit of the general body of creditors, and, as a mere attachment creates no charge, an attaching creditor against the estate is in no better position than any other ordinary creditor. Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—This appeal raises two questions of law with regard to the administration in insolvency of the estate of a deceased person. On the 15th July, 1938, one S. V. Kannabhiran Pillai died, and by an order of the Original Side of this Court passed on the 18th April, 1939, it was directed that his estate should be administered in insolvency under the provisions of S. 108 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The appellants are creditors. On the 9th August, 1938, they obtained a decree against the deceased's estate in C. S. No. 154 of 1938. In execution proceedings filed on the 26th January, 1939, they attached the deceased's interests in certain immovable property, which was the subject-matter of another suit, C. S. No. 189 of 1938 and in movable properties, which were in dispute in a third suit, C. S. No. 198 of 1939. The movable properties included a sum of Rs. 483-7-10 which was standing to the credit of the deceased in the books of the Egmore Benefit Society. A garnishee order was issued by the Court in respect of this sum on the 13th February, 1939 and the money was paid into Court on the 27th March, 1939.

The first question which arises is whether the order of this Court directing the estate to be administered in insolvency puts an end to the execution proceedings and relegates the appellants to the position of ordinary creditors. The second question is whether the appellants' claim to the sum of Rs. 483-7-10 paid into Court by the Egmore Benefit Society stands on a different footing from their claims in respect of the other attached properties.

S. 108 (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act provides that a creditor of a deceased debtor, whose debt would have been sufficient to support an insolvency petition had the debtor been alive, may present a petition to the Court praying for an order for the administration of the estate of the deceased under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. Sub-S. (2) states that, on the prescribed notice being given to the legal representative of the deceased debtor, the Court may, upon proof of the debt, unless it is satisfied that there is a reasonable probability that the estate will be sufficient for the payment of the debts owing by the deceased, make an order for the administration in insolvency of the estate. Sub-S. (3) says that a petition of this nature shall not be presented after proceedings have been commenced for the administration of the deceased debtor's estate, but in that event, on proof that the estate is insufficient to pay its debts, the Court may transfer the proceedings to the Court exercising jurisdiction in insolvency under the Act.

S. 109 (1) provides that, upon an order being made for the administration of a deceased debtor's estate under S. 108, the property of the debtor shall vest in the Official Assignee, who shall forthwith proceed to realise and distribute the assets in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Sub-S. (2) of this section says that with the modifications thereafter mentioned, all the provisions of Part III of the Act, shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to the case of an administration order in like manner as to an order of adjudication under the Act. The only modification is in sub-cl. (3) which makes the proper funeral and testamentary expenses incurred by the legal representative of the deceased debtor a preferential claim payable in full in priority to all other debts. Part III of the Act contains the provisions with regard to the administration of the property of an insolvent and included in this part is S. 53, the first sub-section of which reads as follows:

"Where execution of a decree has issued against the property of a debtor, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Official Assignee, except in respect of assets realized in the course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the order of adjudication, and before he had notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition by or against the debtor."

The learned advocate for the appellants has conceded that, if S. 53 applies to an administration of a deceased debtor's estate under Ss. 108 and 109 his clients are out of Court, except as regards the sum of Rs. 483-7-10 paid into Court by the Egmore Benefit Society. This case was decided on the Original Side by Mockett, J., who held that S. 53 is not applicable to proceedings under Ss. 108 and 109 and in this connection relied on the judgment in *Hasluck v. Clark*¹. The learned Judge, however, decided against the appellants on the ground that in this country an attachment confers no title and creates no charge, relying here upon the decision in *Re Prem Lal Dhar: Ex parte The Official Assignee*² and *Nicholson Town Bank, Ltd., Tanjore v. Varadarajulu Naidu*³.

In *Re Prem Lal Dhar: Ex parte The Official Assignee*², the Calcutta High Court also held that S. 53 is not applicable to cases of administration under Ss. 108 and 109 and discussed *Hasluck v. Clark*¹. In *Hasluck v. Clark*¹, the Court of Appeal said that an order for the administration of the estate of a deceased debtor under S. 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (which corresponds to S. 108 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act) is not equivalent to a receiving order for the purposes of S. 45 of the Act (which corresponds to S. 53 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act) and that a creditor who had proceeded in execution was entitled to retain as against the trustee of the debtor's estate, the benefit of an execution not completed before the date of the administration order. In that case a writ of feri facias had issued. By S. 26 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, it was enacted that a writ of feri facias should bind the property in the goods of the execution debtor as from the time when the writ was delivered to the sheriff to be executed. Therefore S. 45 of the Act could not apply. The Calcutta High Court, in following *Hasluck v. Clark*¹ on the question of the applicability of S. 53 (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, held that an attachment in India only prevents alienation and does not confer any title or create any charge or lien on the property such as attaches in England upon seizure under the writ of fiери facias. In these circumstances the attaching creditor in India has merely the right of sharing rateably with the other creditors of the estate.

For the purpose of this appeal it is not necessary to decide whether S. 53 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act applies to the administration in insolvency of a deceased debtor's estate, because it is manifest that in any event the appellants are not entitled to succeed, except as regards the sum of Rs. 483-7-10 paid into Court by the Egmore Benefit Society. There are two decisions of this Court, each by a Full Bench, which lay down that in this country an order of attachment does not create any charge. The first decision was in *Krishnaswami Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras*¹, where it was said that the effect of an attachment under the Code of Civil Procedure was to prevent alienation and not to confer title. The second decision was in *Manickam Chettiar v. Income-tax Officer, Madura South*², where it was again contended that inasmuch as an attachment had taken place the petitioner was in the position of a secured creditor. It was pointed out that this question had been decided by this Court in *Krishnaswami Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras*¹ and that the Privy Council in *Ananthapadmanabhaswami v. Official Receiver, Secunderabad*³ had not overruled it, as was suggested. The Judicial Committee had refused to go into the question and reserved their decision for a future occasion. The judgments in *Krishnaswami Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras*¹ and *Manickam Chettiar v. Income-tax Officer, Madura South*² conclude the question so far as this Court is concerned. It may be mentioned, however, that the Calcutta High Court gave a similar decision in *Soobul Chunder Law v. Russick Lall Mitter*⁴, which was also decided by a Full Bench.

As the result of decisions of this Court we must hold that in India no charge is created by an attachment and when the judgment-debtor becomes an insolvent the attachment falls to the ground, provided, of course, that the attachment has not resulted in a sale. There is no difference here between the administration of the estate of an insolvent who is alive and the administration of the estate of a person who dies insolvent, but was not adjudicated before his death. The administration in insolvency of a deceased debtor's estate under S. 108 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act must necessarily mean that the uncharged assets of the estate are to be utilised for the benefit of the general body of creditors and, as a mere attachment creates no charge, an attaching creditor is in no better position than any other ordinary creditor. If he were, there would be little virtue in the provisions of Ss. 108 and 109 of the Act.

The learned Official Assignee has conceded that, if the attachment has resulted in a sale and the sale proceeds are in Court, the attaching creditor is entitled irrespective of S. 53, to the money or so much of it as is necessary to meet his claim. Except as regards the sum of Rs. 483-7-10 paid into Court by the Egmore Benefit Society the attachments have not resulted in the realisation of any of the assets attached. With regard to the Rs. 483-7-10 it has transpired that after the Egmore Benefit Society had paid the money into Court the Master passed an order giving the appellants the right to withdraw it from Court. The matter has gone beyond the interim order stage and in these circumstances the learned Official Assignee has rightly conceded that the appellants are entitled to this money.

The result is that the appeal will be allowed to the extent of this sum of Rs. 483-7-10, but it will stand dismissed in all other respects. As the appellants have in the main failed there will be no order as to costs in the appeal.

Certain tenants resisted suits for ejectment on the ground that they had occupancy rights. The suits were decreed by the District Munsif and thereupon the landlord entered into possession. The decrees were affirmed on appeal and second appeal. Ultimately however the Judicial Committee reversed the decisions and held that the landlord was only entitled to melwaram right, the kudiwaram right being vested in the tenants. In applications by the tenants for restitution,

Held, that the tenants were merely entitled to be put in the position which they would have been in had they been enjoying the kudiwaram right throughout the period of dispossession. The value of the kudiwaram right is represented by the net value of the produce less the portion which must be delivered to the landholder as the holder of the melwaram right.

Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami, (1916) 3 L.W. 405, overruled.

Golkonda Ramachandrudu v. Inuganti Venkata Narasimha Rao Garu, (1923) 44 M.L.J. 486 and P. C. Tagore v. Mathura Kanta Das, (1937) 41 C.W. N. 1015, approved.

The tenants are entitled to interest on the mesne profits from the date of the order granting restitution to date of payment or realization.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tenali dated 31st March, 1938 and made in A. S. No. 51 of 1937 (A. S. No. 201 of 1937, District Court, Guntur) preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Repalle in E. P. No. 231 of 1936 in O. S. No. 209 of 1922 and petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to scale down the debt in A. A. A. O. No. 185 of 1938, etc.

These appeals, memoranda of objections and petitions for scaling down the suit debt under the Agriculturists' Relief Act, coming on for hearing on 29th August, 1940, the Court (King, J.) made the following ORDER.

The subject-matter of these appeals is a claim by the respondents to mesne profits put forward in the following circumstances. The appellants filed suits in 1922 to eject the respondents from their holdings. The respondents pleaded that they had occupancy rights and could not be ejected. In spite of that plea, decrees were passed in favour of the appellants, and in July, 1923, the appellants took possession of the property concerned. Litigation continued until it finally reached the Privy Council which held in 1929 that the property was part of an estate and that the tenants had occupancy rights. Shortly after this decision was given the tenants

resumed possession of the land. The tenants then applied for restitution under S. 144, and there is now a decree in their favour for mesne profits with interest from the period when the appellants took possession until the period in 1929 when possession was resumed by the respondents. The appellants in the proceedings in the Courts below raised the contention that they should be allowed credit in the calculation of mesne profits for the rent on the property which would have been due to them during this period if the tenants had remained in possession. That contention was negatived by the Court of First Instance and by the lower appellate Court, and is now the subject-matter of these appeals. There are also memoranda of cross-objections in which the respondents contend that mesne profits should be allowed for a further period of two or three years after 1929.

In regard to the subject-matter of the appeals, the lower appellate Court follows the decision of a Bench of this Court in *Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami*¹ and it cannot, I think, be successfully argued that that authority does not apply to the facts of this case. It seems to me to apply in every respect to those facts and, if I were proceeding to dispose of these appeals sitting singly I would feel myself also bound by it. At the same time, with the greatest respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, I am unable to see any principle which would justify that decision in the face of the clear language of S. 144 itself. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., seems to base his decision merely upon the fact that during certain faslis the plaintiff himself was in possession and therefore can claim no rent. S. 144 says:

"Where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed, the Court of First Instance shall, on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree."

It seems to me clear that, if a defendant resists a suit for ejectment on the ground that he has occupancy rights and if it is finally determined in appeal that his claim for such occupancy right is good, the result is that the first Court which has granted a decree for ejectment ought to have granted a decree dismissing the suit and the successful appellant is under S. 144 to be put in the same position as he would have occupied had the Court of First Instance dismissed the suit against him. In this case the respondents claimed occupancy rights and of course as a corollary to occupancy rights there is the obligation on the part of the respondents to pay rent to their landlord. If the landlord's suit in the Court of First Instance had been dismissed, the result would be that the possession of the defendants would have been confirmed and that during the years for which they now claim mesne profits they would have been liable to pay rent. I can see no logical principle upon which the present claim of the appellants that the amount of rent should be deducted from the amount of mesne profits calculated can be resisted, and, with very great respect, I consider that the decision in *Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami*¹ requires re-consideration. There is a recent decision of the Calcutta High Court to which my attention has been called which has decided this point in a manner directly opposed to the decision in Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami. It is *P. C. Tagore v. Mathura Kanta Das*². In view of this conflict of decisions and in view of my very strong feeling that the decision in *Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami*¹ requires re-consideration, I submit the records in these appeals to His Lordship the Chief Justice with a recommendation that, if he thinks fit, the appeals be posted before a Bench.

These appeals, memoranda of objections and petitions, coming on for hearing this day, the Court delivered the following judgment.

V. Govindarajachari for Appellants.

Y. G. Krishnamurthi for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—These appeals can conveniently be disposed of in one judgment. They arise out of two suits, O. S. No. 209 of 1922 and O. S. No. 212 of 1922 of the Court of the District Munsif of Repalle. The appellants were the plaintiffs. They asked for the ejectment of the respondents from lands which the respondents had held as their tenants, notices to quit having been served upon them. It was the case of the appellants that the notices terminated all right of occupancy. The respondents strongly contested this contention. Their case was that the lands constituted part of an estate within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908. The District Munsif rejected the respondents' plea and decreed the suits. The District Munsif's judgment was concurred in by the Subordinate Judge of Tenali and by this Court in second appeals. The respondents, however, carried the matter to the Privy Council and the Judicial Committee reversed the decisions of this Court and of the Courts below on the ground that the lands did form part of an estate within the meaning of the Act. Consequently the appellants were only entitled to the melwaram right, the kudiwaram right being vested in the respondents.

As the result of the decree passed by the District Munsif the appellants went into possession on the 3rd July, 1923, but by reason of the decision of the Privy Council the respondents were entitled to resume possession, which they did soon after judgment had been pronounced by Judicial Committee. Notwithstanding this the respondents did not apply for restitution until 1936. Having won in the Privy Council they were entitled under the provisions of S. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be placed in the position which they would have occupied but for the decrees passed by the District Munsif. Therefore they were entitled to recover from the appellants what they had lost by being deprived of the kudiwaram right. They claimed, however, that they were entitled to the whole of the mesne profits of the lands from the 30th September, 1922, the date on which the suits were decreed, to the date in 1931 when they regained possession, without any deduction in respect of rent. In the course of the hearing of the restitution application before the District Munsif the respondents abandoned their contention that they were entitled to restitution as from the 30th September, 1922, and accepted the 3rd July, 1923, the date on which the appellants went into possession, as being the proper starting point, as it obviously was. The District Munsif held that the period expired in 1929 when the respondents regained possession and not in 1931, but he upheld their main contention that they were entitled to the whole of the profits of the lands without any deduction for rent. In this connection the District Munsif relied on *Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami*¹. The appellants appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Tenali, who also felt himself bound by that decision and therefore concurred in the judgment of the District Munsif. The present appeals are from the decrees of the Subordinate Court. They have been placed before a Full Bench as King, J., before whom the appeals came in the first instance was of the opinion that the decision in *Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami*¹ required re-consideration.

In *Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami*¹, Sadasiya Aiyar and Moore, JJ., held in similar circumstances that the tenants who had been dispossessed as the result of proceedings taken by the landholder were entitled to the mesne profits of the lands for the period for which they were out of possession without any deduction of rent. The basis of this decision was that the expression 'mesne profits' meant 'those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received.' The learned Judges, however, overlooked the real position. The tenants were only entitled to restitution and therefore they were merely entitled to be put in the position which they would have been in had they been enjoying the kudiwaram right throughout the period of dispossession. The value of the kudiwaram right is represented by the net value of the produce, less the portion which must be delivered to the landholder as the holder of the melwaram right. It is not a matter of the awarding of mesne profits in the sense ordinarily meant. As already indicated the tenants are merely entitled to recover the value of that part of the produce of the land which would have been theirs had they been allowed to remain in possession. We consider that the decision in *Lakshmi Narasimha Rao v. Seetharamaswami*¹ is clearly wrong and should be overruled. It may be added that the correct view was taken by another Bench of this Court (Oldfield and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.) in *Golkonda Ramachandrudu v. Inuganti Venkata Narasimha Rao Garu*². A similar decision was given by the Calcutta High Court in *P. C. Tagore v. Mathura Kanta Das*³. It follows that the appellants are entitled to succeed in their appeals.

The respondents have filed memoranda of cross-objections. They raise two questions. The first one is whether the Subordinate Judge has correctly calculated the yield from the lands. The second one is whether the respondents are entitled to more interest than was granted to them. There is no substance in the first contention. The Subordinate Judge after a detailed examination of the evidence came to the conclusion that the District Munsif was right in the figures at which he arrived. As there was evidence to support the finding of the Subordinate Judge it is conclusive. The first point therefore goes, but there is substance in the second contention. The Subordinate Judge refused to allow the respondents interest on the amounts which they were entitled to by way of restitution after the date of the institution of the applications. Here he was wrong. It is true that the respondents were guilty of delay, but having succeeded they were entitled to an order requiring the appellants to pay interest from the date of the order to the date of payment or realization.

The appellants have filed applications for the scaling down of the debts under the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. These applications will also be remanded to the trial Court for disposal.

The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 120—Applicability—Lawful holder of hereditary office enjoying emoluments—To be regarded as being in possession of office—Interference with performance of duties of office—Suit to restrain—Art. 120 not applicable.

Where a person is admittedly the lawful holder of an office and he is enjoying its emoluments, he must in law be regarded as being in possession of the office itself, especially where no one else is performing the duties of the office. He has a right to bring a suit at any time when the performance of his duties is interfered with. Every time there was interference with the plaintiff (the holder of the office of mantrapushpam) in the performance of his duties the defendants (the archakas of the temple) were guilty of a fresh wrong and the plaintiff is entitled to institute a suit to restrain the defendants whenever he thought fit and Art. 120 of the Limitation Act has no application.

Case-law discussed.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore in A. S. No. 244 of 1933—O. S. No. 180 of 1930 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Chidambaram.

K. Rajah Aiyar for Appellants.

C. Padmanabha Aiyangar and A. Srirangachariar for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—This appeal came in the first instance before Venkataramana Rao, J, but as the learned Judge was of the opinion that its decision involved the consideration of the judgments of this Court in two cases which seemingly were in conflict he adjourned the hearing in order that the appeal might be placed before a Bench. The two decisions referred to by the learned Judge were decisions of Division Benches and in consequence it was deemed advisable that the appeal should be decided by a Full Bench. The two cases referred to by the learned Judge are *Ponnu Nadar v. Kumar Reddiar*¹ and *Appa Rao v. Secretary of State for India in Council*². They will be referred to in detail presently, but as it appears to us that this appeal involves the consideration of facts which are not common to the other two cases it is necessary to set out in some detail what the facts are.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed by the first respondent in the Court of the District Munsif of Chidambaram for an injunction restraining the trustee and the archakas of the Sri Bhuvarahaswami temple at Srimushnam from interfering with the performance of the duties of his office of the mantrapushpam of the temple. The suit was dismissed by the District Munsif, but his decision was set aside on appeal by the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore and the first respondent was held to be entitled to the relief sought by him. The appellants are the archakas of the temple. The office of mantrapushpam is an hereditary one and the first respondent succeeded to it on the death of his father in 1906. He is also the holder of two other hereditary offices in this temple—the offices of kaisika puranam and arulappadu. The appeal is only concerned with the office of mantrapushpam. The holder of the office of mantrapushpam has the right to receive from archakas flowers and tulasi leaves for the purpose of consecration, which is performed by the recitation of mantrams by the mantrapushpakar while he is holding them. After the consecration the flowers and tulasi leaves are handed to an archaka who then proceeds to offer them to the deity. The emoluments of the office of mantrapushpam in this temple consist of a ball of cooked rice per diem and twelve annas per month. The first respondent is a Vadagalai and the archakas of this temple are all Thengalais; and here we have the cause of the present litigation and incidentally of other suits. The first respondent has never performed the duties of the mantrapushpam and the reason why he has not done so is also traceable to the animosity between these two sects. The Subordinate Judge has in fact held that the office of mantrapushpam has been in abeyance for over forty years. In 1918 the first respondent decided to take action with the object of preventing interference with the performance of the duties of his office and in that year he filed O. S. No. 66 of 1918 in the Court of the District Munsif, Vriddhachalam. In that suit the respondent asked for an injunction restraining the trustee from interfering with the performance by him of the duties cast upon him as the holder of all the three offices. The District Munsif granted him a mandatory injunction on the 30th June, 1920. The trustee appealed to the Subordinate Judge, but the only result was that the injunction was changed from mandatory to prohibitory in character. In these proceedings the archakas were not made parties. In 1922 the first respondent filed O. S. No. 178 of 1922 against the trustee and the archakas for an injunction preventing them from interfering with him in the performance of his office of kaisika puranam but in this suit he asked for no relief in respect of obstruction in the performance of the duties devolving on him as the holder of the other two offices. The District Munsif granted him an injunction on the 23rd July, 1924, and this was confirmed by the Subordinate Judge on appeal on the 22nd October, 1927.

On the 10th January, 1929, the first respondent filed the suit out of which this appeal arises and, as already indicated, here he sought an injunction prohibiting the trustee and the archakas from interfering with his performance of the duties of the office of mantrapushpam. It was denied by the defendants that this office was hereditary and that the first respondent was entitled to it. It was also contended that the suit as framed was bad, because there was no prayer for a declaration. The further plea that the suit was barred by limitation was also advanced. The District Munsif held that the office was hereditary and that the first respondent was entitled to it, but he upheld the other objections advanced by the defendants. He considered that the suit was bad because there was no prayer for a declaration of right to the office and that it was barred by Art. 124 of the Limitation Act. In his opinion the archakas had gained a right to the office by adverse possession. The Subordinate Judge agreed with the District Munsif that the office was hereditary and that the first respondent had a title to it, but he considered that the District Munsif erred in holding that the suit as framed could not be maintained and that it was barred by limitation. With regard to the plea of the defendants that the suit was bad because no declaration was asked for the Subordinate Judge considered that the relief sought did involve a prayer for a declaration. On the question of limitation the Subordinate Judge held that Art. 124 had no application and that there was a recurring cause of action. These are the facts as stated at the Bar and the only question which this Court has been called upon to decide is the question of limitation.

It will be here convenient to refer to the decisions in *Ponnu Nadar v. Kumaru Reddiar*¹ and *Appa Rao v. Secretary of State for India in Council*². In the first of these cases certain Nadars, in a suit filed in 1923 in the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevely, claimed that they and their castemen had a right to pass in procession over a certain route composed of public streets in the village in which they lived. The defendants were other castemen of the village who denied this right. In 1918 two attempts were made by the plaintiffs to take marriage processions along this route. In 1900 the Joint Magistrate passed an order under S. 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, directing that no organised procession of Shanars or Christians should pass along these streets until a Civil Court had declared their right to do so. The defendants contended that, inasmuch as the suit had been filed more than six years from the date of the order, it was barred by Art. 120 of the Limitation Act. The Court held that this contention must prevail and that the plaintiffs' community had for ever lost their right to file a suit to establish a right to pass along these streets in procession. The Court also considered the question whether there was here a continuing wrong and decided that there was not. While it may be that the decision to apply Art. 120 in that case is open to question—the Court is not called upon to reconsider the decision here—the facts are so very different from the facts in the present case that we are unable to regard it as having any application.

The second case, Appa Rao v. Secretary of State for India in Council, is also concerned with facts which are very different to the facts in the present case. Appa Rao v. Secretary of State for India in Council, involved the right to land which had formed the beds of certain tanks. It was held that a bare repudiation of a person's title without an overt act would not make it incumbent upon him to bring a declaratory suit. A party had, it was said, the right to elect when he could bring a suit for vindicating his right after there had been successive denials of his title. In that case an adverse order had been passed by the Collector and no action had been taken on it. The persons affected by the order were still in possession of the land and it was held that they could decide when it was necessary for them to take action to vindicate their title. The only common factor in that case and in the one now before us is the possession of the plaintiffs; in that case the plaintiffs were in possession of the land and in this case the plaintiff is in possession of the office. Certain observations in Appa Rao v. Secretary of State for India in Council, could be applied to the present case, but in view of the dissimilarity of the two cases in point of fact we prefer not to base our decision upon it.

It has been argued by Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar on behalf of the appellants that the Court should hold that in law the first respondent is not in possession of his office because he has not performed the duties thereof, but he has failed to produce any authority in support of his contention. The first respondent is admittedly the lawful holder of the office and it is common ground that he received the emoluments, month by month, until 1927. The archakas admittedly do not claim to be in possession and it is not claimed that they have performed the duties of the office. This has been made quite clear in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. It seems to us that, where a person is admittedly the lawful holder of an office and he is enjoying its emoluments, he must in law be regarded as being in possession of the office itself, especially where no one else is performing the duties of the office. We do not suggest, however, that the mere performance of the duties of the office by somebody else would constitute the person performing the duties the holder of the office. In our opinion it would not. Art. 124 of the Limitation Act has a bearing here. The article says that for a suit for possession of a hereditary office the period of limitation is twelve years from the time when the defendant takes possession of it adversely to the plaintiff, and the explanation which follows says that an hereditary office is possessed when the profits thereof are usually received or (if there are no profits) when the duties thereof are usually performed. Therefore, so far as the Limitation Act is concerned, the plaintiff has only to show that he has been in receipt of the emoluments.

In support of his argument that the archakas must be deemed to be in possession Mr. Ramaswamy Aiyar has referred to *Kamalathammal v. Krishna Pillai*¹, *Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi v. Sri Minakshi Sundareswaral Devasthanam*², *Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sokkaya Bhattar*³ and *Rajagopala Naidu v. Ramasubramania Aiyar*⁴, but the effect of these cases is that mere possession of the emoluments without the performance of the duties of the office will not give a title by adverse possession. In none of those cases was the Court concerned with the position where the lawful holder of the office is in enjoyment of the emoluments. The first respondent is admittedly the lawful holder of the office and he has been in enjoyment of the emoluments. In these circumstances how can it be said that he has not the right to bring a suit at any time when the performance of his duties is interfered with? Mr. Ramaswamy Aiyar admits that Art. 124 has no application and relies entirely on Art. 120. That article could only apply if the first respondent was bound to take action when in 1921 the archakas prevented him carrying out his duties as the mantrapushpakar. But he was not bound to take action then if it did not suit him. He could abide his time. The interference which the archakas were guilty of did not affect his position as the lawful holder of the office. If the archakas interfered on another occasion it would only give rise to another cause of action.

Many other cases have been quoted in the course of the arguments, but the only one which has any bearing is *Jalandhar Thakur v. Jharula Das*¹. That case was decided by the Privy Council. The widow of a shebait of a temple who had succeeded her deceased husband in the office mortgaged certain immovable property together with her interest in the income of the temple. The mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage and in the sale held in execution proceedings bought the mortgaged property, of which he got possession in 1892. The widow died in 1900. The suit out of which the appeal arose was filed by the plaintiff for a declaration that he was entitled to receive the share of the temple income as it was inalienable. One defence set up was that the suit was barred by limitation by reason of the provisions of Art. 124. This argument was rejected by the Judicial Committee. The suit was not one for a hereditary office. This office could not be held by a non-Brahmin and the defendant who was not a Brahmin was not competent to become the shebait and had not taken possession of the office. Adversely taking and appropriating to his own use a share of the surplus daily income from the offerings gave him no title to the office and therefore no right to a share in the income. On each occasion on which he received and wrongfully appropriated to his own use a share of the income to which the shebait was entitled he committed a fresh actionable wrong in respect of which a fresh suit could be brought against him by the shebait. In the same way everytime the archakas of the temple with which this suit is concerned interfered with the first respondent in the performance of his duties as the mantrapushpakar they were guilty of a fresh wrong.

We consider that the Subordinate Judge was quite right in holding that Art. 120 has no application and that the first respondent was entitled to institute the suit whenever he thought fit. The appeal fails and will be dismissed with costs in favour of the first respondent.

In transactions where a broker intervenes, especially in stock exchange transactions, it is extremely difficult to prove that the two parties to the contract, namely, the buyer and the seller have got any agreement that the transaction in question is in the nature of a gamble. Where the brokers acting on the instructions of the client executed his orders to buy or sell shares in the market and charged a commission for themselves, and the client did not know in any particular transaction who was the party selling to him or buying from him, and the brokers sued to recover moneys due by the client in respect of dealings so entered into,

Held, that in such a case the brokers were entitled to recover the moneys due to them and that the client was not entitled to plead that the transactions entered into by him were gaming transactions within the mischief of S. 30 of the Contract Act.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are a firm of stockbrokers carrying on business in Madras. They are Nattukottai Chetties; and so is the defendant. The plaintiffs sue for moneys due to them from the defendant arising out of a course of dealings beginning in December, 1934 and ending in March, 1935. The dealings concern Government promissory notes, mill shares and silver. The defence of the defendant is that this money is irrecoverable, it being a gaming transaction and therefore within the mischief of S. 30 of the Contract Act. It seems to me that the first thing that I have to do is to discuss the nature of the transactions and the relations of the parties to each other and find definitely what those relations were and what the transactions were. Personally I have not any doubt in my mind about the true facts. The defendant pleads that he (a resident of Pallathur which is quite near to the village from which the plaintiffs come) entered into an arrangement with them by which dealings should take place in stocks, shares and securities, but that those dealings should be so arranged that the defendant should have to pay differences only and should not be expected to take delivery or what is known as to take up stocks or shares concerned. He says that he arranged that with Mr. Palaniappa Chetty, a partner of the firm. That I may say is denied by Mr. Palaniappa Chetty who wants me to believe that he entered into dealings, and considerable dealings, with the defendant in this case purely on the strength of enquiries he made from persons in Madras, enquiries directed towards the financial state of the defendant. My own view is that that story is not true. I am prepared to accept the defendant's story, that there was some arrangement or understanding at least with the plaintiffs as to the course of business between them and my reasons are as follows. I do not believe that a firm such as the plaintiffs' firm would at a few hours' notice enter into transactions with a man about whom they knew nothing. They must have known nothing because the first order is dated 11th December, 1934, and we find them replying the next day, the 12th December, and it is extremely unlikely that satisfactory enquiries would have been possible in such a short time. Moreover, the tone of the correspondence suggests some previous arrangement. A first order usually meets with some form of comment or something to suggest that it was the beginning of dealings and a welcome to a new client. There is nothing of that sort here. I think there was an arrangement between the plaintiffs and the defendant by which the defendant intimated that he did not intend to pay anything more than differences, namely, that he was not prepared to take delivery of shares but to pay up differences only. There is another reason why I believe that story. The defendant is obviously a man of very little means but I think he is better off than he thinks he is. According to his own admission he would be good for about Rs. 5,000 at least because he has got a share in a house worth that money and I think it is very probable that it is worth more because his attitude here is to make his means as small as possible. That probabilises the fact that the plaintiffs were prepared to enter into a transaction for differences only. I am afraid I cannot accept that they made enquiries and found him worth half a lakh of rupees. They never found any source for that information and it does not appear to-day that it is possible for them to produce any material before me to show that such information was ever before them. But in my opinion it was totally unnecessary for the plaintiffs to take up this attitude because I think that this was a very ordinary stock exchange transaction. One is entitled sitting here as a judge of fact to have at least as much intelligence as a jurymen and one knows perfectly well that there is a great deal of gambling on the stock exchange and that that is not limited to any one particular town or to any one particular country and that, although it is permitted, there is now rather an exceptional amount of it in India. My findings of fact therefore are that the plaintiffs and the defendant understood that these transactions were to be on differences, namely, that the plaintiffs would close any particular transaction by settling day, so that the defendant should not have to pay or receive anything more than the differences in price. The plaintiffs knew quite well that the defendant could not possibly pay cash for these stocks, shares and Government and other securities which he purported to buy, that if he had been called upon he would have been quite unable to do it and that what he was trying to do was to make some money by catching a rise or fall in the market according to whether he was a bull or a bear of shares at a particular time. In other words, I think this case comes almost exactly within the facts decided in the case of *Thacker v. Hardy*¹. My view is that the plaintiffs were acting as brokers, that is, as agents for the defendant. All the cases—and there are many which have been cited in which, gambling transactions have come before the Courts and in which the defence of S. 30 of the Contract Act has succeeded have been, as far as I can see, with the exception of one or two Bombay cases, cases of dealings between principals and principals and they have nearly all been dealings not in stocks and shares but in commodities—cotton and commodities of that description. Now the marked difference in such transactions, is, as pointed out by the Bombay High Court in a decision reported in *Chimanlal v. Nyamatrai*¹, this that in transactions where a broker intervenes especially in stock exchange transactions, it is extremely difficult to prove that the two parties to the contract, namely, the buyer and the seller, have got any agreement that the transaction in question should be in the nature of a gamble. Neither are known to the other and it is essential that in these transactions in order to make a gamble there should be two; that one side is attempting to gamble and the other side is not, is not enough. There is ample authority for that. It is put in the headnote of the Bombay case mentioned above as follows:

"The common intention of both parties at the time of entering into the contract must be not to call for or give delivery from or to each other. Such intention is a question of fact. There can hardly be any direct evidence of it, and though an agreement in writing may ostensibly be for the purchase and sale of goods deliverable on a certain day, oral evidence is admissible to prove that the intention of the parties was only to pay the differences... . Where transactions are entered into through the medium of a broker according to the usage of a particular market, there is a very strong presumption against the existence of a common intention to wager. The presumption can be rebutted by evidence of a common intention to wager, even though the contract was brought about by a broker."

There is no doubt on the correspondence and the bought and sold notes that have been put before me that the defendant was employing the plaintiffs as his agent for the purchase and sale of shares. The very wording of the bought and sold notes shows that:

"We have this day bought by your order and for your account, from selves for principal, the undernoted securities."

"We have this day sold by your order and for your account, from selves for principal, the undernoted securities."

It is impossible in this case, in my opinion, for the defendant to suggest that the plaintiffs were not his agents. The letter (Ex. A-6) dated the 13th February, 1935, runs thus:

"Please let us have your instructions regarding the above (that is, outstanding purchase of Rs. 50,000 4 per cent. 1960-70) within the 15th instant

1. (1937) 39 Bom.L.R. 1083.

10-30 A.M. In the absence of any instructions from you, we are carrying over the same to the next settlement"

Trojan & Co.
v.
Annamalai
Chettiar.

On the 1st February, 1935, the plaintiffs are advising the defendant with regard to the future of Tata Ordinaries. In another letter of the 10th February, 1935 (Ex. A-5) the defendant writes to the plaintiffs: "Please inform me whether it is advisable to hold or to sell 3½ per cent. G. P. Notes." I have had the whole of the books of this firm put before me and it will be seen from Ex. B-2 with regard to Government securities and Ex. B-3 with regard to shares that in practically every case there was definitely another party to the contract, and all these particulars were entered in the plaintiffs' books. To take any one example from Ex. B-2, the buyer in the first place was the defendant and the seller was Padmanabhan, a person unknown to him. In the box he has been quite clear—and it could hardly be otherwise—that he at no time knew who it was from whom these people bought those shares. When their instructions were to buy, they went out into market and they bought from anybody who was a seller; when their instructions were to sell, they sold to anybody who was a buyer. It is impossible in those circumstances to suggest that as between the defendant and any of these numerous persons who he now knows were selling or buying shares to or from him as the case may be, there was any possible agreement that the transaction should be in the nature of a gambling transaction.

I have referred to the case of *Thacker v. Hardy*¹. I will refer also to the case of *Forget v. Ostigny*², where the Judicial Committee whose advice was delivered by the Lord Chancellor, points out, quoting Cotton, L. J., that:

"The essence of gaming and wagering is that one party is to win and the other to lose upon a future event, which at the time of the contract is of an uncertain nature But that is not the state of facts here. The plaintiff was to derive no gain from the transaction; his gain consisted in the commission which he was to receive, whatever might be the result of the transaction to the defendant. Therefore the whole element of gaming and wagering was absent from the contract entered into between the parties."

A number of cases have been cited to me, I propose to refer to one or two. There is a decision of this High Court in *Eshoor Doss v. Venkatasubba Rao*³, but it will be seen in that case at p. 309 that, although there was a broker in that particular case, there was a direct contract between the plaintiff and the defendant. There was a direct contract between the plaintiff and the defendant because each was making enquiries about whether the other was able or not to pay differences and they emphasize very much the exceptional circumstances where it is possible, when there is a broker, to say that the transaction is a wagering transaction. There is another decision of the Bombay High Court *Perosha Cursetji v. Manekji Dossabhoy*¹. In that case there was unquestionably in the ordinary sense of the word, a gambling transaction because there is no doubt that all that the defendant intended was to make a profit, if possible, on differences between the contract price and the price at the date of settlement. There again it was held that the defendant was no party to the contracts with the third parties with whom the plaintiff entered into contracts in order to satisfy his instructions given by the defendant, and the result was that, whatever may have been the intention of the defendant, it was not a gambling transaction because, as I have said before, it takes two to make a gamble.

I only desire to allude to one more matter in this case. It was suggested, but not very strongly, that the plaintiffs in this case are really principals because of their form of remuneration. Again, taking the first transaction in Ex. B-2, it would be seen that the notes are sold to the defendant at Rs. 97 but actually, bought at Rs. 96-15-0 and the difference of one anna is taken by the plaintiffs as their brokerage. That appears to be according to the custom in the stock exchange—personally it is no new matter to me. I think it is quite impossible in view of the books which have been produced to suggest that that incident makes the real principals dealing with the shares the plaintiffs themselves. It will be well in future transactions to define that position more clearly by perhaps exhibiting the real principals on the contracts; but I think an examination of the books and letters show that what actually happened was—and I have not the slightest doubt with regard to this—that the plaintiffs were buying in the market for their client the defendant and that the method of remunerating them was by a small difference in the price. There never was any exception taken to this certainly by the defendant and as far as I know by anybody else and I am quite unable to accede to the suggestion that in these transactions the plaintiffs were really the principals. The books, the letters and all the documents in the case are wholly opposed to that. The position shortly comes to this. This matter comes almost exactly within the decision of *Thacker v. Hardy*¹ and on my findings of fact that case mutatis mutandis may be applied to this case. The result, therefore, is that the defence must fail and there will be judgment for the plaintiffs with costs for the amount claimed but with interest at 6 per cent. only from the date of demand, which is the 23rd of May, 1935.

Where properties are mortgaged by a number of persons to secure repayment of a debt and the mortgagee purchases a portion of the properties from one of them for its full value absolutely and free from the mortgage the mortgage is not thereby split up and the mortgagee is entitled to recover the whole of the mortgage money from the other properties,

A mortgage was executed in favour of the fifth defendant by defendants 1 to 3 over two sets of properties situate in villages O and P. The properties in O belonged to 1 and 2 defendants and those in P to the third defendant. The properties of defendants 1 and 2 were purchased by the eighth defendant in execution of a money decree subsequent to the date of the mortgage. The mortgage was usufructuary but in 1922 the properties were leased to the mortgagors for five years at an annual rent of Rs. 2,109 and it was found that the lease deed created a charge over the properties for the rent that may be due and that therefore there was a mortgage and a subsequent charge created by the mortgagors on the same properties in favour of the same mortgagee. It was also found that though the lease was in favour of all mortgagors, only one of them—namely, the third defendant—enjoyed the income therefrom. He failed to pay the rent and in 1929 a sum of Rs. 19,700 was due on that account. For Rs. 15,000 out of that amount, the third defendant sold all the lands in village P to the fifth defendant (mortgagee) absolutely free from the mortgage. In 1932 the mortgage was assigned by the latter in favour of plaintiffs 1 and 2, excluding the properties in village P. It was contended that as the fifth defendant had purchased a portion of the mortgaged property, the suit mortgage had become split up and that therefore there was a pro tanto extinction of the debt and the mortgagors (1 and 2 defendants) were entitled to redeem the suit property on payment of only a proportionate part of the amount apportionable on the properties in village O.

Held, that the mortgagors (1 and 2 defendants) are not entitled to such reduction. The last clause of S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act would not apply so as to entitle them to claim redemption of their property on payment of only a proportionate part of the debt, as the mortgagee had acquired not merely the equity of redemption but also the full ownership in a part of the security by purchasing it free of the mortgage. For the exception to S. 60 to operate, two conditions are necessary,

(i) the acquisition must be as a mortgagee, that is, as holder of the mortgage, and

(ii) what is acquired should be the share of the mortgagor.

Where a mortgagee purchases (as here) the property free of his mortgage and pays the full value of the property, the substance of the transaction is that the mortgagee gives up his mortgage right and purchases the property as if it were unencumbered property paying the full value therefor. By such release the property ceases to be the subject of the mortgage and the acquisition by the mortgagee would be like an acquisition by a stranger and not qua mortgagee.

The Kustea Loan Office, Ltd. v. Ananda Charan Chackrabartty, (1922) 27 C.W.N. 763 and other Calcutta cases distinguished on the ground that according to the Calcutta High Court it is not open to a mortgagee to release a portion of the mortgaged property when the rights of third parties intervene but in Madras after Perumal Pillai v. Raman Chettiar, (1917) 33 M.L.J. 211: I. L.R. 40 Mad. 968 (F.B.), he can release his right over any portion and proceed for the entirety of the debt against the rest of the property.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Arcot dated 25th September, 1936, in O. S. No. 5 of 1935.

T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K. V. Ramachandra Aiyar for Appellants.

V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, T. E. Ramabhadrachariar, K. Rama Aiyangar and C. Padmanabha Aiyangar for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Venkata-
ramana
Rao, J.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned District Judge of South Arcot in a suit to enforce a mortgage dated 29th November, 1919, executed by defendants 1 to 3 in favour of the fifth defendant. This deed of mortgage Ex. A was assigned by a deed of assignment Ex. C dated 9th January, 1932, in favour of the third plaintiff who was a benamidar for plaintiffs 1 and 2. The fourth defendant is the son of the first defendant; the sixth defendant is the fifth defendant's wife; the seventh defendant is the undivided son of the fifth defendant; and the eighth defendant is a purchaser in Court auction of the suit properties in execution of a money decree against defendants 1 and 2 subsequent to the date of the mortgage. The ninth defendant is the Official Receiver who was added as a party since the date of the suit as the representative of the first defendant who was adjudged an insolvent. The sum sought to be recovered in the suit was Rs. 20,000 which is the amount secured under the said mortgage. The main defence of the eighth defendant who became the purchaser of the right, title and interest of the first defendant in the suit properties in execution of a money decree was that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 20,000 but only Rs. 11,111-1-9. The defence of defendants 5 to 7 was that they were not liable for the suit claim. To understand the plea of the eighth defendant a few facts are necessary. The mortgage Ex. A comprises two sets of properties: (1) the properties situate in the village of Orathur which belonged to defendants 1 and 2, and (2) the properties in Perumbakkam village which belonged to the third defendant. The mortgage is usufructuary and provided that the mortgagee should enjoy the properties in lieu of interest and there is a clause which provides for redemption to this effect:

"We shall pay the said sum in any month of Chitrai when you may choose to ask for the amount, or when we desire to pay the amount and redeem the properties. In default, we agree that the amount may be received by process of Court."

On the 25th November, 1922, by a registered lease the said properties were leased to the mortgagors for a period of five years stipulating an annual rent of Rs. 2,109. In default of payment of rent it was provided in the deed that the lessor was entitled to recover the balance of the amount due and payable with interest at one per cent. per mensem from the lessees personally and also from and out of the properties leased, but by a later clause the personal liability of the second defendant and the fourth defendant was excluded and it was stipulated that only the properties would be liable. There can be no doubt that this document creates a charge over the properties leased, that is the properties mortgaged under Ex. A, for the rent that may be due and payable thereunder. It is also stated that an intermediate charge was created over the property in favour of the fifth defendant's son-in-law benami for the fifth defendant but it does not appear from the record what the nature of that charge was and when it was redeemed, and for the purpose of this appeal we have to proceed upon the footing that on the same properties there was a mortgage and a subsequent charge created by the mortgagors in favour of the same plaintiff under the said lease. Any decision that we give here will be without prejudice to the rights and obligations that may be enforceable under any such intermediate charge if any subsisting. It appears that although the property was leased to all the mortgagors only the third defendant enjoyed the income from the mortgaged property. But he failed to pay the rent and on the 27th September, 1929, there was a sum of Rs. 19,700 due and payable. For a sum of Rs. 15,000, part of the said sum of Rs. 19,700, the third defendant sold all the lands in Perumbakkam village by a sale deed Ex. I dated 27th September, 1929, mortgaged under Ex. A to the fifth defendant absolutely. The operative portion of the said deed runs thus:

"Deducting the balance due to you is Rs. 19,700. Out of this amount you have agreed to give credit to a portion, namely, Rs. 15,000. As I have received the said sum in that manner I have in lieu thereof hereby sold to you absolutely the undermentioned properties belonging to me and in my possession and have delivered possession. You shall hold and enjoy the undermentioned properties from this day forwards with rights of alienation such as gift and sale. To this effect have I executed this deed of absolute sale with consent."

On a perusal of the deed there can be no doubt that the third defendant conveyed the said property to the fifth defendant free from encumbrances to be enjoyed by the fifth defendant with full powers of alienation. What the effect of this conveyance on the rights of the parties is we shall consider later. On the 9th January, 1932, the sixth defendant, the wife of the fifth defendant purchased from Maria Susai Reddiar and his son, the first and second plaintiffs herein, certain properties for a sum of Rs. 35,000. Part of the consideration, namely, a sum of Rs. 15,000 was paid by way of execution of a promissory note by the fifth defendant in favour of the vendors. In regard to the balance of Rs. 20,000 the consideration was said to have been paid thus:

"I have also received Rs. 20,000 in respect of the assignment of the usufructuary mortgage debt bond for Rs. 20,000 executed this day by your husband Eswara Krishna Aiyar in favour of my wife Rose Mary Ammal at my instance—the said usufructuary mortgage debt bond having been executed on 29th November, 1919, by Orathur Duraiswami Reddi and others in the name of your husband for Rs. 20,000.”

It is conceded that the sixth defendant was only a benami-dar for the fifth defendant. The usufructuary mortgage in favour of the fifth defendant was assigned in favour of the wife of Susai Reddi as part of the consideration Rs. 20,000. This was effected by a deed of assignment Ex. C bearing the same date. In the deed of assignment it is clearly stated that the properties in Perumbakkam were excluded and the operative portion of the assignment deed ran thus:

“I have assigned to you the undermentioned usufructuary mortgage bond and have given to you my rights under the said usufructuary bond as per its terms excepting the properties in Perumbakkam village. You shall yourself enjoy the undermentioned properties from this day forward.”

It is on the strength of Ex. C that the present suit was filed. The contention of the eighth defendant that he is not liable to pay the sum of Rs. 20,000 is thus stated by him in paras. 5 and 6 of his written statement:

“5. Since the fifth defendant under whom the present plaintiffs claim a right to the suit mortgage has purchased a portion of the mortgaged property as stated in para. 4 above even before the date of the alleged assignment, the suit mortgage as well as the mortgage referred to in para. 3 have become split up and portions of the mortgage debts (in proportion to the value of the properties purchased by the fifth defendant) have become extinguished.”

“6. On the date of the suit mortgage, and on the date of the mortgage referred to in para. 3 above, items 1 to 89 were worth Rs. 20,000; 4/9th of the suit debt became therefore extinguished and so only 5/9th of the amount, namely, Rs. 11,111-1-9 only can be recovered out of items 1 to 89 in Sch. II-A. In any event irrespective of the question as to whether any portion of the debt became extinguished since the mortgage has split up for the reasons stated in para. 5 above, the plaintiffs will not be entitled to recover the whole amount from items 1 to 88 only. The plaintiffs can recover from these items only the proportionate amount of the debt, namely, 5/9th which amounts to Rs. 11,111-1-9.”

In effect the substance of the contention is that by the fifth defendant purchasing the Perumbakkam properties the integrity of the mortgage was broken up and there was a pro tanto extinction of the debt and the mortgagors, defendants 1 and 2, were entitled to redeem the suit property only on payment of a proportionate amount, namely, Rs. 11,111-1-9. The learned District Judge has given effect to this contention and given a mortgage decree against the suit properties only for a sum of Rs. 11,000 and odd and in respect of the balance he gave a decree against the fifth defendant on the ground that there was a covenant for title under Ex. C in and by which he covenanted that Rs. 20,000 was recoverable from the suit properties and as there was a breach of that covenant the plaintiffs were entitled to get the balance from the fifth defendant. This appeal is preferred by defendants 5 and 7.

Two contentions have been advanced by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar their learned counsel: (1) the purchase by the fifth defendant under Ex. I of the Perumbakkam properties from the third defendant was a purchase for full value of the entirety of the property free of the mortgage under Ex. A and not merely of the equity of redemption and therefore the last clause of S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act would not apply so as to entitle defendants 1 and 2 to claim redemption of their property on payment of only a proportionate part of the debt and the plaintiffs would therefore be entitled to recover the entire amount of the mortgage from the suit properties; and (2) the decree against the fifth defendant is wrong because there was no covenant for title given by him under the assignment Ex. C. In regard to the first contention Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar put his case thus: where the mortgagee does not acquire merely the equity of redemption but acquires the full ownership in a part of the security, whether its full value or part thereof is or is not utilised for the reduction of the mortgage debt, the part security having fetched its full value from the mortgagee-purchaser the remedies of the mortgagee as such regarding the balance due are not affected at all either as regards the mortgage amount that may remain payable or the entirety of the remainder of the properties left as security against which he may proceed; S. 60 has no application to such cases. He also urged that it is open to the mortgagee to release his mortgage right over any portion of the security and the substance of the transaction evidenced by Ex. I must amount to a release of the mortgage right under Ex. A and purchase of the property free of that mortgage right in full satisfaction of a debt which is common to both the mortgagors and whatever rights of contribution defendants 1 and 2 may have in respect of Perumbakkam properties the rights of the mortgagee and therefore of his assignee to proceed against the properties of defendants 1 and 2 cannot be affected by the fifth defendant's purchase. The contention of Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar on behalf of the eighth defendant is that a right of partial redemption conferred under the last clause of S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act is separate altogether from any question about the amount on the payment of which alone such partial redemption could be obtained and the moment in any manner or by any means a share in the equity of redemption becomes vested by acquisition in the mortgagee, the mortgagor or any one of the mortgagors gets the right of asking for and obtaining partial redemption.

Before dealing with the soundness of these contentions it will be necessary to examine the scope of the last clause of S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act which runs thus:

"Nothing in this section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property to redeem his own share only on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, except only where a mortgagee, or if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees, has or have acquired in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor."

This clause is based on the principle that a mortgage is indivisible and it has to be redeemed entirely or not at all. Where there is a mortgage for an entire sum and properties belonging to one or several owners are secured thereunder, it is not open to a mortgagor or one of several mortgagors to redeem an item or his share only on payment of a proportionate part of the debt because there is only "one mortgage, one debt and one entire right against all," whether against persons or properties. The only exception provided by the clause is where a mortgagee acquires the share of the mortgagor. Two conditions are necessary for the exception to operate, namely:

- (1) the acquisition must be as a mortgagee, that is, as holder of the mortgage, and
- (2) what is acquired should be the share of the mortgagor.

The question is what is meant by the words "share of the mortgagor". In the context it can only mean the interest of the mortgagor outstanding after the creation of the mortgage, that is, the ownership of the property minus the interest vested in the mortgagee and according to legal phraseology it would be the equity of redemption, that is, a right to redeem a particular mortgage. The equity of redemption is a relative term and will vary according as there are one or more mortgages of the same property. Thus according to the plain meaning of the language of the clause there must be an acquisition of the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property or part thereof by a mortgagee qua mortgagee. In the case of such acquisition the clause provides that a person interested in a share of the mortgaged property can redeem his share on payment of a proportionate part of the debt. Here the question arises who is meant by a person interested in a share of the mortgaged property? Again, the plain meaning of the clause suggests that it is only applicable to cases where the mortgaged property is owned or become absolutely owned by several co-sharers or owned in distinct and separate ownerships by more than one mortgagor. In the case of a single mortgagor where rights of third parties do not intervene whether it is a single individual or a group of individuals constituting an entity the application of the clause presents no difficulty. It is only in the former class of cases questions really do arise in regard to the rights in the mortgaged property becoming vested in more than one person. It may be necessary in this connection to examine the reason why an exception is made to the general rule that the redemption must be of an entirety of the property in cases where the mortgagee acquires a share of the mortgagor. When the mortgagee acquires the equity of redemption he steps into the shoes of the mortgagor in respect of the property purchased subject to the mortgage in his favour. There is thus a fusion of interests of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee and the mortgage becomes extinguished. The result of the extinguishment is that the mortgage debt over that property is wiped out, though every parcel of the mortgaged property so far as the mortgagee is concerned is liable for the entire mortgage debt but as between the mortgaged properties they are liable to contribute rateably to the debt (S. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act). This principle would apply as between the mortgagors inter se. As the mortgagee by purchase of the equity of redemption becomes a mortgagor in respect of the property purchased, the principle would apply also against him by virtue of his taking the character of a mortgagor in respect of a portion of the property. The extent of the debt that is wiped out will be proportionate to the relative value of the property purchased. In the case of a single mortgagor or where there is more than one mortgagor, with their consent, when the mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption in an item or a part of the property, no question of partial or piecemeal redemption would arise because the rest of the property would still be owned by the mortgagor or mortgagors and it would be liable for the remainder of the mortgage debt. It may be said that the rest of the property is "the share of the mortgagor" within the meaning of the section. It does not matter whether the equity of redemption is purchased in execution of a decree against a mortgagor or by private treaty. The principle applicable would be the same in both cases. [Vide *Bisheshur Dial v. Ram Sarup*¹ (execution sale), *Ponnambala Pillai v. Annamalai Chettiar*² (execution sale) and *Mutty Lal Pal v. Nandu Lal Neogi*³ (private treaty).] Where a person interested in the mortgaged property is not the mortgagor alone and before the purchase of equity of redemption portions of the mortgaged property become vested in third parties or where the mortgagee purchases from a co-sharer his share or an item of property from an owner who held it in distinct ownership, not only is the debt pro tanto extinguished but the owners of different items will be entitled to redeem the properties on payment of the proportionate part of the debt. There is no doubt about the applicability of this rule. The same principle would apply in whatsoever manner the equity of redemption is acquired by the mortgagee, that is, by inheritance—*Hamida Bibi v. Ahmad Hussain*⁴,—or by devise.

The next question arises in the case of a mortgagee purchasing the entire interest in the mortgaged property free of the mortgage. Mookerjee, J., in *Mir Eusuff Ali Haji v. Panchanan Chatterjee*⁵, expressed the opinion that if the sale was of the property, free of the mortgage and the intention of the parties was that the mortgagee should hold the portion transferred to him free from the mortgage debt and the purchase money should be applied in redemption of his dues, it would obviously be erroneous to maintain that the mortgagee was still bound to apportion the debt. There he was dealing with a case where the purchase was by the mortgagee from the mortgagor when the rights of no third parties intervened. Applying the principle which he enunciated he remarked thus.

"In the case before us it is clear from the conveyance executed by the mortgagors in favour of the mortgagee that the price paid by the latter was intended to represent the value of the entire interest and not merely of the equity of redemption. It was further intended that this purchase money should be applied in reduction of the debt and that the mortgagee should hold the property purchased free from the mortgage lien. It is not open to the mortgagors therefore to claim credit for a larger amount than what was fixed as the purchase money and as between the mortgagors and the mortgagee, the latter is entitled to hold the property exempt from the mortgage lien. The appellants who are purchasers of the interest of the mortgagors in the other properties stand in no higher position; they have consequently no legitimate ground for complaining that the mortgagee seeks to throw the burden of the remainder of the mortgage debt upon the properties in their hands."

No doubt in that case the agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee was that the purchase money should go in the reduction of the mortgage debt. It was open to the mortgagor and the mortgagee to come to any agreement in regard to the satisfaction of the debt. Therefore where the transaction is solely between the mortgagor and the mortgagee it may be there is no scope for the apportionment of the debt as the matter rests on contract between the parties. But the question is, can the principle enunciated by Mookerjee, J., be extended even to a case where the matter does not rest between the mortgagor and the mortgagee and third parties such as co-mortgagors or purchasers of the equity of redemption of a portion of the mortgaged property are interested in the mortgaged property? When a mortgagee purchases the property free of his mortgage and pays the full value of the property, the substance of the transaction is that the mortgagee gives up his mortgage right and purchases the property as if it were an unencumbered property paying the full value therefor. The acquisition by the mortgagee in such a case would be not as a mortgagee. If the acquisition is viewed as an acquisition by the mortgagee in the character of a mortgagee it would mean that the mortgagee was also purchasing his own interest. Therefore the transaction can only be viewed as a release of his mortgage right and then a purchase by him. Mookerjee, J., in *Mir Eusuff Ali Haji v. Panchanan Chatterjee*¹, was inclined to the view that when the rights of third parties intervene, it is not open to a mortgagee to give up his mortgage right over any portion of the mortgaged property. But our High Court has taken a different view. In the Full Bench decision in *Perumal Pillai v. Raman Chettiar*², it was definitely ruled that it is open to a mortgagee to release his right over any portion of the mortgaged property and proceed against the rest of the mortgaged property, for the entirety of the debt though the effect of such a release would not affect the right of contribution which the owners of several portions of the mortgaged properties will have under the law, and the fact that third parties are interested in the property would not affect the right of the mortgagee to do so. It was conceded at the Bar that it is open to a mortgagee to release his right in respect of an item or part of the property and some time later become a purchaser of that item or part in which case no question of pro tanto extinguishment of the debt would arise at all. The principle is that once the right of the mortgagee is released, the property ceases to be the subject of the mortgage and the acquisition by the mortgagee would therefore be just like an acquisition by any other stranger acquiring the property. In *Sesha Aiyar v. Krishna Aiyangar*¹, there was a purchase by a second mortgagee of a portion of the mortgaged property held in distinct ownership by more than one mortgagor in execution of a decree on a prior mortgage over the said property. It was held that by such acquisition the integrity of his mortgage was not broken. In the course of the judgment it was observed thus:

1. (1910) 15 C.W.N. 800.

"It being granted that the plaintiffs (second mortgagee) with regard to their purchase at the sale of Rangayya Goundan's decree (first mortgage) must be treated as strangers and that the whole property free from encumbrance and free from plaintiffs' right of redemption was put up for sale and bought, we can see no ground for holding that their claim under their mortgage is in any way impaired."

The learned Judges explain the principle thus:

"The cases in which the property has been sold and bought subject to the mortgage which it is sought to enforce are clearly distinguishable from the present case in which the purchasers, though they happened to be mortgagees must be taken to have paid the full value of the unencumbered property."

No doubt it may be contended that when a purchase is made in execution of a first mortgage and when all the persons interested in the mortgaged property are parties to it, the sale will be of the entire interest in the property, namely, not only the first mortgagee's interest in the property but also the interest of the mortgagor which was outstanding on that mortgage which would include also the rights of the second mortgagee who must be taken to stand in the shoes of the mortgagor so far as the first mortgage is concerned. The purchase may in effect be said to be in derogation of the second mortgagee's right and not as second mortgagee. But if the section were to be interpreted literally as contended for by Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, the second mortgagee must be deemed to have acquired the share of the mortgagor within the meaning of the section. Therefore the principle underlying the decision shows that it is not in every case a purchaser acquiring the mortgaged property or a portion thereof must be deemed to be acquiring the share of the mortgagor within the meaning of S. 60 but it is only in cases where the mortgagee in the character of a mortgagee acquires the equity of redemption outstanding in the mortgagor. Therefore if before or at the time of acquisition the mortgagee renounces his character of mortgagee and purchases the property, the last clause of S. 60 would have no application. The principle enunciated by Mookerjee, J., need not be confined only to cases where the agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee is that the amount paid should go in satisfaction of the mortgage debt. It would be open to the mortgagor to agree that the amount paid for the purchase might go in reduction of any debt due to the mortgagee unconnected with the mortgage. *The Kustea Loan Office, Ltd. v. Annada Charan Chackrabartty*¹ is a case in point. In that case a certain property was acquired by Government under the Land Acquisition Act and the compensation money was deposited into Court. With the consent of the mortgagors the amount was allowed to be appropriated in respect of their unsecured debts and Ghose, J., in the course of the judgment explained the substance of the transaction thus:

"Before any third person had acquired any interest in any portion of the mortgaged property the mortgagees were entitled, if they so desired, to pay the whole amount of the compensation money to the mortgagors. They would thereby have reduced their own security and the interest of no other person would have been affected in any way. What happened in this case practically amounts to this that the mortgagees made over a part of the compensation money to the mortgagors and the mortgagors paid it back to the mortgagees in satisfaction of their unsecured debts."

In effect what the learned Judge says is that the mortgagees must be deemed to have released their rights over the mortgaged property and received the compensation money from the mortgagors. No doubt Ghose, J., says that this could not be done where third parties are interested because the view of the Calcutta High Court as already stated is that it is not open to the mortgagee to release a portion of the mortgaged property when the rights of third parties intervene. But as that is not the law so far as this Presidency is concerned the principle of the decision would apply without any qualification suggested by Ghose, J. No doubt the mortgagee in possession of the property as owner thereof would not be in a position to resist a suit for contribution at the instance of a co-mortgagor or a person owning other portions of the mortgaged property. But that would not affect the right of the mortgagee to recover the entirety of the debt from the rest of the mortgaged property and if he can do so there is nothing to prevent him assigning that right and the assignee by virtue of the assignment recovering the entirety of the debt from the rest of the mortgaged property. If the mortgagee sues, a claim for contribution by way of set off may be open against him.

Having regard to these principles the question in this case will have to be dealt with. Under Ex. I there can be no doubt that the fifth defendant purchased the property free from encumbrances from the third defendant. The purchase was in effect free not only of the mortgage under Ex. A but also free of the charge under the lease. Fifth defendant must therefore be deemed to have released his right under Ex. A over the said property. No doubt his liability for contribution as owner of the Perumbakkam property to defendants 1 and 2 as owners of Orathur property will remain unaffected. But the fifth defendant's right as mortgagee to release the entirety of the debt from the Orathur property cannot be questioned and whatever rights he had under Ex. A he assigned them under Ex. C. In our opinion therefore the assignee the third plaintiff would be entitled to recover and realise the entire amount of Rs. 20,000 from the Orathur property. We are also of the opinion that if the mortgaged property be found insufficient, the third plaintiff would be entitled to realise the balance personally from defendants 1 to 3. Though the fifth defendant has given up his right over the Perumbakkam village, still the right of the third defendant to personally pay the mortgage money under Ex. A has not been released and he will be bound to pay the balance. In this view it is unnecessary now to consider the extent of the obligations of the fifth defendant under Ex. C. Our decision in this case would leave unaffected the right of defendants 1, 2 and 8 to claim contribution from the fifth defendant by reason of his being the owner of the Perumbakkam properties. All these matters will have to be adjudged in a separate suit. We are of the opinion that it is not open to defendants 1 and 2 to claim redemption by paying only a proportionate part of the debt nor for the eighth defendant who has purchased their right and interest to resist the plaintiffs' claim for the recovery of the entire sum from the properties in his possession.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree against defendants 5 and 7 and modify the decree of the learned District Judge against defendants 1 to 3 and 8 by granting a mortgage decree against them for the amount claimed in the plaint, but in the circumstances of this case we are not inclined to allow any costs to the appellants.

Criminal procedure—Arrest without warrant and release on bail—Appearance in pursuance of summons after filing of charge-sheet—Objection to jurisdiction of magistrate on the ground of illegality of arrest—Maintainability.

On a complaint for criminal breach of trust committed within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Magistrate, Saidapet, the petitioner was arrested within Bangalore cantonment. The arrest was illegal as there was no warrant. But the petitioner was released on bail and after the charge-sheet was filed a summons was issued for his appearance without reference to the prior proceedings. He appeared and took objection to the competency of the Sub-Magistrate to try the case on the ground that the arrest was illegal.

Held, the petitioner appeared of his own accord and the propriety of his earlier arrest had no bearing on the proceedings initiated by the summons. Even otherwise the want of legality in regard to the arrest cannot affect the jurisdiction of the Sub-Magistrate to inquire into the offence committed within his jurisdiction.

Petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Saidapet dated 29th April, 1940, and passed in C. C. No. 935 of 1940.

A. S. Nataraja Aiyar for Petitioner.

A. S. Sivakaminathan for The Public Prosecutor for the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The petitioner was a resident of Tiruvattiyur and a complaint of criminal breach of trust was received against him. He was arrested by the Sub-Inspector of Tiruvattiyur at Bangalore (Civil and Military Station) without a warrant on 27th December, 1939, and produced before the First Class Magistrate there on 28th December. The Magistrate remanded him to the custody of the Sub-Inspector for production before the Sub-Magistrate of Saidapet on 30th December, and he was produced before the Sub-Magistrate of Saidapet on 30th December. The Sub-Magistrate remanded him for ten days to enable the police to complete the investigation, and an application for bail was moved the next day. The petitioner was released on bail on 31st December, and he returned to Bangalore. The charge-sheet was filed on 5th March, 1940, and a summons was issued for the appearance of the petitioner on 20th March. The petitioner appeared on 20th March and the case was adjourned to 30th March for inquiry as it stood posted to 20th March only for apprehension of the petitioner. The case was then adjourned to 3rd April and objection was taken on that day to the competency of the Sub-Magistrate to try the case on the ground that the arrest of the petitioner at Bangalore on 27th December was illegal. The objection was overruled and hence this petition.

The arrest of the petitioner on 27th December was undoubtedly illegal, but the petitioner was released on bail on 31st December and he returned to Bangalore thereafter. The charge-sheet was filed on 5th March and a summons was issued for the appearance of the petitioner on 20th March without reference to the prior proceedings. The petitioner appeared of his own accord on that day and the propriety of his arrest on 27th December has no bearing on the present proceedings. Even otherwise it cannot affect the jurisdiction of the Sub-Magistrate to inquire into the offence under S. 406 of the Indian Penal Code committed by the petitioner within his jurisdiction—vide *Emperor v. Vinayak Damodar Savarkar*¹ and the objection was rightly overruled.

The petition therefore fails and is accordingly dismissed.

Criminal trial—Charge of murder—Plea of self-defence—Onus of proof—Clear evidence that accused inflicted the fatal wound—Absence of explanation by prosecution witnesses as to how accused came by his wounds—Effect—Severity of wounds received by accused—If reason for mitigating punishment.

Where the accused in a murder trial sets up a plea of self-defence, the burden lies on him under S. 105 of the Evidence Act to prove it and in the absence of proof it is not possible for the Court to presume the truth of the plea of self-defence. When the evidence is clear that it was the accused who inflicted the fatal wounds upon the deceased it is not possible to reject that evidence merely because the prosecution witnesses do not explain how the accused himself came by his injuries. The severe injuries which the accused himself received cannot be a reason for mitigating his punishment.

Trial referred by the Court of Sessions of the Cuddapah division for confirmation of the sentence of death passed upon the said prisoner in C. C. No. 1 of 1940 on 8th February, 1940 and appeal by the prisoner against the said sentence passed upon him in the said case.

P. Sivaramakrishnayya for Accused.

The Public Prosecutor for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Burn, J.

Burn, J.—The appellant has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Cuddapah and sentenced to death for the murder of one Bitti Chennugadu alias Laddugadu on the 19th August, 1939.

Bitti Chennugadu was undoubtedly murdered on the 19th August at Buggalapalli where he lives. According to the evidence for the prosecution, P. Ws. 3, 4 and 5 and the accused were engaged at about noon in skinning a cow by the side of the Cuddapah-Rayachoti road. At that time Chennugadu, it is said, came and objected to their skinning the cow in that place because it was stinking and because it would provoke the anger of any inspecting officer who might come. He threatened to go and report the matter to the Village Munsif and so saying he turned away. When he had gone a few steps, the accused is said to have run after him and stabbed him in the back with the knife which he was using to skin the carcass. Chennugadu ran a few yards further away but the accused pursued him and stabbed him twice in the back and twice in front. The evidence of the doctor who made the post mortem examination the next day (P. W. 1) shows that one of the stabs inflicted from the front penetrated his heart and must have caused death instantaneously.

gadu,
In re.
Burn, J.

Besides the evidence of P. Ws. 3, 4 and 5 there was the evidence of P. W. 2 a brother of the deceased. He said that he was standing near a shop belonging to one Adam Sab which is close to the scene of the offence. He said that he saw two stabs inflicted. The Village Munsif was informed by one Dhollavadu (he lives half a furlong away). The Village Munsif took a statement (Ex. B) from P. W. 2 at about 2 P.M. and reported the occurrence to the police station at Cuddapah which is about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles away. The Sub-Inspector of Police reached the village by 7-30 P.M. and held an inquest the same night.

The accused in the Sub-Magistrate's Court said that he knew nothing about the matter and in the Sessions Court also said that he had never seen the deceased and P. W. 2 but he filed a statement in writing in which he said that the deceased Chennugadu, Venkatasubbadu and others beat him with stones and sticks and, being unable to bear that, he himself had beaten to protect himself. It was a fact that the accused was very severely injured on the same day. The Village Munsif found him lying unconscious in front of his own house when he, the Village Munsif, was coming towards the scene of the crime. The investigating officer (P. W. 14) found him lying still in the same place when he reached the village. He made arrangements to send him to the hospital and the Resident Medical Officer (P. W. 6) examined him the next day. He had four lacerated wounds on his head, an incised wound on his left ear and abrasions on his shoulder and side. He was unconscious at the time the Doctor saw him and the doctor says that he remained unconscious for 2 or 3 days. He was suffering from concussion of the brain and his own life was in danger for a considerable time. He was not discharged from the hospital till the 7th October, 1939. The mother of the accused preferred a complaint to the Sub-Inspector the same night on behalf of her son against P. Ws. 2 and 3 others. The Sub-Inspector says that after investigation he referred that complaint and it does not appear that any further proceedings were taken on it by the mother of the accused.

The prosecution witnesses do not explain these injuries on the person of the accused and learned counsel has invited us to discard the evidence of the prosecution witnesses for that reason. It is clear, he says, that they have not given a full or wholly truthful account of what happened and therefore they ought not to be believed. This plea however cannot be accepted in the face of the accused's own statement that he caused the injuries on the person of the deceased in self-defence. Having set up the plea of self-defence the burden lay on him under S. 105 of the Evidence Act to prove it and in the absence of proof it is not possible for the Court to presume the truth of the plea of self-defence. One witness was examined for the defence (the District Medical Officer of Cuddapah). He apparently was examined because some attempt was made in the Sessions Court to show that the accused was not in his right mind. The doctor's evidence however did not show that he was insane either at the time the offence was committed or at the time the trial took place. P. W. 3 when questioned about the injuries on the person of the accused said: "Later on I saw the accused fallen near his dayadi's house. He had injuries. I do not know how they were caused. I heard that he got them subsequent to the murder. I did not go near the accused." As the learned Sessions Judge has pointed out, this is not itself evidence that the accused received his injuries after he had murdered the deceased. But it is not at all improbable that that was the case. When the evidence is clear that it was the accused who inflicted the fatal wounds upon the deceased, it is not possible to reject that evidence merely because the prosecution witnesses do not explain how the accused himself came by his injuries. The accused has been properly convicted of the offence of murder and we cannot consider that the severe injuries which he himself received are a reason for mitigating his punishment. The attack upon the deceased was deliberate and was pursued to a fatal end.

We confirm the conviction for murder and also the sentence of death and dismiss this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Suit by a member to set aside alienations by manager and for recovery of his share therein—If operates as a division in status—Such a suit if a suit for partition—Alienation by a member of his share in whole of joint family property or part thereof—If makes him a divided member.

A coparcener can become separate in estate by an unambiguous declaration of his intention to separate him-self from the family and the intention to become separate may be evidenced in many different ways either by explicit declaration or by conduct. The institution of a suit for partition by a member of the joint family against the other members will be a manifestation of such intention. But where a suit is in substance not one for partition but to set aside an alienation by the father or a managing member other than the father and for recovery of possession of the plaintiff's share in the property alienated, the inference of an unequivocal intention to separate from the family which a suit for partition in the technical sense of the term in Hindu law gives rise to cannot follow.

An alienation by a member of his share in the whole of the joint family property or in any part thereof would not sever his status from the family and make him a divided member in respect of the property alienated.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry dismissing the plaintiffs' suit for possession of a half share in certain immovable properties described in Sch. B to the plaint. The said property admittedly belonged to one Suryanarayanaraju and his son Venkatapatiraju. It is the plaintiffs' case that the said property was leased in 1868 by Suryanarayanaraju as the father and head of the joint family consisting of himself and his son Venkatapatiraju for a period of fifty years, that subsequent to the said lease the said Suryanarayanaraju and Venkatapatiraju became divided in status, that Venkatapatiraju was entitled in severalty to a half share in the said property, and that on the death of his widow Butchi Bangarayya on 21st January, 1927, the first plaintiff became entitled to the said property as the next reversioner. The defendants trace their title to the entirety of the said property to the father Suryanarayanaraju who alienated the reversion in the said lands. Their case is that there was no division in status between the father and the son and on the death of the son the whole property survived to the father by survivorship and he was competent to alienate the same and confer a good title upon them. They also deny the relationship of the first plaintiff to Venkatapatiraju. Two questions fell to be decided by the lower Court (1) whether the first plaintiff was the next reversioner to Venkatapatiraju and (2) whether there was a division in status between Venkatapatiraju and his father Suryanarayanaraju. On the first question the learned Subordinate Judge held that the first plaintiff had not made out his title as the next reversioner; but on the second question the learned Subordinate Judge held that there was a division in status between Venkatapatiraju and his father Suryanarayanaraju by reason of the judgment and decree in O. S. No. 8 of 1878 on the file of the District Court, Godavari. As an adverse finding on either of the issues entailed a dismissal of the plaintiff's suit, the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit.

The first plaintiff died during the pendency of the suit. Plaintiffs 2 and 3 are alienees of a portion of the suit property from the first plaintiff subsequent to the death of Butchi Bangarayya. Plaintiffs 4 and 5 were brought on record as the legal representatives of the first plaintiff. This appeal is by plaintiffs 3, 4 and 5. There is also a memorandum of objections by the alienee defendants objecting to the finding as to division in status.

The main point urged by Mr. Vallabhacharyulu on behalf of the appellants is that the learned Judge in the Court below in arriving at the finding regarding relationship has not given due effect to two important documents in the case, namely, Exs. AA and Z-11. He contends that the oral and documentary evidence were not properly appreciated by the learned Judge. The plaintiffs have filed a pedigree which we give herein:

subbaraya Sastri
v.
Venkata
Appala-narasimha-
raju.
Venkata-
ramana
Rao, J.

[The learned Judges discussed the evidence and held that Venkatakrishnamaraju I and Goparaju were brothers, that therefore the first plaintiff's title as the next reversioner to the properties of Venkatapatiraju III on the death of Butchi Bangarayya was made out and set aside the finding of the Court below on this point.]

The learned Advocate-General who appeared for the alienees did not advance any argument which would enable us to come to a different conclusion on this matter but he contended that apart from this finding if he could show that the son died undivided from his father, the plaintiffs would be out of Court and that the finding of the learned Judge that the decree and judgment in the prior litigation operated as a severance in status was wrong. We are inclined to think that this contention is well founded. It is now settled law that a coparcener can become separate in estate by an unambiguous declaration of his intention to separate himself from the family. It is enough for us to refer to the latest decision of the Privy Council in *Ram Narain Sahu v. Musammat Makhana*¹, where Sir George Rankin cites with approval the following passage from the judgment of Sir George Lowndes in *Bal Krishna v. Ram Krishna*¹:

"It is now settled law that a separation may be effected by a clear and unequivocal intimation on the part of one member of a joint Hindu family to his co-sharers of his desire to sever himself from the joint family. This was laid down in *Swraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain*². The question was further examined in *Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj*³ and the principle was re-affirmed."

In *Girja Bai's case*³, after pointing out that a separation involving the severance of joint status is distinct from the de facto division into specific shares of the joint property their Lordships proceeded to explain that

"The former was a matter of individual decision, the desire on the part of any one member to sever himself from the joint family and to enjoy his hitherto undefined or unspecified share separately from the others without being subject to the obligations which arise from the joint status."

Thus the test laid down is the intention to sever oneself from the joint family. The question we have therefore to determine is, did the son intend to sever himself from the father? As pointed out in *Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj*³, the intention to become separate may be evidenced in many different ways, either by explicit declaration or from conduct. If it is an inference drawn from conduct it will be for the Court to determine whether it was unequivocal and explicit. The institution of a suit for partition by a member of a joint family against the other members has always been taken to be a manifestation of an unequivocal intention to separate himself from the other members of the family. As pointed out in *Kawal Nam v. Budh Singh*⁴, the commencement of a suit for partition would effect a separation from the joint family. Their Lordships found in that case that by the plaint the plaintiff claimed a fifth share in the joint family property and that the claim amounted to an intimation to the co-sharers of the plaintiff of an unequivocal desire for separation from the joint family. Therefore a suit must in substance be a suit for partition with a desire on the part of the plaintiff to hold his share in severalty without being subject to the obligations of the joint status. Having these principles in view, we have to see whether the prior litigation was a suit for partition and the decree and judgment therein operated as severance in status. The prior litigation was commenced by a suit by Venkatapati-rajū in the District Court of Godavari in 1878 (O. S. No. 8 of 1878). A copy of the plaint was not filed in the lower Court because an authentic copy was not available but as a printed copy of the said plaint in the said suit which came up in appeal before this Court was available, we had it marked in this appeal. A reference to the plaint shows that the plaintiff sought to set aside several alienations made by his father including the leases which were executed on 1st and 2nd October, 1868, in favour of the second defendant and the father of third and fourth defendants in that suit. The plaint was confined only to the property alienated. No doubt there was an assertion made in the plaint that the alienations comprised the entire joint family property but that was not a correct statement of fact, since there was other property which was not alienated but was subsequently alienated by the father or the son subsequent to the date of suit. The plaint alleged that the plaintiff demanded all the defendants to make over his half share in each of the properties and they refused to do so and therefore he claimed possession of a half share therein. The demand for delivery of possession of a half share could only be on the alienees because the father was admittedly out of possession and there was no evidence of any demand made on the father prior to the said litigation. The plaint does not mention whether there was any movable property belonging to the family or whether there were liabilities of the family and it was not framed in the way a plaint in a suit for partition would have been framed. In answer thereto, the defendants contended that it was not open to the plaintiff to recover his half share without suing for a partition. The judgment in that suit confirmed all the alienations including the leases and set aside only two gifts of the joint family property made by the father, one made in favour of the plaintiff's sister, and the other, in favour of the Guru of the family. The actual decree in the suit was that the plaintiff as a coparcener with the first defendant be put in possession of a half share of the lands gifted away and in regard to the rest of the properties the suit was dismissed. There was no declaration as in a partition suit that the plaintiff and the first defendant were entitled to equal shares in all the joint family properties and that in regard to lands covered by leases the plaintiff will be entitled to recover possession of a half share on the termination of the leases. No account of joint family property was directed to be taken nor an account of any liabilities and no declaration was given in regard thereto, whereas, if it was intended to be a suit for partition, the Court would have raised an issue as to the assets and liabilities of the joint family and ascertained what they were and effected a division thereof. The case was carried in appeal and the appellate Court confirmed the above decision except in regard to a small item. It is thus clear that the said suit was not a suit for partition. Where a suit in substance is not one for partition but to set aside an alienation by the father or a managing member other than the father and recovery of possession of the plaintiff's share in the property alienated, the inference of an unequivocal intention to separate from the family which a suit for partition in the technical sense of the term as understood in Hindu Law gives rise to, cannot follow. But it is contended by Mr. Vallabhacharyulu that an alienation by a member of his share in the joint family property operates as a severance in status and he becomes a divided member of the family from the date of alienation and if the alienation relates to a share in a particular item, in respect of that item. A suit for recovery by the plaintiff of his share from the alienee would according to him be a clear indication on his part to hold his share in severalty when recovered; and the first plaintiff must therefore be deemed to have become divided in status from his father by suing to recover his share. Before examining the soundness of this contention it may well be stated that the father did not purport to alienate his share in any item but purported to alienate the entirety of the items including the son's share therein as the father and the managing member for family necessity and no question of any severance of status would result from such alienations, assuming that an alienation would entail the legal consequence of division in status as contended for. But in our opinion an alienation by a member of his share in the whole of the joint family property or in any part thereof would not sever his status from the family and make him a divided member in respect of the property alienated. The preponderance of judicial opinion in this Court has been in favour of this view. In *Ayyagari Venkataramayya v. Ayyagari Ramayya*¹, Bhashyam Aiyangar, J.,

"An undivided member of a family, though he may alienate either the whole or any part of his undivided share will continue to be an undivided member of the family with rights of survivorship between himself and the remaining members in respect of all the joint family property other than what he has transferred."

In the learned Judge's view he would be an undivided member even in respect of the shares of the other members in the property alienated. This is in accord with the strict theory of Hindu Law which does not recognise alienation as a mode of severance of a joint family. The notion that it would operate as a severance was based on the analogy of English law where a joint tenancy would be disrupted by an alienation of his share by the joint tenant. But the concept of a joint tenancy and the legal incidents attaching thereto are not the same as in the case of a joint Hindu family. It is wrong therefore to infer the same legal consequences from an act which operates differently under different systems of law. A Bench of this Court in Lakshmi Achi v. Narayanaswami Naicker,¹ has taken the view that a member would become divided in respect of the property alienated by him and Mr. Vallabhacharyulu relies on the observations of Ramesam, J., in that case. Referring to the observations of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in Ayyagari Venkataramayya v. Ayyagari Ramayya,² Ramesam, J., remarks as follows:

"If a member of an undivided family sells the whole of his share in some of the family properties or part of his share in such properties but not in other properties, it may be that he continues undivided with the other members in respect of the properties other than those in which the whole or part of his share has been transferred and this is all that the observation at p. 717 amounts to. It almost implies that so far as the properties in which the whole or part of the member's share is sold, are concerned, he must be regarded as divided from the other members."

With all respect to the learned Judge, the interpretation placed by him on the observations of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., does not appear to be correct. In support of his view Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., referred to Gurlingapa v. Nandapa.³ On a reference to Gurlingapa v. Nandapa,³ it will be seen that the following observations of the Chief Justice in that case are directly against the view of Ramesam, J.:

"It seems to follow from it that the sale of a coparcener's interest in joint family property cannot affect the position of such coparcener in the joint family or alter the rights of the several coparceners inter se..... Basappa's (alienating coparcener's) rights to succeed to his brother's share by survivorship were not therefore affected by the sale of his interest in the last item of joint family property to Gurpadappa so long as the purchaser did not proceed to work out his rights by partition" (p. 303).

There is a definite pronouncement that an alienating coparcener continues undivided even in respect of the share of the other members in the property alienated so that on the death of any member he will succeed to his share by survivorship along with the other members. In *Kandaswami Udayan v. Velayutha Udayan*¹, a view different from that of Ramesam J. was expressed by Devadoss, J.:

"When a coparcener brings a suit for a declaration that an alienation by another coparcener is not binding on him and for his share of the property alienated the Court gives him a decree for his share, if it finds that the alienation is not binding on the plaintiff. But his share does not become absolutely his for the alienating coparcener still continues a member of the joint family, and on a suit for partition by him the property alienated may fall to his share in which case the alienee would be entitled to get it..... When a member of a joint Hindu family sues to set aside an alienation made by another coparcener that suit is not for partition and does not involve necessarily the status of division between him and the other members of the joint family."

The view of the learned Judge appears to be that the fact that the alienating coparceners recover their share would not ipso facto effect severance in status in respect of the property alienated because at a final partition the share alienated may be set apart for the alienor's share which would be taken by the alienee. There is authority for the view that the mere recovery by the coparcener of his share in the property alienated would not prevent the alienee from bringing a suit for a general partition and have the property alienated allotted to his share. (Vide *Harmandas Ramdayal v. Valabhdas*²). We do not think it necessary to examine the soundness of this view. If the correct principle is that alienation per se by a member of his share or part thereof in joint family property does not operate as a severance in status in respect of the property alienated the mere recovery of their shares by the other members would not alter the status of the family. It would therefore rest on them to signify their intention unequivocally to hold the said shares separate from the alienor. In the absence of such expression of intention, the presumption would be that they intend to hold the shares as joint family property. And the same legal consequences do not therefore follow from a suit by a plaintiff to set aside an alienation by his coparcener of a certain item of property as not being binding on him and to recover the plaintiff's share therein as would follow from a suit for partition without more. If the institution of such a suit should be taken as evidence of an explicit declaration by the member to hold the share which he seeks to recover in severalty there must be a clear indication to that effect in the plaint or there must be some other evidence to show that it was his intention to so hold the share which he seeks to recover. The Court will have to determine if there was any such intention expressed in the plaint and come to a conclusion on the point. In its absence the conduct of the parties either during the course of the litigation or subsequent thereto will have to be considered in determining this question of intention. The decree in this case provides that the plaintiff as coparcener with the first defendant should recover the share. It would seem to indicate that no severance in status between the plaintiff and his father was effected. The judgment of the learned District Judge in O. S. No. 8 of 1878 was pronounced on the 30th September, 1879. One of the alienations which have been set aside by the judgment as already observed was a gift made by the father in favour of his daughter Venkayya the plaintiff's sister. On the 23rd June, 1880, Venkayya executed a mortgage with possession (Ex. XI) in favour of one Ramayya and this document was attested both by the plaintiff and his father. Therefore though the alienations were set aside the plaintiff confirmed the alienation. The appellate judgment in the case is Ex. N dated 26th October, 1880. On the 30th August, 1882, the plaintiff in O. S. No. 8 of 1878 by Ex. DD effected a sale of the joint family property which was not included in the suit. In that sale the recital is "the house site which has been acquired by our ancestors and which is continuing in our possession", thus clearly indicating the jointness of the family. In O. S. No. 8 of 1878 as the decree of the learned District Judge confirmed the leases and dismissed the suit as against the lessees, costs were awarded against the plaintiff. The lessees were executing the decree for costs against the son Venkata-patiraju but before execution was completed he died. Thereupon the father Suryanarayanaraju was brought in as his legal representative under the description of 'undivided father'. In execution the reversion in the suit property was sought to be attached. The objection taken by the father was that as the entire interest of the son devolved on him by survivorship the property could not be attached. This objection was upheld and the execution petition was dismissed. Thus the lessees were unable to recover costs. These proceedings probablise the contention of the defendants that the prior litigation did not effect a partition, that the son and the father were undivided in status and that the persons whose interest it was to assert that they were divided did not do so. It would be hardly likely, that if the son was divided in status from the father, the son's widow would not have been brought on record and the son's separate interest would not have been attached and the money due to the lessees for costs would not have been recovered. In 1890 the father effected an alienation of the reversion in the land but no objection was taken by the widow though she lived up to 1927. The conduct of the widow from the date of the death of her husband up to 1927 for a period of over 40 years in not asserting any claim to succeed to her husband's interest renders probable that the son and the father were undivided in status. Ex. III dated 28th November, 1894, lends support to this view. It is a deed of relinquishment executed by the son's widow in favour of one Ramaraju, an alienee from the father of one of the items which was covered by the suit O. S. No. 8 of 1878. What was relinquished under the said document was the 'maintenance right' owned by her. Further there is evidence in the case on behalf of the defendants that the father and the son continued to live and mess together. We see no reason why we should not act on that evidence as the evidence is consistent with the testimony afforded by the documentary evidence. On a consideration of the entire evidence we have come to the conclusion that by the litigation in the prior suit the father and the son did not become divided in status and that Suryanarayanaraju after the death of the son, was competent to alienate the reversion in the lands.

1. (1926) 51 M.L.J. 99 at 104.

2. (1918) I.L.R. 43 Bom. 17.

In this view the plaintiffs' suit fails and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed. No costs.

Failure to maintain accounts required by—Professional misconduct.*

Failure to keep accounts of all moneys received and disbursed by a pleader in connection with each suit in which he is engaged as a pleader, is professional misconduct. Even if a vakil has not much work he is bound to keep accounts for whatever work he may have.

The Notice under Ss. 13 and 14 of the Legal Practitioners' Act having been issued to Sri A. Ramanuja Ayyangar, First Grade Pleader, Vellore, calling upon the said Sri A. Ramanuja Ayyangar to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court in that, he, on his own admission, contained in his letter dated 21st November, 1939, to the District Munsif of Vellore in answer to a communication of Court, had not maintained any accounts in respect of his professional work as a vakil, and therefore had rendered himself liable to be dealt with under S. 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1879:

K. Umamaheswaran for The Advocate-General in support of the Notice.

Respondent not represented.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The respondent is a First Grade Pleader practising at Vellore. He has been charged with professional misconduct in that he has failed to maintain accounts in respect of his professional work. R. 16 of the rules framed under the Legal Practitioners' Act states that it is the duty of every pleader to keep regular accounts of all moneys received and disbursed by him in connection with each suit in which he is engaged as a pleader. The rule goes on to say that the failure to keep such accounts will be treated as a reasonable cause for suspension of certificate within the meaning of S. 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1879.

In answer to the charge the respondent sent by post a communication to the District Munsif of Vellore who had framed the charge, stating that, as he had no legal work worth mentioning, there was no necessity to maintain any accounts, and that he was under the bona fide belief that he need not keep any accounts under the circumstances. He admitted that he had committed an error and asked to be excused. The enquiry into the charge framed against the respondent was fixed for the 16th and 17th of April of this year. On each occasion the respondent failed to put in an appearance. We agree with the District Munsif that, even if a Vakil has not much work, he is bound to keep accounts for whatever work he may have, and in failing to keep accounts the respondent has been guilty of professional misconduct. The respondent is at present under suspension by an order of this Court dated the 17th of October, 1939 passed in another case in which he was charged with professional misconduct. The suspension in that case does not expire until the end of the summer vacation of the District Court of North Arcot in 1941. It is necessary that the respondent should be punished for this further act of misconduct and we direct that he be suspended from practice on the present charge from the end of the summer vacation of the District Court of North Arcot in 1941 until the end of that year.

Madura
Municipality.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), Ss. 216 and 338—Building commenced and completed before application for permission granted by Municipality—Notice under S. 338, compelling demolition of building and compliance with notice—Legality of action under S. 338—Proper procedure was under S. 216 and not under S. 338.

The plaintiff applied to the Madura municipality for permission to put up a building but before permission was granted he commenced and completed the building. The Special Officer of the Municipality issued a notice directing the plaintiff to demolish the building within four days under S. 338 of the Act as no licence had been obtained. On plaintiff's refusal to accept the notice the building was demolished by the Special Officer. In an action by the plaintiff for damages, Held, that a special provision should prevail against a general provision and the Special Officer ought to have issued notice under S. 216 (which specially relates to construction of buildings) to show cause why the building should not be demolished and the action taken under S. 338 (which was a general provision relating to cases of absence of licence, permission, etc.) was illegal and high-handed and the plaintiff was entitled to damages.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura dated 21st January, 1937 and made in A. S. No. 17 of 1936, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Madura Taluk dated 8th May, 1935 and made in O. S. No. 217 of 1933.

T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar for Appellant.

C. S. Rama Rao Saheb for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—By an order dated the 10th August, 1931, the Provincial Government superseded the Madura Municipal Council and appointed a Special Officer to carry out the functions of the Council for a period of one year from the 14th August, 1931. This order was passed under the provisions of S. 41 $\frac{1}{2}$ (1) of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920. On the 7th June, 1932, the Special Officer caused a building belonging to the appellant to be demolished. Thereupon the appellant filed in the Court of the District Munsif, Madura Town, the suit out of which this appeal arises for the recovery of damages. The suit was subsequently transferred for hearing to the Court of the District Munsif, Madura Taluk, who held that the appellant's contention was well founded and gave him a decree for Rs. 100 with costs. The respondent council appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Madura, who reversed the decree of the District Munsif on the ground that the Special Officer had acted within the law. The appellant now appeals to this Court and asks for the restoration of the decree of the Court of the District Munsif.

Leach, C.J.

Before referring to the sections of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, which have application, it will be convenient to state the facts. On the 25th June, 1931, the appellant applied to the council for sanction to erect a building for the purpose of storing therein oil manufactured by him and submitted plans, as was required by the building regulations.

On the 17th July the Sanitary Inspector reported that he had no objection to the erection of the building, but without waiting for the sanction of the Executive Engineer the appellant commenced to build and completed the work. On the 20th July, 1931, the Executive Engineer called upon the appellant to submit a plan of the lay-out of the whole survey number. This lawful requirement was, however, not complied with until the 9th May, 1932. After the Executive Engineer had on the 20th July, 1931, called for a plan of the lay-out of the whole survey number no further communication was addressed to the appellant until the 5th May, 1932, when the Special Officer issued a notice, purporting to be pursuant to Ss. 338 and 339, by which he required the appellant to demolish his building within four days on the ground that it had been erected 'without municipal licence'. This notice was tendered to the appellant, but he refused to accept it, although four days later he sent the plan of the lay-out as required by the Executive Engineer. On the 7th June, 1932, the Special Officer sent men to the site for the purpose of demolishing the building and this work was carried out in the presence of officials of the municipality and the Circle Inspector of Police. These facts are not in dispute.

The case for the appellant is that the local authority had no power to demolish his building without taking the steps contemplated by S. 216 of the Act. The case for the respondent council is that the Special Officer had full authority to do what he did by reason of the provisions of Ss. 338 and 339. The appellant's reply is that S. 216 is a section which applies in the case of a breach of the building regulations and that S. 338 only applies when no special procedure is laid down. We consider that there is great force in the appellant's contention.

The building regulations are contained in Chap. X of the Act. This chapter comprises Ss. 191 to 217. At the time when the appellant applied for sanction to his plans the executive authority was the Chairman, but he was displaced by the Special Officer as the result of the order of the Provincial Government of the 10th August, 1931. S. 197 states that if a person intends to construct or reconstruct a building, other than a hut, he shall send to the executive authority an application in writing for the approval of the site, together with a site plan of the land, and an application in writing for permission to execute the work, together with a ground plan, elevations and sections of the building, and a specification of the work. S. 198 prohibits the executive authority granting permission until the approval of the site has been accorded and S. 199 says that construction shall not be begun until the executive authority has granted permission for the execution of the work.

S. 216 states the procedure to be followed where the executive authority is satisfied:

"(i) that the construction of a building (a) has been commenced without obtaining the necessary permission, or (b) is being carried on, or has been completed otherwise than in accordance with the plans or particulars on which the permission was based, or (c) is being carried on or has been completed in breach of any of the provisions of the Act, rule or by-law or of any lawful direction or requisition, or

(ii) that any alterations required by a notice issued under S. 205 have not been duly made, or

(iii) that any alteration of or addition to a building or work has been commenced or is being carried on or has been completed in breach of S. 215."

In any of these cases the executive authority may make a provisional order requiring the owner or builder to demolish the work done, or so much of it as has been unlawfully executed, or to make such alterations as may be necessary to bring the work into conformity with lawful requirements. These are the provisions of sub-S. (1) of S. 216. Sub-S. (2) directs the executive authority, when he has made a provisional order under sub-S. (1), to serve a copy of it on the owner of the building, together with a notice requiring him to show cause within a reasonable time why the order should not be confirmed. Sub-S. (3) says that if the owner fails to show cause to the satisfaction of the executive authority, the executive authority may confirm the order with any modification as he may think fit and that order shall then become binding on the owner. If an order under sub-S. (3) becomes effective it can be enforced by virtue of the provisions of S. 339.

S. 338 on which the respondent council relies is in these words:

"If, under this Act, or any rule, by-law or regulation made under it; the licence or permission of the council or executive authority or registration in the municipal office is necessary for the doing of any act, and if such act is done without such licence or permission or registration or in a manner inconsistent with the terms of any such licence or permission, then—

(a) the executive authority may by notice require the person so doing such act to alter, remove, or, as far as practicable, restore to its original state the whole or any part of any property, movable or immovable, public or private, affected thereby, within a time to be specified in the notice; and further,

(b) if no penalty has been specially provided in this Act for so doing such act, the person so doing it shall be liable on conviction before a magistrate to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every such offence."

S. 339 which is the section which gives power to enforce default, reads as follows:

"(1) Whenever by any notice, requisition, or order under this Act, or under any rule, by-law or regulation made under it, any person is required to execute any work or to take any measures or do anything a reasonable time shall be named in such notice, requisition or order within which the work shall be executed, the measures taken, or the thing done.

(2) If such notice, requisition, or order is not complied with within the time so named the executive authority may cause such work to be executed or may take any measures or do anything which may, in his opinion, be necessary for giving due effect to the notice, requisition or order as aforesaid; and further,

(3) if no penalty has been specially provided in this Act for failure to comply with such notice, the said person shall be liable on conviction before a magistrate to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every such offence."

Ss. 338 and 339 are in Chap. XVI which is headed "Procedure and Miscellaneous".

The provisions of the Act with regard to licences are to be found in Chap. XII within which fall Ss. 244 to 285. Licenses are required for the keeping of animals (S. 245), for the use of premises for certain trades (S. 249), for the keeping of a slaughter-house (S. 255), for the carrying on of a milk business (S. 258), for the carrying of the trade of a butcher, fish-monger or poulterer (S. 259), for the keeping of a private market (S. 262), for the use of a place for the disposal of the dead (S. 279), and for the carrying on of the occupation of a grave-digger (S. 285). Permission of the local authority is required in certain cases such as the digging of a well, tank, pond or fountain (S. 233), and the construction of a factory in which it is proposed to employ steam-power, water-power or other mechanical power or electrical power (S. 250). Registration may be required in respect of carriages let out for hire and for bicycles and tricycles kept within the municipal area (S. 104) and for the keeping of carts (S. 105). The Act does not direct any special procedure to be followed for remedying breaches of the law with regard to licences, permissions and registrations, apart from that to be found in the chapter relating to building regulations. Therefore, except in the case of buildings, direct action may be taken under Ss. 338 and 339. The Subordinate Judge did not consider that S. 216 applied to a case where a person had completed a building without sanction, but this opinion is obviously untenable. I have already stated the circumstances in which the executive authority can take action, and the completion of a building, as well as the commencement of a building, are within the scope of the section. As a matter of fact, Mr. Rama Rao Saheb has not attempted to support this part of the Subordinate Judge's judgment.

Leach, C.J.

In our opinion the maxim generalia specialibus non derogant applies in this case. The effect of this maxim is concisely stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham edition, Vol. 31, p. 526 in these words:

"Where in the same or a subsequent statute a particular enactment is followed by a general enactment, and the latter, taken in its most comprehensive sense, would overrule the former, the particular enactment is operative, and the general enactment is taken to affect only those other parts of the particular enactment to which it may properly apply."

S. 338 cannot be properly applied here because S. 216 specifically provides what shall be done when there is an infringement of the building regulations. The fact that the word 'may' is used in sub-S. (1) of S. 216 does not leave it to the option of the executive authority to proceed under S. 216 or S. 338. In S. 338 the word is also 'may'. The executive authority may not deem it necessary to take any action, but if he does he must proceed according to S. 216. Therefore the Special Officer's order was unlawful and his action in demolishing the appellant's building without calling upon him to show cause was highhanded. It is true that the appellant had broken the law. He had built without having had his plans sanctioned by the executive authority and he had not complied with the requirement of the executive authority that he should submit a plan of the lay-out of the whole survey number. He was greatly in fault, but it has not been suggested that the building which he erected was in any way contrary to the regulations of the respondent council. This Court asked Mr. Rama Rao Saheb what was the explanation which the Special Officer had to offer for the disregard of the provisions of S. 216 and he was unable to give one. The fact that the appellant had himself disregarded certain provisions of the Act, blameworthy though it was, did not, as Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Ayyar has remarked, make him an outlaw. The action taken by the Special Officer in this case so far as the Court is able to gather from the record and the statements of fact made by counsel (which are in no way in conflict) cannot be supported on any ground. There was no request for an explanation and if the building did in fact comply with the regulations—there is no evidence that it did not—the punishment was out of all proportion to the offence. But the main consideration is that the building ought not in any event to have been pulled down without the procedure set out in S. 216 being followed.

It has not been suggested that if the Special Officer's action was unlawful, which in our opinion it certainly was, the respondent council should not be called upon to pay damages. The appellant has suffered damage and his loss has been assessed by both the lower Courts at Rs. 100. Therefore the quantum of damages is not open to argument in this Court, and the respondent council must pay the amount.

The appeal succeeds and the decree of the District Munsif will be restored. The appellant will have his costs in the Subordinate Court and in this Court based on the amount of his decree.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 21, r. 83 and S. 64—Attachment in execution of money decree—Mortgage of some items of attached property and payment of proceeds towards decree—Sale in Court auction of an item of mortgaged property for balance—Judgment-debtor obtaining before confirmation of sale permission under O. 21, r. 83 and selling the item privately and satisfying the decree—Validity and enforceability of the mortgage as against the purchaser—Mortgage if affected by lis pendens—Purchaser if entitled to equitable lien or charge on the mortgaged item of property in his lands.

In execution of a decree for Rs. 14,000 and odd the decree-holder attached some items of the judgment-debtors' property on 13th December, 1920. On 29th July, 1921, some items of the attached properties were mortgaged to X by the judgment-debtors for Rs. 9,000 out of which Rs. 7,500 was paid towards the decree. As the decree was not wholly satisfied the execution was proceeded with and an item of the mortgaged properties was sold in Court auction on 25th October, 1921, for over Rs. 16,000. Before confirmation of sale the judgment-debtor applied for and obtained permission to sell that item as well as some others privately with a condition to deposit the amounts realised in Court. A certificate was granted under O. 21, r. 83 (2) and the judgment-debtors executed a sale deed of the item sold in Court auction in favour of K for Rs. 22,500 of which Rs. 17,200 was deposited in Court and the decree was completely satisfied. The balance was deposited towards another decree against the judgment-debtors in the same Court. Simultaneously with the sale deed the judgment-debtors executed another agreement in favour of K under which they agreed to mortgage certain other properties in consideration of his paying off inter alia the mortgage debt in favour of X. No money having been paid under the agreement, a suit on the mortgage was filed. The suit was resisted by the legal representatives of K.

Lankaram
v.
Sundara-

Aiyar.

Held, (i) the sale to K in pursuance of the certificate granted under O. 21, r. 83 was a private one and not by or under the orders of the Court. Such a purchaser could not be brought within the ambit of S. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure and held to have a claim enforceable under the attachment. The mortgage in favour of X is not void on account of the attachment.

Shivlingappa v. Chanbasappa, (1905) I.L.R. 30 Bom. 337, approved.

(ii) The attachment and continuance of the execution proceedings cannot be deemed to be a lis pendens between the purchaser and judgment-debtor. Consequently S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act would have no application to the facts of the case and cannot affect the validity of the mortgage in favour of X. Case-law considered.

(iii) As K deposited the sale proceeds into Court in pursuance of the condition mentioned in O. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code, only for his own benefit and not on behalf of the mortgagee there can be no equitable charge or lien in favour of K who was aware of the mortgage and had entered into an agreement to discharge the same. Case-law discussed.

(iv) X was a bona fide mortgagee for value and although if the attachment had continued and the sale confirmed the mortgage would have been infructuous as against the attaching creditor, the mortgagee had a prior title as against K.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Abdur Rahman, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Madura on the basis of a mortgage deed (Ex. A) executed by or on behalf of defendants 1 to 4 on the 29th July, 1921, in the plaintiffs' favour.

The only points for decision in this appeal relate to the enforceability of this mortgage deed and to the lien claimed by the appellant, who was the fifth defendant in the suit, on account of a payment made by his father in satisfaction of a money decree passed in O. S. No. 135 of 1920 against the defendants 1 to 4.

The facts which have led to this litigation may be briefly stated. A decree for a sum of Rs. 14,130-11-2 was passed against the defendants 1 to 4 on the 11th November, 1920, in O. S. No. 135 of 1920. The decree-holder made an application for execution and attached various items of property including the one (item No. 3 in those proceedings and the first item in the present suit) with which we are concerned in this appeal. The attachment was made on the 13th December, 1920. During the continuance of this attachment, seven items of property including the first item, were mortgaged by the judgment-debtors with the plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 9,000 on the 29th July, 1921 (Ex. A). Out of this money, a sum of Rs. 5,000 was deposited by the judgment-debtors on the 1st August, 1920, towards the decree passed in O. S. No. 135 of 1920 and an application (Ex. V) was made by them at the same time for the grant of a month's time for paying the balance of the decretal amount by alienating the properties under attachment. This application was accepted and in accordance with his undertaking contained in the mortgage deed Ex. A the plaintiffs deposited two more sums of Rs. 1,050 and Rs. 1,450 on the two following days (that is, on the 2nd and 3rd August, 1921). The lodgment schedules on the record show that all these three items of Rs. 7,500 were deposited in Court towards the amount of the decree passed in O. S. No. 135 of 1920. The balance was partly deducted by the plaintiffs towards their own dues and partly paid by them on behalf of the judgment-debtors. The decree was not wholly satisfied and the Court, after the lapse of the time granted by it in pursuance of Ex. V proceeded to execute the decree. The proclamation of sale is not in evidence and we are not, for that reason, in a position to know the amount for which the sale was ordered. But having regard to the fact that Rs. 7,500 were paid towards the decree passed in O. S. No. 135 of 1920, we must presume that this sum must have been duly credited in partial satisfaction of that decree. Anyhow the execution took its course and the third item of that suit was sold in auction on the 25th October, 1921, for a sum exceeding

Rs. 16,000. Before the sale was confirmed, the judgment-debtors applied to the Court on the 25th November, 1921, for permission under O. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code, to sell the third item privately and also to alienate three more properties (items 4 to 6—Ex. IV) in the same manner. This was granted on the same day but the Court imposed a condition, as required by that rule on the judgment-debtors that the whole of the sale proceeds or other amounts raised by creating an incumbrance should be deposited by them in Court. A certificate was granted under the provisions of the same r. 83 (2) and the judgment-debtors executed a sale deed of the third item of property on the very next day in favour of Kuppuswami, the father of defendants 5 and 6 for a sum of Rs. 22,500 (Ex. I). Out of this amount a sum of Rs. 17,200 had been deposited by Kuppuswami in Court along with the judgment-debtor's application, Ex. IV, on the 25th November, 1921, that is a day before the sale deed was executed and the balance of Rs. 5,300 was deposited on the 10th December, 1921. Ex. III which is a copy of the lodgment schedule, however shows that this latter sum of Rs. 5,300 was paid towards the decree passed against the same judgment-debtors in another suit (O. S. No. 40 of 1921). Since the third item of property which the fifth defendant's father had purchased under Ex. I had been auctioned in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 135 of 1920, it may be fairly presumed that the sum of Rs. 17,200 was deposited by him in the execution of that decree. On payment of this money into Court, the decree in O. S. No. 135 of 1920 was completely satisfied, the sale by the Court was set aside and the attachment made on the 13th December, 1920, deemed to be withdrawn. The sale in Kuppuswami's favour was subsequently confirmed by the Court under the provisions of O. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code. It may be mentioned here that on the same date on which the sale deed in Kuppuswami's favour was executed that is on the 26th November, 1921, the judgment-debtors executed another agreement Ex. H in Kuppuswami's favour under which they agreed to mortgage certain other properties with him in consideration of his paying a few other debts including the one which they had taken from the plaintiffs under the mortgage deed Ex. A. The original of this document has not been produced but the lower Court has found that it must have been in the possession of the fifth defendant and this finding has not been challenged before us. No money was paid in pursuance of Ex. H to the plaintiffs and they brought the present suit on the basis of their mortgage deed Ex. A. This was resisted by the appellant and his sister (the fifth and sixth defendants in the suit) on several grounds. The validity of the mortgage deed Ex. A was first of all questioned for the reason that it was executed by the judgment-debtors during the pendency of the attachment. It was contended that although the properties attached in this execution were not sold through Court, yet the private sale effected by the judgment-debtors after a certificate had been granted by the Court under O. 21, r. 83 (2) and after it was duly confirmed under the provisions of that section must be regarded to be a substitute for a sale through Court and the attachment effected before the mortgage Ex. A must enure to the benefit of the person who purchased the property with the sanction of the Court. It was conceded by Mr. Sitarama Rao that an alienation of a property effected by a judgment-debtor even after it was attached is not void against the whole world; but it would be so, he said, against any person who dealt with the property under the orders of the Court, meaning thereby that as the sale of the third item of property to his client was made by reason of the attachment under what he calls to be the Court's order, it would be void as against him.

The second objection raised by learned counsel for the appellant against the validity of the mortgage deed Ex. A was that of lis pendens. It was urged that in so far as the mortgage Ex. A was effected after attachment and during the continuance of the execution proceedings in which the appellant's father purchased the property, it fell within the mischief of S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The third and the last point raised on behalf of the appellant was in regard to an equitable lien which he claimed on the property (the third item in those proceedings) as the auction sale of this item was set aside in consequence of the payment made by his father and this would, it was argued, give a priority to the appellant over the plaintiffs. This contention was supported by learned counsel for the appellant on more or less the same principle as that on which salvage liens are granted or recognised by Courts in maritime cases or immovable property of one person is, by operation of law, made security for the payment by another. The last of these points was not raised specifically in the pleadings or before the lower Court. Nor was any specific ground taken when the appeal was preferred to this Court; but as it raised a point of law, and the objection on behalf of the respondents was raised almost when the arguments on this point were being concluded by learned counsel for the appellant, we permitted the arguments to be continued.

The objections raised by the appellant and his sister were overruled by the trial Court and a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs. Aggrieved by this decree, the fifth defendant appeals.

From what has been said it would be clear that the mortgage deed Ex. A came into existence after the third item of property had been attached and put to sale by the Court although it (that is the sale) was not confirmed and eventually set aside. There can also be no doubt that the sale to the appellant's father was made with the permission of the Court under O. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code, and all the formalities mentioned in that rule were complied with. The points for determination in regard to the first objection of the appellant are:

1. What was the nature of the sale to the appellant's father?
2. Is the claim in respect of the sale to the appellant's father covered by the expression 'claims enforceable under the attachment' used in S. 64, Civil Procedure Code?
3. Was the mortgage to the plaintiffs consequently void as against the appellant's father?

To decide the first point it would be necessary to examine the provisions of O. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code. It contemplates an application by a judgment-debtor after an order for the sale of immovable property is made but before a sale is actually held. This is so because the order that can be passed on an application under that rule is for the postponement of the sale of the property comprised in the order for sale and not one for the postponement of the confirmation of sale. But the sale had in execution of the decree in O.S.No. 135 of 1920 been, as pointed out before, already held, although not actually confirmed. How could then an application be made to the Court within the terms of this rule? An application under O. 21, r. 89 was competent but this could not have helped the appellant's case. Let us suppose however that the application under r. 83 was entertained, as it seems to have been done, how could the Court agree to sell the property to the fifth defendant's father when it had been actually sold to someone else and the sale was not set aside? Another sale by the Court was, in the circumstances, out of question. Was the sale to the appellant's father then being made, as contended, under the orders of the Court? Or was it simply being done with the sanction of the Court? That there is a great deal of difference between the two is obvious. The Court is not, in the latter case, being approached to order any sale of the property. It could not have done so. It simply authorised the judgment-debtors at their request to deal with the property privately, if they could. But the judgment-debtors were not compelled to alienate the property privately. They might have, in spite of the sanction, done nothing or might not have been able to find a suitable purchaser or alienee. In view of what we have said the answer to the first question is quite clear; but let us examine the provisions of O. 21, r. 83 even if they are supposed to be applicable to the facts of this case. The terms of the first sub-clause indicate clearly that it would apply, only when the judgment-debtor wishes to pay off the decree passed against him 'by the mortgage or lease or private sale of such property' as has been ordered to be sold by the Court. The first two modes of alienation, that is, the mortgage or lease, can be available only to an owner of the property (that is, to the judgment-debtor) and not to a Court. If a judgment-debtor does not wish to part with his property permanently and is willing and able to alienate it temporarily and is desirous of raising the money in that manner, he may be allowed to do so by a mortgage or lease of his property. This method of dealing with the property cannot be held to be under or by reason of the attachment. When we come to the third mode that is, to the sale by which the money could be raised, we find the word 'private' prefixed, thereby leaving no room for doubt that the contemplated sale is a private sale and not one by the Court. Moreover the language of the sub-clause shows that the judgment-debtor's power is not restricted to sell or otherwise alienate his property which was under attachment or ordered to be sold, but that he may satisfy the decree by the alienation of a property which is wholly different from the one that was being sold by the Court would also show that the alienation contemplated by this clause is one by a private treaty only and the Court's sanction is only sought to stay its hands so that the property which was ordered to be sold may not be put to sale and the operation of S. 64, Civil Procedure Code, avoided.

During the course of his argument Mr. Sitarama Rao placed reliance on sub-cl. 2 of r. 83. It provides for the grant of a certificate to a judgment-debtor authorising him to make the aforesaid mortgage, lease or sale and this in spite of the provisions contained in S. 64, Civil Procedure Code. Under that section any private alienation of the property attached by a Court would be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. But sub-cl. 2 of r. 83 provides that the certificate granted by the Court would authorise a judgment-debtor to make the alienation in spite of that provision. In other words, the sale, mortgage or lease as the case may be, would be taken to have been authorised by the Court not in pursuance of an attachment but in spite of the attachment and this despite a possible opposition by the decree-holder. The mere fact that a certificate is granted cannot be taken as showing that the judgment-debtor when alienating his own property was doing so on behalf of the Court. The attachment cannot be said to have divested the judgment-debtor of his title to the property or to have vested any title in the Court. It only restrains the judgment-debtor from alienating his property and that is all. The grant of certificate to the judgment-debtor removes the bar or impediment and he becomes authorised to alienate it on the condition that all moneys in respect of such an alienation are deposited into Court and not retained by the judgment-debtor. The condition of deposit is thus substituted in place of the absolute prohibition and the rigidity of the order of attachment released. A subsequent alienation by the judgment-debtor could not be held to have been made either under or by reason of the attachment.

It was next contended that in so far as the alienation authorised by the Court under r. 83 could not become absolute until it was confirmed by the Court and as the provision contained in O. 21, r. 92 in regard to the confirmation of sales held by Courts is similar to the one found in the second proviso to the second sub-clause of r. 83, it must be held that the sales authorised by this section are also made under the orders of Court. The language of the second proviso to the second sub-clause in r. 83 does, it is true, bear a close resemblance to that employed in r. 92; but this is simply because the Court has to satisfy itself in either case that the proceeds of alienation made either through Court or privately have been deposited in Court. Since the result to be achieved in either case is the same, there is nothing surprising that the language of the two sections is also similar in that respect but this does not show that the acts by which the same result is proposed to be achieved are necessarily similar in character themselves. A sale by the Court in pursuance of an attachment cannot be said to be the same thing as a sale by a judgment-debtor independent or in spite of the attachment. Title in the first case is conveyed by operation of law and any alienation by the judgment-debtor, if contrary to the attachment is void against all claims enforceable under the attachment, while title in the other is conveyed by the judgment-debtor himself, who cannot derogate from his grant even if made after the attachment. The correctness of the decision by the Division Bench of this Court in *Narayana Goundan v. Appavu Goundan*¹ was not questioned by learned counsel for the appellant, but it was attempted to be distinguished on the ground that the sale in that case was not actually confirmed by the Court. The actual reason for the decision given by our learned brother King, J., was, we take it, contained in the following sentence:

"We entirely fail to see how the sub-section (sub-cl. 2 of O. 21, r. 83) can possibly refer to an attachment made subsequent to the issue of the certificate or affect any claims enforceable under that subsequent attachment."

Other observations in regard to the effect of a want of confirmation on "a hypothetical mortgagee", as our learned brother King, J., puts it, must be in the nature of an obiter. What the decision in that case would have been if the sale was actually confirmed by the Court under O. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code, in spite of an attachment of the same property by another Court, it is unnecessary to guess. The Division Bench was not called upon to answer that question and any general observations cannot be, although entitled to great respect, regarded as authoritative. A Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in *Shivlingappa v. Chanbasappa*² has taken the view which has appealed to us and we find ourselves in respectful agreement with the same. We have, for the above reasons, no hesitation in holding that the sale under O. 21, r. 83 is a private one and cannot be held to be a sale either by or under the orders of the Court.

Having decided the nature of the sale made to the fifth defendant's father, the answer to the second point does not present any difficulty. The plaintiffs' mortgage shall be, to use the language of S. 64, Civil Procedure Code, void only when the sale to the fifth defendant's father can be said to be a claim enforceable under the attachment made on the 13th December, 1920. The point to decide is if it is so. Can the claim by the fifth defendant be said to be enforceable under the attachment if the sale to his father was a private sale made by the judgment-debtors not in pursuance of, but in spite of the attachment? It cannot be so as the fifth defendant's father acquired the judgment-debtors' rights only by means of a contract and not independently of the judgment-debtors' will—as he would have done if he had purchased the property after it was attached and sold by the Court. It cannot be denied that if the decree-holder were otherwise satisfied and the attachment had, in consequence, become ineffectual, any private alienation by the judgment-debtors would have been, even if made during the continuance of the attachment, valid and binding. This is only because an alienation by a judgment-debtor is not, after attachment, wholly void but only voidable at the option of those at whose instance the attachment was effected or in whose interest it was continued and that also to the extent that those claims were enforceable under the attachment and no further. On account of attachment an auction-purchaser of a property in a sale in invitum has a superior title and may have a better one than the judgment-debtors possessed on the date of the sale but this is the result of the provisions contained in S. 64, Civil Procedure Code. A private purchaser under O. 21, r. 83 could not be brought within the ambit of S. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure and held to have a claim enforceable under the attachment. An attachment and a subsequent order for sale may have been the cause of the alienation in favour of a private purchaser but inasmuch as a private sale with the Court's sanction is absolute against all claims enforceable under the attachment it cannot itself be regarded as a claim enforceable under the attachment.

In fact the moment the whole of the decretal amount is paid and the decree satisfied, the attachment ceases to exist under O. 21, r. 55, Civil Procedure Code, not because the object of the attachment has been achieved by its exercise but because the subsistence of the attachment has been rendered unnecessary. It is impossible for us to extend the scope of S. 64 and to hold the same to be applicable to private sales as well. We must for the above reasons hold that the expression 'claims enforceable under the attachment' does not cover the claim in respect of the sale made by the judgment-debtors to the appellant's father. In view of our decision on the first two points, it necessarily follows that the plaintiffs' mortgage cannot be in our opinion held to be void on account of the attachment in December, 1920.

The next objection raised to the validity of the mortgage deed Ex. A is that of lis pendens. The appellant's contention is that a 'lis' came into existence as soon as the third item of property was attached in proceedings in execution of the decree and in so far as the whole of this item of property became liable to be sold in these proceedings it could not have been otherwise 'transferred' or 'dealt with' 'except under the authority of the Court' 'so as to affect the rights of any other party' such as, according to learned counsel for the appellant, his client is. By accepting the mortgage from the judgment-debtors, the plaintiffs, according to Mr. Sitarama Rao, stood in their shoes and by purchasing the whole of the attached property with the sanction of the Court, his client's father stood in those of the decree-holder. It was urged that the order of the Court sanctioning the sale was binding on the judgment-debtors and their alienees the present plaintiffs and since the mortgage was executed by the judgment-debtors during the pendency of the proceedings in execution, the rights of the appellant's father remained unaffected.

The right to a property cannot be said to be 'directly and specifically in question' after its attachment in execution of a money decree. (See decisions in *Sarup Singh v. Narsingh*¹ and *Mahadeo Saran Sahu v. Thakur Prasad Singh*².) This would be particularly so in cases where the attachment remains undisputed by a judgment-debtor or any other person. But if an attachment can be said to give rise to a lis at all, it could only be in respect of the liability of the property to be sold in execution and for nothing else. This is not the point that arises for consideration in this case. The question here is whether a lis can be said to have come into existence simply because the judgment-debtors made an application under O. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code and if so what that lis was. The only order that could be passed on that application was either to grant time to the judgment-debtor for the purposes stated in that rule or not so to do. The Court could not grant permission to the judgment-debtors to mortgage, sell or lease the attached property free of any subsequent encumbrance, which they might have created after the attachment and in the absence of any such order, it would be incorrect for the appellant to contend that he purchased the property free of the encumbrance created by the judgment-debtors in favour of the plaintiffs. Since the essence of S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act is that a transaction entered into during the pendency of a suit or proceeding cannot prejudice the interests of a party to the suit or proceeding who is not a party to the transaction, let us ascertain whether the mortgage to the plaintiffs affected the rights of 'any other party' within the meaning of the expression used in that section. It has been already held by us that the sale by the judgment-debtors in favour of the appellant's father—in spite of a certificate and subsequent confirmation by the Court—was of a private nature. We are unable to see how the appellant's father can be said to be standing in the decree-holder's shoes. It may be that the necessity for a certificate and subsequent confirmation arose on account of the attachment made at the decree-holder's instance; but this would not make the private vendee a representative of the decree-holder. The contention, therefore, that the appellant's father was the decree-holder's representative is untenable and both the plaintiffs and the appellant's father must be held to be standing in the shoes of the judgment-debtors alone who mortgaged the property first to the former and sold it subsequently to the latter. If that be the correct position and we take it to be so, S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act would have no application to the facts of this case. The alienation mentioned in S. 52 must be such as 'to affect the rights of any other party thereto' and not the rights of the person who dealt with the property or of those who stand in his shoes. The judgment-debtors are, it cannot be denied, bound by the mortgage which they created in the plaintiffs' favour. Having mortgaged the property to the plaintiffs, it was no longer in their power to derogate from the grant which had been made to the plaintiffs and they could not, in the circumstances, alienate anything more than the equity of redemption. The decree-holder's right in execution was only to bring the property to sale and had the property been sold through Court, the purchaser would have bought the judgment-debtors' right, title and interest as it existed on the date of the attachment regardless of any alienations that might have been made during the continuance of the attachment. But this would be so in virtue of the provisions contained in S. 64 of the Civil Procedure Code and not on account of any doctrine of lis pendens. The contention that every alienation by a judgment-debtor during the pendency of an execution application would be hit by the provisions of S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act was repelled by Sir John Wallis in *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*¹ in the following words:

1. A.I.R. 1929 All. 846.

2. (1910) 14 C.W.N. 677.

"If this contention were well-founded, an attachment would be unnecessary as the mere filing of the execution petition would be sufficient to prevent alienation."

With great respect to the learned Chief Justice, as he then was, we find ourselves in complete agreement with his observation and feel that the observation by Pakenham Walsh, J., in *Velayuda Mudali v. Co-operative Rural Credit Society, Ulakottai*², was too general and, in view of the fact that the properties although sold as free of encumbrance were found to be subject to a prior mortgage, perhaps unnecessary. Reference was made in the course of his arguments by learned counsel for the appellant to the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh*³ and *G. Anantapadmanabhaswami v. Official Receiver of Secunderabad*⁴, but it is unnecessary in this case to decide the question whether a charge was created by the attachment in favour of the attaching creditor or whether the judgment-debtor's interest had been brought by attachment under the control of the Court for the purpose of executing the same so as to preclude the accrual of title by survivorship in the event of the judgment-debtor's death. Even if a charge is assumed to have been created in favour of the attaching creditor, it could not possibly help the appellant as long as he is not found to be a representative of the attaching creditor and the property is not found to have been sold in pursuance of the attachment. We have already found that the appellant's father was not a representative of the decree-holder and know for a fact that the property was not sold by the Court in pursuance of the attachment. Indeed the attachment must be deemed to have come to an end as soon as the decree was satisfied and the moment the attachment ceased to exist, the private alienation of the property during the continuance of the attachment would take effect and have priority over the subsequent alienation when both the alienations were made by the same persons. The decision in *Venkatachalapathi Rao v. Venkatappayya*¹ does not help the appellant as the attachment was found to have been effected in that case before a stranger had purchased the property pending execution and it was held that he was bound by the decision of the Court regarding the subsistence of attachment although he was not a party to the same. Since the 'orders passed in the course of execution proceedings adjudicating on the rights of the parties are res judicata and could not be called in question by the parties or their representatives' the ground on which the decision was based can be well understood but this would not advance the appellant's case.

We must, for the above reasons, hold that there is no merit in the contention that the alienation to the plaintiffs was void on account of lis pendens.

The third and the last question which awaits to be decided is that of the equitable lien or charge claimed by the appellant on the ground that it was his father's money which had satisfied the attaching creditor's decree, that but for this payment, the sale of the property held by the Court would have been confirmed and the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents would have had no effect at least so far as the third item of the property was concerned. An equitable charge or lien is therefore claimed to have come into existence by operation of law and this, it is urged, would rank higher than the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents. In order to appreciate this contention, we must not lose the sight of the facts of this case. It would be recalled that the appellant's father, when he purchased the property, was cognisant of the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs and had in fact agreed to discharge the same on execution of another mortgage in his favour (Ex. H). It is true that the property was attached at the time when it came to be mortgaged with the plaintiffs, but the money paid by them had, as we have already pointed out in the beginning, gone to discharge the attaching creditor's claim to some extent at least. It would thus be clear that the appellant's father was to become a complete owner of the third item of property not only when he paid the price of the property purchased by him into Court, but after he discharged the plaintiffs' mortgage. Had he carried out the terms of both his contracts, he would have got the whole of the property free from attachment and of the plaintiffs' mortgage. But he failed to carry out his contract contained in Ex. H and the question for decision now is whether the appellant is entitled to a prior charge or security on the property purchased by his father in preference to plaintiffs' prior mortgage.

In view of the fact that the appellant's father had purchased the property from the judgment-debtors who had obtained the Court's sanction under O. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code, to sell it privately on the condition mentioned in the rule, it was incumbent on him to deposit the entire sale proceeds into Court and he did so. Did he then make that payment for the benefit of the plaintiffs or did he do so to discharge the liability which he had undertaken in consideration of the sale deed to be executed by the judgment-debtors in his favour and for his own benefit? By getting the auction sale set aside and by procuring the withdrawal of the attachment, was the property being saved by the appellant's father for the plaintiffs or for himself? The answer to these questions can only be that he had done all this for his own benefit and not for that of the plaintiffs. How can the plaintiffs then be held liable for the payment or payments made by the appellant's father? As it is difficult to conceive an equitable charge in favour of the appellant's father in the absence of a personal right of re-imbursement, let us cast a glance in passing, at the provisions of the Indian Contract Act. S. 69 of the Act would have no application as the plaintiffs were not bound to pay the balance of the attaching creditor's claim which he could realise by the sale of the property. S. 70 cannot be held to apply as the appellant's father did not pay the decretal amount into Court for the plaintiffs but for the judgment-debtors who were liable to discharge the decree passed against them and were not free to alienate the third item of property on account of the attachment unless they complied with the condition as to deposit of the sale proceeds into Court. Let us now go to the Transfer of Property Act and see if the third item of property could be, by operation of law, held to be security for the payment made by the appellant's father.

Reliance was placed by learned counsel for the appellant in this connection on the line of cases where it was held that if one of two or more co-sharers owning an estate subject to the payment of revenue to Government paid the whole revenue in order to save, and so did save, the estate from liability to be sold by the Government for realising the arrears of revenue, he would be, by operation of law, entitled to a charge upon the share of each of his co-sharers for the realisation of the latter's share of revenue as between the co-sharers (vide *Rajah of Visianagaram v. Raja Setrucherla Somasekararaz*¹ and *K. Chengalroya Reddi v. Udai Kavoor*²). But it must be remembered that the payments in those cases were not made by persons who were under any obligation to discharge their liabilities under personal covenants while the appellant's father was, in the present case, under the terms of his sale deed liable to do so. Varadachariar, J., in the latter case observed at p. 760 as follows:

"If he had come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's agent made the deposit in pursuance of an enforceable contract of loan between the plaintiff and the defendant 2, it might be doubtful if the plaintiff could have sustained her claim for a charge on the properties, on the analogy of the doctrine of salvage or on equitable grounds, cf. *Yowell v. Hibernian Bank*³."

This would show that according to the learned Judge the appellant's father could not, in view of his undertaking to deposit the price into Court, claim a charge or lien.

Salvage lien can be claimed by a person if he incurs any expense or makes any payment for saving a ship or its cargo from loss by wreck, fire or capture. Due to the exigencies of the situation that may arise on the high seas when it was impossible to communicate with the owner of the ship or its cargoes, this exception was engrafted in maritime law on the general principle which was to the effect that a person is not ordinarily entitled to recover any payment voluntarily made or expense voluntarily incurred by him on behalf of another unless a request to do so could be, from the circumstances inferred or some other principle such as contained in Ss. 69 and 70 of the Indian Contract Act attracted. This principle was held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in *Nugenderchunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kaminee Dossee*¹ and in *Dakhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy*² to be applicable to India and although having regard to the decision in *Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co.*³ several High Courts in India have latterly taken a different view, yet so far as this Court is concerned, it has stuck to the view that this principle is still applicable to this country. We have been able to find no authority, however, and none was cited to us at the bar that this principle would be applicable to cases where a person makes a payment for his own benefit to save a property which belongs to him or when he was under a personal covenant which he was bound to carry out. The appellant's father cannot be said to have paid any money with the object of getting any priority over the plaintiffs, but in order to get the property which belonged to his vendors at the time of the sale. Since they (that is, the judgment-debtors) had already executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs of which the appellant's father had full knowledge, he can only be taken to have purchased the right, title and interest which was owned by his vendors at the time of sale. This sale still holds the field and the plaintiffs do not challenge it or want it to be set aside although it is true that if the plaintiffs' claim happens to exceed the value of the property, the appellant or his sister may lose the entire property or not be able to recover anything out of its sale proceeds. This is, however, a different matter. The decisions in *Dakhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy*² and *Mollaya Padayachi v. Krishnaswami Aiyar*⁴ have no application as the payment in those cases were made by persons who were not the owners of the estate or were adjudged not to have been so finally and not for their own benefit.

Moreover, the charge on a property as held in *Vyraperumal Mudaliar v. Alagappa Maniagarar*¹, "which springs into existence" on a certain date in consequence of payment "can only avail against that property as it stood on the date of payment and cannot avail retrospectively against prior mortgagees and others who have in good faith or without any suspicion that such a charge may come into future existence advanced money on the property." There is not the slightest doubt in our minds that the plaintiffs were bona fide mortgagees for value and although if the attachment had continued and the sale confirmed, their mortgage would have been infructuous as against the attaching creditor, yet they have a prior title as against the appellant's father, who did not only appear on the scene much later but who knew of the plaintiffs' mortgage and had entered into an agreement to discharge the same. The appellant's contention that an equitable charge be declared in his favour cannot be, for the above reasons, upheld.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of plaintiffs-respondents.

A judgment-debtor whose property is sold in execution does not cease to be its owner capable of selling it effectively under certain conditions so long as he can apply to have the sale set aside, that is to say, till the expiration of 30 days from the date of sale.

After the expiry of such period for an application to set aside the auction sale, the auction purchaser can effectively sell the property purchased even in the absence of a confirmation of the sale by the Court, and the judgment-debtor ceases to have any saleable interest in that property.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—This is a petition to revise an order of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram whereby the sale held on 17th March, 1938, in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 5 of 1933 on the file of that Court was set aside under S. 23 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act on the application of the respondent.

The petitioner obtained the decree on foot of a mortgage executed in his favour by the respondent's brothers. The mortgage comprised in addition to certain other properties the six items of immovable property here in question to which the respondent claimed title under a will of her deceased father which is marked Ex. A in these proceedings. The respondent was impleaded as the fourth defendant in the suit and her claim to have these properties exonerated from liability failed as she was held estopped from setting up her own title to them by reason of having attested the mortgage, thereby leading the mortgagee to believe that the mortgagors had the right to mortgage the properties.

Three objections to the maintainability of the respondent's application under S. 23 of the Madras Act IV of 1938 were raised by learned counsel for the petitioner. The first was that out of the six items of property now in question, four were situated within the limits of Mayavaram Municipality and that therefore the respondent was not an agriculturist within the meaning of the definition in S. 3 (ii) of the Act. The other two items are admittedly agricultural lands situated outside the Municipality. The definition so far as it is material here says:

“‘Agriculturist’ means a person who (a) has a saleable interest in any agricultural or horticultural land in the Province of Madras not being land situated within a Municipality.”

This provision, it was said, means that any person who owns an agricultural land situated within a Municipality is not an agriculturist although he has such land outside the Municipal limits. This construction is clearly wrong. All that the definition requires is that the person who claims to be an agriculturist should have a saleable interest in an agricultural land situated outside a Municipality, and if he has such land, it is wholly immaterial whether or not he also owns agricultural lands within a municipality. Indeed, learned counsel for the petitioner did not seriously press this contention.

It was next argued that all that the respondent obtained under the will (Ex. A) was a mere right to enjoy the properties during her lifetime without any power of alienation, and that she had no saleable interest in them such as would bring her within the definition. Learned counsel laid stress on the words “hold and enjoy during her lifetime” used in connection with the disposition in favour of the respondent while the word ‘get’ was used in the grant to the respondent’s male issue, and argued that this indicated that the testator’s intention was to confer upon the respondent nothing more than a right of enjoyment. It was also urged that this construction should be adopted as it would give effect to the restraint imposed on the respondent’s powers of alienation which otherwise would be defeated as being void for repugnancy. We are unable to construe the will in the manner suggested. We do not consider that the testator used the words “hold and enjoy” in deliberate contradistinction to the word ‘get’ with a view to make clear that he was not conveying an estate in these properties to his daughter. The latter word is used in the disposition in favour of the respondent’s daughter which is also made subject to the same condition restraining alienation. We are of opinion that the testator intended to confer the same kind of estate on the respondent as he conferred upon her daughter, namely, a life estate in the properties, and that the condition absolutely restraining the disponees from alienating their interest in the properties is void as being repugnant to the nature of the estate granted. It follows that the respondent derived a saleable interest in these properties under her father's will Ex. A.

The last contention, which was also the main contention before us, was that inasmuch as the properties were sold on 17th March, 1938, that is, a few days before the commencement of the Act, the respondent ceased to have any saleable interest in these lands at the commencement of the Act or at the time of her application under S. 23, and was therefore disentitled to claim the benefit of that provision. This contention was not raised in the Court below and the respondent had no opportunity to show that, apart from the properties sold in Court auction, she owned other agricultural lands and was thus entitled to apply under the section. The point was however allowed to be raised as petitioner's learned counsel agreed that if his contention was accepted, the case might be remitted to the lower Court for ascertaining whether the respondent owns other agricultural lands.

It has to be observed that though the respondent's properties were sold in Court auction before the commencement of the Act, the sale had not been confirmed when the respondent applied on 20th June, 1938, under S. 23 of the Act, though the period of 30 days prescribed for an application under the Civil Procedure Code to set aside a sale in execution of a decree had expired, and no such application it was said had been made. The question for consideration, therefore, is whether in these circumstances the respondent can be held to have a saleable interest in the properties at the time when she instituted the proceedings out of which this revision petition has arisen.

It was argued for the petitioner that when a judgment-debtor's property is sold in Court auction and no application to set aside the sale has been made within 30 days under O. 21, rr. 89, 90 and 91, he has no saleable interest left in the property, as it must be deemed to have passed under the sale to the auction purchaser. It was pointed out that confirmation by Court is a mere ministerial act as the Court is bound to confirm the sale in such circumstances under O. 21, r. 92. There are no doubt, indications in the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code that an auction purchaser at a Court sale does not obtain title to the property immediately on his purchase.

O. 21, r. 92 (1) provides:

"Where no application is made under r. 89, r. 90 or r. 91, or where such application is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute."

Under S. 316 of the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the title to the property vested in the purchaser only from the date of the sale certificate while under S. 65 of the present Code, when the sale has become absolute, the property shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute. Again under O. 21, r. 89 a judgment-debtor whose property has been sold has been held entitled to apply to set aside the sale as the person "owning such property" in spite of the sale. In *Pandurang Laxman v. Govind Dada*¹, the judgment-debtor effected a private sale of the property sold in Court auction before such sale was confirmed, and the position was held to be not essentially different from a case where there is nothing more than an agreement for sale between the parties, as the conveyance, in such circumstances, could not operate unless the auction sale was set aside. In *Sundaram v. Mamsa Maruthar*², a Full Bench of this Court had to consider the question whether a judgment-debtor who after the sale of his property in Court auction sold it privately to a third party was entitled to apply under O. 21, r. 89. All the learned Judges proceeded on the view that after a Court sale, the judgment-debtor continues to be the owner of the property, though they expressed somewhat different opinions as to his position when he effects also a private sale of such property after the Court sale. Wallis, C. J., was of opinion that the private sale being valid as between the parties though it would operate only subject to the auction sale being set aside, the judgment-debtor could no longer be regarded as the owner of the property but was entitled to apply as a person holding an interest in the property by virtue a title acquired before the Court sale. Oldfield and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ., took the view that the judgment-debtor, in such circumstances, continued to be the owner notwithstanding the Court sale and the private sale. It is thus clear that a judgment-debtor whose property is sold does not cease to be its owner capable of selling it effectively under certain conditions, so long as he can apply to have the sale set aside, that is to say, till the expiration of 30 days from the date of sale. But, what is the position after that period? Can he still dispose of the property so as to pass an effective title to the transferee against the auction-purchaser? In other words, has he a 'saleable interest' in the property? Whatever could be said in support of an affirmative answer to this question if the matter were res integra, we consider that the decision of the Privy Council in *Zamindar of Polavaram v. Maharajah of Pittapur*¹, requires that it should be answered in the negative. In that case a decree-holder having purchased certain properties of his judgment-debtor at a Court sale in execution of a mortgage decree entered into a compromise with the judgment-debtor's guardian under which one of the properties purchased was to be left to the judgment-debtor in consideration of the latter agreeing to pay a certain sum and to abstain from raising objections to the sale of the properties. The compromise was sanctioned by the Court which confirmed the auction sale with the exception of the property which was agreed to be left to the judgment-debtor, and issued a sale certificate covering the other properties. A mortgage of that property subsequently executed for the sum agreed to be paid under the compromise having turned out to be inoperative for want of due attestation, the question arose whether the compromise amounted to a sale by the decree-holder purchaser in respect of which a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money could be claimed. In upholding the claim and overruling the objection that there could be no sale by the auction-purchaser to the judgment-debtor as the title to the property in question never passed to the former under the auction sale which was not confirmed in respect of that property, their Lordships observed:

"That village, along with other mortgaged property, was, as stated, sold to the plaintiff on 28th October, 1920; and the period within which the judgment-debtor could apply to the Court for setting aside the sale was thirty days from the date of the sale. During that period no such application was made by him, and the title of the auction-purchaser became unimpeachable. . . . It is obvious that, after the expiry of the statutory period for setting aside the sale, there was no person who could question the title of the auction-purchaser, and a certificate of sale granted by the Court would in such case be a formal document of title. In the absence of an order setting aside the sale the Court is bound to confirm it, and the law does not prescribe any special period for an application for an order of confirmation." (Italics ours.)

These observations are, in our view, decisive of the point now under consideration. They show that after the expiry of the period for an application to set aside an auction sale, the auction-purchaser can effectively sell the property purchased even in the absence of a confirmation of the auction sale by the Court or, in other words, that he has a 'saleable interest' in the property. If he has acquired such interest, it is difficult to see how the judgment-debtor can also be said to have a saleable interest in the same property, there being no question here of subordinate interests carved out of the property being owned by different persons.

It was urged by Mr. Seshagiri Sastri for the respondent that the abovementioned decision must be taken to have been based upon the rules made by the Local Government for the administration of the Agency tracts of the Madras Presidency as the property there in question lay within those tracts and it was pointed out that those rules do not provide for confirmation by Court of an auction sale or for issue of a sale certificate and that, on the other hand, title to the property vested under the rules in the purchaser immediately on his purchase. Our attention was drawn to the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant before this Court where this aspect was emphasised. (See *Zamindar of Polavaram v. Maharajah of Pittapuram*¹.) The decision could, no doubt, have been based on the provisions of those rules, but it is plain that the case was throughout dealt with on the footing that the Civil Procedure Code was applicable. The original auction sale was in fact confirmed and a sale certificate was also issued, though in respect of the other properties, and the discussion relevant to the present issue both in the judgment of this Court (see *Zamindar of Polavaram v. Maharajah of Pittapuram*¹) and in that of the Privy Council proceeded having the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in view, as the reference to confirmation by Court and sale certificate clearly shows. Indeed in the arguments of counsel before the Board as reported, no reference was made to the Agency Rules, while the relevant provisions of the Code were cited. We cannot therefore regard the decision of their Lordships as inapplicable here.

Mr. Seshagiri Sastri placed reliance on Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa¹ as showing that the title of a purchaser in Court auction becomes complete only on confirmation by Court. The case related to an income-tax assessment and the question was when the assessee, a money-lender who had purchased certain properties of his judgment-debtor in execution for the amount payable to him under a decree, could be said to have realised his debt. It was held that the interest on the debt could be deemed to have been realised only when the sale was confirmed. Their Lordships did not have to consider the position of a judgment-debtor in relation to the property sold in Court-auction after the expiry of the period prescribed for setting aside the sale where no confirmation follows, and the decision is no authority for the view that he has, in such circumstances, a saleable interest in the property.

It was said that apart from O. 21, rr. 89, 90 and 91, the Court can set aside auction sales under S. 47 on other grounds (see the cases collected in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, Tenth Edition, p. 185) and can also refuse to confirm such sales under its inherent powers (*Raghavachariar v. Murugesu Mudaliar*² and *Govinda Padayachi v. Murugayya Chettiar*³) and that therefore it cannot be said that the auction-purchaser acquires an indefeasible title before confirmation. These cases proceed on the ground that the sale was either a nullity or was tainted by fraud on Court to which the purchaser was privy, and have not, in our opinion, much bearing upon the narrow point arising for consideration before us.

In the result, the order of the Court below is set aside and the case is remitted to that Court for disposal after enquiry as to whether the respondent had a saleable interest in other agricultural lands apart from the properties sold in Court auction, and also whether in fact no application for setting aside the sale had been made before the proceeding under S. 23 of the Act was instituted, no finding having been recorded on these points. Both parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence. Costs in this Court will abide and follow the result.

The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) for the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The complaint against the first accused is only under S. 403 of the Indian Penal Code and accused 2 to 4 were not parties to the proceedings under the Legal Practitioners' Act. A complaint of the Court is not necessary for prosecuting these accused for an offence under S. 467 of the Indian Penal Code nor does any question of evading the provisions of S. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure arise as in Appadurai Nainar, *In re*¹. The Court was moved to make a complaint against them and the making of a complaint by the Court for an offence under S. 193 of the Indian Penal Code was considered unnecessary as accused 2 to 4 could be prosecuted for the graver offence under S. 467 of the Indian Penal Code without a complaint of the Court. There is therefore no ground for interference and the revision petition is dismissed.

Where the suit is against an agriculturist and a non-agriculturist defendant the Court which scales down the debt at the instance of the agriculturist debtor cannot direct him to pay the full amount of the decree as scaled down. Under S. 14 (b) of Madras Act IV of 1938 his liability extends only to his proportionate share of the decree scaled down in his favour.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying that the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Tenali dated 7th January, 1939 and made in C. M. P. No. 1236 of 1938 in O. S. No. 418 of 1931.

JUDGMENT.—It seems that the trial Court's order is clearly wrong in so far as it directs the petitioner—the agriculturist defendant—to pay the full amount of the decree as scaled down. Under S. 14 (b) of Madras Act IV of 1938 his liability extends only to his proportionate share in the decree which must be scaled down in his favour. So the decree against him has to be reduced from Rs. 585 to Rs. 292-8-0, with interest thereon from 1st October, 1937, at 6½ per cent. Petitioner also contends that the lower Court is wrong in making the non-agriculturist defendant liable for the full amount of the decree as passed and that this order offends against S. 14 (a) of the Act. This is a contention which cannot be raised by the petitioner who is not concerned in that portion of the order. The petition is allowed to the extent indicated and the decree-holder respondent will pay petitioner's costs.

9. No word which the commonly used and accepted name of any single chemical element or single chemical compound (as distinguished from a mixture) shall be registered as a trade mark in respect of a chemical substance or preparation, and any such registration shall, notwithstanding anything in section 24, be deemed for the purposes of section 46 to be an entry made in the register without sufficient cause or an entry wrongly remaining on the register, as the circumstances may require :

Use of names of chemical elements barred.

Provided that this section shall not apply to a word which is used to denote only a brand or make of the element or compound as made by the proprietor or a registered user of the trade mark, as distinguished from the element or compound as made by others, and in association with a suitable name or description open to the public use.

10. (1) Save as provided in sub-section (2), no trade mark shall be registered in respect of any goods or description of goods which is identical with a trade mark belonging to a different proprietor and already on the register in respect of the same goods or description of goods, or which so nearly resembles such trade mark as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion.

Prohibition of registration of identical or similar trade mark.

(2) In case of honest concurrent use or of other special circumstances which, in the opinion of the Registrar, make it proper so to do he may permit the registration by more than one proprietor of trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other in respect of the same goods or description of goods, subject to such conditions and limitations, if any, as the Registrar may think fit to impose.

(3) Where separate applications are made by different persons to be registered as proprietors respectively of trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other, in respect of the same goods or description of goods, the Registrar may refuse to register any of them until their rights have been determined by a competent Court.

Registration of parts of trade marks and of trade marks as a series

11. (1) Where the proprietor of a trade mark claims to be entitled to the exclusive use of any part thereof separately, he may apply to register the whole and the part as separate trade marks.

(2) Each such separate trade mark shall satisfy all the conditions applying to, and have all the incidents of, an independent trade mark.

(3) Where a person claiming to be the proprietor of several trade marks in respect of the same goods or description of goods which, while resembling each other in the material particulars thereof, yet differ in respect of—

(a) statements of the goods in relation to which they are respectively used or proposed to be used ; or

(b) statements of number, price, quality, or names of places ; or

(c) other matter of a non-distinctive character which does not substantially affect the identity of the trade mark ; or seeks to register those trade marks, they may be registered as a series in one registration.

(d) colour ;

12. (1) Where a trade mark which is registered, or is the subject of an application for registration, in respect of any goods is identical with another trade mark which is registered, or is the subject of an application for registration, in the name of the same proprietor in respect of the same goods or description of goods, or so nearly resembles it as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion if used by a person other than the proprietor, the Registrar may at any time require that the trade marks shall be entered on the register as associated trade marks.

Associated trade marks.

(2) Where a trade mark and any part thereof are, in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 11, registered as separate trade marks in the name of the same proprietor, they shall be deemed to be, and shall be registered as, associated trade marks.

(3) All trade marks registered in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3) of section 11 as a series in one registration shall be deemed to be, and shall be registered as, associated trade marks.

(4) On application made in the prescribed manner by the registered proprietor of two or more trade marks registered as associated trade marks, the Registrar may dissolve the association as respects any of them if he is satisfied that there would be no likelihood of deception or confusion being caused if that trade mark were used by any other person in relation to any of the goods in respect of which it is registered, and may amend the register accordingly.

Registration subject to disclaimer.

13. If a trade mark contains—

(a) any part not separately registered as a trade mark in the name of the proprietor, or for the separate registration of which no application has been made, or

(b) any matter common to the trade, or otherwise of a non-distinctive character, the tribunal, in deciding whether the trade mark shall be entered or shall remain on the register, may require, as a condition of its being on the register, that the proprietor shall either disclaim any right to the exclusive use of such part or of all or any portion of such matter, as the case may be, to the exclusive use of which the tribunal holds him not to be entitled, or make such other disclaimer as the tribunal may consider necessary for the purpose of defining the rights of the proprietor under the registration :

Provided that no disclaimer shall affect any rights of the proprietor of a trade mark except such as arise out of the registration of the trade mark in respect of which the disclaimer is made.

CHAPTER III.

PROCEDURE FOR, AND DURATION OF, REGISTRATION.

14. (1) Any person claiming to be the proprietor of a trade mark used or proposed to be used by him who is desirous of registering it shall apply in writing to the Registrar in the prescribed manner, and subject to the provisions of this Act, the Registrar may refuse the application or may accept it absolutely or subject to such amendments, modifications, conditions or limitations, if any, as he may think fit.

(2) In the case of a refusal or conditional acceptance the Registrar shall, if required by the applicant, state in writing the grounds of his decision and the materials used by him in arriving thereat.

(3) The tribunal may at any time, whether before or after acceptance, correct any error in or in connection with the application, or may permit the applicant to amend his application upon such terms as it may think fit.

15. (1) When an application for registration of a trade mark has been accepted, whether absolutely or subject to conditions or limitations, the Registrar shall, as soon as may be after acceptance, cause the application as accepted, together with the conditions and limitations, if any, subject to which it has been accepted, to be advertised in the prescribed manner :

Provided that the Registrar may cause an application to be advertised before acceptance if it relates to a trade mark to which clause (e) of sub-section (1) of section 6 applies, or in any other case where it appears to him that it is expedient by reason of any exceptional circumstances so to do, and where an application has been so advertised the Registrar may, if he thinks fit, advertise it again when it has been accepted, but shall not be bound so to do.

(2) Any person may, within the prescribed time from the date of the advertisement of an application, give notice in writing in the prescribed manner to the Registrar of opposition to the registration.

(3) The Registrar shall serve in the prescribed manner a copy of the notice on the applicant, and within the prescribed time the applicant shall send to the Registrar, in the prescribed manner, a counter-statement of the grounds on which he relies for his application, and, if he does not do so, he shall be deemed to have abandoned his application.

(4) If the applicant sends such counter-statement, the Registrar shall serve in the prescribed manner a copy thereof on the persons giving notice of opposition, and shall, after hearing the parties, if so required, and considering the evidence, decide whether, and subject to what conditions or limitations, if any, registration is to be permitted.

(5) If a person giving notice of opposition or an applicant sending a counter-statement after receipt of a copy of such notice, or an appellant against any order of the Registrar under section 14 or this section, neither resides nor carries on business in British India, the tribunal may require him to give security for costs of the proceedings before it, and in default of such security being duly given may treat the opposition or application or appeal, as the case may be, as abandoned.

16. (1) When an application for registration of a trade mark has been accepted and either has not been opposed and the time for notice of opposition has expired, or having been opposed, has been decided in favour of the applicant, the Registrar shall, unless the application has been accepted in error, or unless the Central Government otherwise directs, register the said trade mark, and the trade mark, when registered, shall be registered as of the date of the making of the said application, and that date shall, subject to any directions made under section 83 applicable to such trade mark, be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be the date of registration.

(2) On the registration of a trade mark the Registrar shall issue to the applicant a certificate in the prescribed form of the registration thereof sealed with the seal of the Patent Office.

(3) Where registration of a trade mark is not completed within twelve months from the date of the application by reason of default on the part of the applicant, the Registrar may, after giving notice to the applicant in the prescribed manner, treat the application as abandoned unless it is completed within the time specified in that behalf in the notice.

17. (1) Save as provided in sub-section (2), nothing in this Act shall authorise the registration of two or more persons who use a trade mark independently, or propose so to use it, as joint proprietors thereof.

(2) Where the relations between two or more persons interested in a trade mark are such that no one of them is entitled as between himself and the other or others of them to use it except—

(a) on behalf of both or all of them, or

(b) in relation to an article with which both or all of them are connected in the course of trade, those persons may be registered as joint proprietors of the trade mark, and this Act shall have effect in relation to any rights to the use of the trade mark vested in those persons as if those rights had been vested in a single person.

18. (1) The registration of a trade mark shall be for a period of seven years, but may be renewed from time to time in accordance with the provisions of this section.

Duration and renewal of registration.

(2) The Registrar shall, on application made by the registered proprietor of a trade mark in the prescribed manner and within the prescribed period, renew the registration of the trade mark for a period of fifteen years from the date of expiration of the original registration or of the last renewal of registration, as the case may be (which date is in this section referred to as "the expiration of the last registration").

(3) At the prescribed time before the expiration of the last registration of a trade mark, the Registrar shall send notice in the prescribed manner to the registered proprietor of the date of expiration and the conditions as to payment of fees and otherwise upon which a renewal of registration may be obtained, and if at the expiration of the time prescribed in that behalf those conditions have not been duly complied with the Registrar may remove the trade mark from the register, subject to such conditions (if any) as to its restoration to the register as may be prescribed.

19. Where a trade mark has been removed from the register for failure to pay the fee for renewal, it shall nevertheless, for the purpose of any application for the registration of another trade mark during one year next after the date of the removal, be deemed to be a trade mark already on the register, unless the tribunal is satisfied either—

(a) that there has been no bona fide trade use of the trade mark which has been removed during the two years immediately preceding its removal; or

(b) that no deception or confusion would be likely to arise from the use of the trade mark which is the subject of the application for registration by reason of any previous use of the trade mark which has been removed.

CHAPTER IV.

EFFECT OF REGISTRATION.

20. (1) No person shall be entitled to institute any proceeding to prevent, or to recover damages for, the infringement of an unregistered trade mark unless such trade mark has been continuously in use since before the 25th day of February, 1937, by such person or by a predecessor in title of his and unless an application for its registration, made within five years from the commencement of this Act, has been refused; and the Registrar shall, on application in the prescribed manner, grant a certificate that such application has been refused.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to affect rights of action against any person for passing off goods as the goods of another person or the remedies in respect thereof.

21. Subject to the provisions of sections 22, 25 and 26, the registration of a person in the register as proprietor of a trade mark in respect of any goods shall, if valid, give to that person the exclusive right to the use of the trade mark in relation to those goods and, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, that right shall be deemed to be infringed by any person who, not being the proprietor of the trade mark or a registered user thereof using by way of the permitted use, uses a mark identical with it or so nearly resembling it as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion, in the course of trade, in relation to any goods in respect of which it is registered, and in such manner as to render the use of the mark likely to be taken either—

(a) as being use as a trade mark; or

(b) to import a reference to some person having the right either as a proprietor or as registered user to use the trade mark or to goods with which such a person as aforesaid is connected in the course of trade.

22. (1) The right to the use of a trade mark given under section 21 by registration shall be subject to any conditions or limitations entered on the register, and shall not be deemed to be infringed by the use of any such mark as aforesaid in any mode, in relation to goods to be sold or otherwise traded in, in any place, or in relation to goods to be exported to any market, or in any other circumstances, to which, having regard to any such limitations, the registration does not extend.

(2) The said right to the use of a trade mark shall not be deemed to be infringed by the use of any such mark as aforesaid by any person—

(a) in relation to goods connected in the course of trade with the proprietor or a registered user of the trade mark if, as to those goods or a bulk of which they form part, the proprietor or the registered user conforming to the permitted use has applied the trade mark and has not subsequently removed or obliterated it, or has at any time expressly or impliedly consented to the use of the trade mark; or

(b) in relation to goods adapted to form part of, or to be accessory to, other goods in relation to which the trade mark has been used without infringement of the right given as aforesaid or might for the time being be so used, if the use of the mark is reasonably necessary in order to indicate that the goods are so adapted and neither the purpose nor the effect of the use of the mark is to indicate otherwise than in accordance with the fact a connection in the course of trade between any person and the goods.

(3) The use of a registered trade mark, being one of two or more registered trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other, in exercise of the right to the use of that trade mark given by registration as aforesaid, shall not be deemed to be an infringement of the right so given to the use of any other of those trade marks.

23. In all legal proceedings relating to a registered trade mark, the fact that a person is registered as proprietor thereof shall be Registration to be prima facie evidence of validity. prima facie evidence of the validity of the original registration of the trade mark and of all subsequent assignments and transmissions thereof.

24. In all legal proceedings relating to a registered trade mark, the original registration of the trade mark shall after the expiration of seven years from the date of such original registration be taken to be valid in all respects unless such registration was obtained by fraud, or unless the trade mark Registration to be conclusive as to validity after seven years. offends against the provisions of section 8.

25. Nothing in this Act shall entitle the proprietor or a registered user of a registered trade mark to interfere with or restrain the use by any person of a trade mark identical with or nearly resembling it in relation to goods in relation to which that person or a predecessor in title of his has continuously used that trade mark from a date prior— Saving for vested rights.

(a) to the use of the first-mentioned trade mark in relation to those goods by the proprietor or a predecessor in title of his, or

(b) to the registration of the first-mentioned trade mark in respect of those goods in the name of the proprietor or a predecessor in title of his, whichever is the earlier, or to object (on such use being proved) to registration of that identical or nearly resembling trade mark in respect of those goods under subsection (2) of section 10.

26. No registration of a trade mark shall interfere with any bona fide use by a person of his own name or that of his place of business, or of the name, or of the name of the place of business, of any of his predecessors in business, or the use by any person of any bona fide description of the character or quality of his goods, not being Saving for use of name, address, or description of goods.

a description that would be likely to be taken as importing any such reference as is mentioned in clause (b) of section 21 or in clause (b) of section 57.

27. (1) The registration of a trade mark shall not be deemed to have become invalid by reason only of any use after the date of the registration of any words which the trade mark contains or of which it consists as the name or description of an article or substance.

Provided that, if it is proved either—

(a) that there is a well-known and established use of the said words as the name or description of the article or substance by a person or persons carrying on a trade therein, not being use in relation to goods connected in the course of trade with the proprietor or a registered user of the trade mark or (in the case of a certification trade mark), goods certified by the proprietor; or

(b) that the article or substance has been manufactured under a patent in force at or granted after the commencement of this section, that a period of two years or more after the cesser of the patent has elapsed, and that the said words are the only practicable name or description of the article or substance,—the provisions of sub-section (2) shall apply.

(2) Where the facts mentioned in clause (a) or clause (b) of the proviso to sub-section (1) are proved with respect to any words, then—

(a) for the purposes of any proceedings under section 46—

(i) if the trade mark consists solely of such words, the registration of the trade mark, so far as regards registration in respect of the article or substance in question or of any goods of the same description, shall be deemed to be an entry wrongly remaining on the register;

(ii) if the trade mark contains such words and other matter, the tribunal, in deciding whether the trade mark shall remain on the register, so far as regards registration in respect of the article or substance in question and of any goods of the same description, may, in case of a decision in favour of its remaining on the register, require as a condition thereof that the proprietor shall disclaim any right to the exclusive use in relation to that article or substance and any goods of the same description, of such words, provided that no disclaimer shall affect any rights of the proprietor of a trade mark except such as arise out of the registration of the trade mark in respect of which the disclaimer is made;

(b) for the purposes of any other legal proceedings relating to the trade mark,—

(i) if the trade mark consists solely of such words, all rights of the proprietor under this Act or any other law to the exclusive use of the trade mark in relation to the article or substance in question or to any goods of the same description, or

(ii) if the trade mark contains such words and other matter, all such rights of the proprietor to the exclusive use of such words, in such relation as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have ceased on the date at which the use mentioned in clause (a) of the proviso to sub-section (1) first became well-known and established, or at the expiration of the period of two years mentioned in clause (b) of the said proviso.

CHAPTER V.

ASSIGNMENT AND TRANSMISSION.

28. The person for the time being entered in the register as proprietor of a trade mark shall, subject to the provisions of this Act and to any rights appearing from the register to be vested in any other person, have power to assign the trade mark, and to give effectual receipts for any consideration for such assignment.

29. Notwithstanding anything in any other law to the contrary; a registered trade mark shall, subject to the provisions of this Chapter, be assignable and transmissible whether in connection with the goodwill of a business or not, and in respect either of all of the goods in respect of which it is registered or of some only of those goods.

Assignability of registered trade marks. 30. An unregistered trade mark shall be assignable and transmissible whether in connection with the goodwill of a business or not :

Provided that, except in connection with the good will of a business, assignment or transmission shall be permissible only if—

(a) at the time of assignment or transmission of the unregistered trade mark it is used in the same business as a registered trade mark, and

(b) the registered trade mark is assigned or transmitted at the same time and to the same person as the unregistered trade mark, and

(c) the unregistered trade mark relates to goods in respect of which the registered trade mark is assigned or transmitted.

31. (1) Notwithstanding anything in sections 29 and 30, a trade mark shall not be assignable or transmissible in a case in which as a result of the assignment or transmission there would in the circumstances subsist, whether under this Act or any other law, exclusive rights in more than one of the persons concerned to the use, in relation to the same goods or description of goods, of trade marks nearly resembling each other or of identical trade marks, if, having regard to the similarity of the goods and of the trade marks, the use of the trade marks in exercise of those rights would be likely to deceive or cause confusion :

Restrictions on assignment or transmission where multiple exclusive rights would be created. Provided that an assignment or transmission shall not be deemed to be invalid under this sub-section if the exclusive rights subsisting as a result thereof in the persons concerned respectively are, having regard to limitations imposed thereon, such as not to be exercisable by two or more of those persons in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, within British India (otherwise than for export therefrom), or in relation to goods to be exported to the same market outside British India.

(2) The proprietor of a registered trade mark who proposes to assign it may submit to the Registrar in the prescribed manner a statement of case setting out the circumstances and the Registrar may issue to him a certificate stating whether, having regard to the similarity of the goods and of the trade marks referred to in the case, the proposed assignment would or would not be invalid under sub-section (1), and a certificate so issued shall, subject to appeal and unless it is shown that the certificate was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, be conclusive as to the validity or invalidity under sub-section (1) of the assignment in so far as such validity or invalidity depends upon the facts set out in the case, but, as regards a certificate in favour of validity, only if application for the registration under section 35 of the title of the person becoming entitled is made within six months from the date on which the certificate is issued.

32. Notwithstanding anything in sections 29 and 30, a trade mark shall not be assignable or transmissible in a case in which as a result of the assignment or transmission there would in the circumstances subsist, whether under this Act or any other law, an exclusive right in one of the persons concerned to the use of the trade mark limited to use in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, in any place in British India and an exclusive right in another of these persons to the use of a trade mark nearly resembling the first-mentioned trade mark or of an identical trade mark in relation to the same goods or description of goods limited to use in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, in any other place in British India :

Provided that in any such case, on application in the prescribed manner by the proprietor of a trade mark who proposes to assign it, or by a person who claims that a registered trade mark has been transmitted to him or to a predecessor in title of his since the commencement of this Act, the Registrar, if he is satisfied that in all the circumstances the use of the trade mark in exercise of the said rights would not be contrary to the public interest, may approve the assignment or transmission, and an assignment or transmission so approved shall not, unless it is shown that the approval was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, be deemed to be invalid under this section or section 31 if application for the registration under section 35 of the title of the person becoming entitled is made within six months from the date on which the approval is given or, in the case of a transmission, was made before that date.

33. Where an assignment in respect of any goods of a trade mark which is at the time of the assignment used in a business in those goods, is made after the commencement of this Act otherwise than in connection with the goodwill of that business, the assignment shall not take effect unless the assignee, not later than the expiration of six months from the date on which the assignment is made or within such extended period, if any, as the Registrar may allow, applies to the Registrar for directions with respect to the advertisement of the assignment, and advertises it in such form and manner and within such period as a Registrar may direct.

Conditions for assignment and transmission of certification trade marks and associated trade marks.

34. (1) A certification trade mark shall not be assignable or transmissible otherwise than with the consent of the Central Government, for which application shall be made in writing in the prescribed manner through the Registrar.

(2) Associated trade marks shall be assignable and transmissible only as a whole and not separately.

35. (1) Where a person becomes entitled by assignment or transmission to a registered trade mark, he shall apply in the prescribed manner to the Registrar to register his title, and the Registrar shall on receipt of the application and on proof of title to his satisfaction, register him as the proprietor of the trade mark in respect of the goods in respect of which the assignment or transmission has effect, and shall cause particulars of the assignment or transmission to be entered on the register.

(2) Except for the purposes of an appeal against a decision of the Registrar under sub-section (1) or of an application under section 46, a document or instrument in respect of which no entry has been made in the register in accordance with sub-section (1) shall not be admitted in evidence before any tribunal in proof of the title to a trade mark unless the tribunal otherwise directs.

CHAPTER VI.

USE OF TRADE MARKS AND REGISTERED USERS.

36. (1) No application for the registration of a trade mark in respect of any Proposed use of trade mark by company to be formed.

goods shall be refused, nor shall permission for such registration be withheld, on the ground only that it appears that the applicant does not use or propose to use the trade mark, if the Registrar is satisfied that a company is about to be formed and registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, and that the applicant intends to assign the trade mark to that company with a view to the use thereof in relation to those goods by the company.

(2) The tribunal may, in a case to which sub-section (1) applies, require the applicant to give security for the costs of any proceedings relative to any opposition or appeal, and in default of such security being duly given may treat the application as abandoned.

(3) Where in a case to which sub-section (1) applies, a trade mark in respect of any goods is registered in the name of an applicant who relies on intention to assign to a company, then, unless within such period as may be prescribed, or within such further period not exceeding six months as the Registrar may, on application being made to him in the prescribed manner, allow, the company has been registered as the proprietor of the trade mark in respect of those goods, the registration shall cease to have effect in respect thereof at the expiration of that period, and the Registrar shall amend the register accordingly.

37. (1) Subject to the provisions of section 38, a registered trade mark may be taken off the register in respect of any of the goods in respect of which it is registered on application in the prescribed manner by any person aggrieved to a High Court or to the Registrar, on the ground either—

Removal from register and imposition of limitations on ground of non-use

(a) that the trade mark was registered without any bona fide intention on the part of the applicant for registration that it should be used in relation to those goods by him, or in a case to which the provisions of section 36 apply, by the company concerned, and that there has in fact been no bona fide use of the trade mark in relation to those goods by any proprietor thereof for the time being up to a date one month before the date of the application; or

(b) that up to a date one month before the date of the application, a continuous period of five years or longer elapsed during which the trade mark was registered and during which there was no bona fide use thereof in relation to those goods by any proprietor thereof for the time being:

Provided that, except where the applicant has been permitted under sub-section (2) of section 10 to register an identical or nearly resembling trade mark in respect of the goods in question or where the tribunal is of opinion that he might properly be permitted so to register such a trade mark, the tribunal may refuse an application made under clause (a) or clause (b) in relation to any goods, if it is shown that there has been, before the relevant date or during the relevant period, as the case may be, bona fide use of the trade mark by any proprietor thereof for the time being in relation to goods of the same description, being goods in respect of which the trade mark is registered.

(2) Where in relation to any goods in respect of which a trade mark is registered—

(a) the circumstances referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) are shown to exist so far as regards non-use of the trade mark in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, in a particular place in British India (otherwise than for export from British India), or in relation to goods to be exported to a particular market outside British India, and

(b) a person has been permitted under sub-section (2) of section 10 to register an identical or nearly resembling trade mark in respect of those goods under a registration extending to use in relation to goods to be so sold, or otherwise traded in, or in relation to goods to be so exported, or the tribunal is of opinion that he might properly be permitted so to register such a trade mark, on application by that person in the prescribed manner to a High Court or to the Registrar, the tribunal may impose on the registration of the first-mentioned trade mark such limitations as it thinks proper for securing that that registration shall cease to extend to such use.

(3) An applicant shall not be entitled to rely for the purpose of clause (b) of sub-section (1) or of sub-section (2) on any non-use of a trade mark which is shown to have been due to special circumstances in the trade and not to any intention to abandon or not to use the trade mark in relation to the goods to which the application relates.

38. (1) Where a trade mark consisting of any invented word has become so well-known as respects any goods in relation to which it is registered and has been used, that the use thereof in relation to other goods would be likely to be taken as indicating a connection in the course of trade between those goods and a person entitled to use the trade mark in relation to the first-mentioned goods, then, notwithstanding that the proprietor registered in respect of the first-mentioned goods does not use or propose to use the trade mark in relation to those other goods and notwithstanding anything in section 37, the trade mark may on application in the prescribed manner by such proprietor be registered in his name in respect of those other goods as a defensive trade mark and, while so registered, shall not be liable to be taken off the register in respect of those goods under the said section.

(2) The registered proprietor of a trade mark may apply for the registration thereof in respect of any goods as a defensive trade mark notwithstanding that it is already registered in his name in respect of those goods otherwise than as a defensive trade mark, or may apply for the registration thereof in respect of any goods otherwise than as a defensive trade mark notwithstanding that it is already registered in his name in respect of those goods as a defensive trade mark, in lieu in each case of the existing registration.

(3) A trade mark registered as a defensive trade mark and that trade mark as otherwise registered in the name of the same proprietor shall, notwithstanding that the respective registrations are in respect of different goods, be deemed to be, and shall be registered as, associated trade marks.

(4) On application in the prescribed manner by any person aggrieved to a High Court or to the Registrar, the registration of a trade mark as a defensive trade mark may be cancelled on the ground that the requirements of sub-section (1) are no longer satisfied in respect of any goods in relation to which the trade mark is registered in the name of the same proprietor otherwise than as a defensive trade mark, or may be cancelled as respects any goods in relation to which it is registered as a defensive trade mark on the ground that there is no longer any likelihood that the use of the trade mark in relation to those goods would be taken as giving the indication mentioned in sub-section (1).

(5) The Registrar may at any time cancel the registration as a defensive trade mark of a trade mark of which there is no longer any registration in the name of the same proprietor otherwise than as a defensive trade mark.

(6) Except as otherwise expressly provided in this section, the provisions of this Act shall apply in respect of the registration of trade marks as defensive trade marks and of trade marks so registered as they apply in other cases.

39. (1) A person other than the proprietor of a trade mark may be registered as a registered user thereof in respect of all or any of the goods in respect of which it is registered (otherwise than as a defensive trade mark) and either with or without conditions or restrictions.

(2) The permitted use of a trade mark shall be deemed to be use by the proprietor thereof, and shall be deemed not to be use by a person other than the proprietor, for any purpose for which such use is material under this Act or any other law.

40. (1) Subject to any agreement subsisting between the parties, a registered user of a trade mark shall be entitled to call upon the proprietor thereof to take proceedings to prevent infringement thereof, and if the proprietor refuses or neglects to do so within three months after being so called upon, the registered user may institute proceedings for infringement in his own name as if he were the proprietor, making the proprietor a defendant.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law, a proprietor so added as defendant shall not be liable for any costs unless he enters an appearance and takes part in the proceedings.

41. (1) Where it is proposed that a person should be registered as a registered user of a trade mark, the proprietor and the proposed registered user shall make application in writing to the Registrar in the prescribed manner accompanied by an affidavit made by the proprietor, or by some person authorised to the satisfaction of the Registrar to act on his behalf,—

(a) giving particulars of the relationship, existing or proposed, between the proprietor and the proposed registered user, including particulars showing the degree of control by the proprietor over the permitted use which their relationship will confer and whether it is a term of their relationship that the proposed registered user shall be the sole registered user or that there shall be any other restriction as to persons for whose registration as registered users application may be made ;

(b) stating the goods in respect of which registration is proposed ;

(c) stating any conditions or restrictions proposed with respect to the characteristics of the goods, to the mode or place of permitted use, or to any other matter ;

(d) stating whether the permitted use is to be for a period or without limit of period, and, if for a period, the duration thereof ;
and by such further documents, information or evidence as may be required by the Registrar or as may be prescribed.

(2) When the requirements of sub-section (1) have been complied with, if the Registrar is satisfied that in all the circumstances the use of the trade mark in respect of the proposed goods or any of them by the proposed registered user subject to any conditions or restrictions which the Registrar may think proper, would not be contrary to the public interest, the Registrar may register, subject as aforesaid, the proposed registered user as a registered user in respect of the goods as to which he is so satisfied.

(3) The Registrar shall refuse an application under this section if it appears to him that the grant thereof would tend to facilitate trafficking in a trade mark.

(4) The Registrar shall, if so requested by an applicant, take steps for securing that information given for the purposes of an application under this section (other than matter entered in the register) is not disclosed to rivals in trade.

(5) The Registrar shall issue notice in the prescribed manner—

(b) of an application under section 42, to the registered proprietor, and each registered user, (not being the applicant) of the trade mark.

Power to Registrar to vary or cancel registration as registered user. 42. Without prejudice to the provisions of section 46, the registration of a person as a registered user—

(a) may be varied by the Registrar as regards the goods in respect of which, or any conditions or restrictions subject to which, it has effect, on the application in writing in the prescribed manner of the registered proprietor of the trade mark ;

(b) may be cancelled by the Registrar on the application in writing in the prescribed manner of the registered proprietor or of the registered user or of any other registered user of the trade mark ;

(c) may be cancelled by the Registrar on the application in writing in the prescribed manner of any person on any of the following grounds, namely :—

(i) that the registered user has used the trade mark otherwise than by way of the permitted use, or in such a way as to cause or to be likely to cause, deception or confusion ;

(ii) that the proprietor or the registered user misrepresented; or failed to disclose, some fact material to the application for the registration, or that the circumstances have materially changed since the date of the registration;

(iii) that the registration ought not to have been effected having regard to rights vested in the applicant by virtue of a contract in the performance of which he is interested;

(d) may be cancelled by the Registrar in respect of any goods in relation to which the trade mark is no longer registered.

Registered user not to have right of assignment or transmission.

43. Nothing in this Act shall confer on a registered user of a trade mark any assignable or transmissible right to the use thereof.

44. (1) Where under the provisions of this Act use of a registered trade mark is required to be proved for any purpose, the tribunal may, if and so far as it shall think right, accept use of a registered associated trade mark, or of the trade mark with additions or alterations not substantially affecting its identity, as an equivalent for the use required to be proved.

(2) The use of the whole of a registered trade mark shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed to be also a use of any trade mark being a part thereof and registered in accordance with sub-section (1) of section 11 in the name of the same proprietor.

45. (1) The application in British India of a trade mark to goods to be exported from British India, and any other act done in British India in relation to goods to be so exported which, if done in relation to goods to be sold or otherwise traded in within British India would constitute use of a trade mark therein, shall be deemed to constitute use of the trade mark in relation to those goods for any purpose for which such use is material under this Act or any other law.

(2) The use of a registered trade mark in relation to goods between which and the person using the mark any form of connection in the course of trade subsists shall not be deemed to be likely to cause deception or confusion on the ground only that the mark has been or is used in relation to goods between which and the person using the mark or any predecessor in his business different form of connection in the course of trade subsisted or subsists.

CHAPTER VII.

RECTIFICATION AND CORRECTION OF THE REGISTER.

46. (1) On application in the prescribed manner by any person aggrieved to a High Court or to the Registrar, the tribunal may make such order as it may think fit for cancelling or varying the registration of a trade mark on the ground of any contravention of, or failure to observe a condition entered on the register in relation thereto.

(2) Any person aggrieved by the absence or omission from the register of any entry, or by any entry made in the register without sufficient cause, or by any entry wrongly remaining on the register, or by any error or defect in any entry in the register, may apply in the prescribed manner to a High Court or to the Registrar, and the tribunal may make such order for making, expunging or varying the entry as it may think fit.

(3) The tribunal may in any proceeding under this section decide any question that it may be necessary or expedient to decide in connection with the rectification of the register.

(4) A High Court or the Registrar, of its or his own motion, may, after giving notice in the prescribed manner to the parties concerned and after giving them an opportunity of being heard, make any order referred to in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2).

(5) Any order of the Court rectifying the register shall direct that notice of the rectification shall be served upon the Registrar in the prescribed manner who shall upon receipt of such notice rectify the register accordingly.

Correction of register

47. (1) The Registrar may, on application made in the prescribed manner by the registered proprietor,—

(a) correct any error in the name, address or description of the registered proprietor of a trade mark ;

(b) enter any change in the name, address or description of the person who is registered as proprietor of a trade mark ;

(c) cancel the entry of a trade mark on the register ;

(d) strike out any goods or classes of goods from those in respect of which a trade mark is registered ;

(e) enter a disclaimer or memorandum relating to a trade mark which does not in any way extend the rights given by the existing registration of the trade mark.

(2) The Registrar may, on application made in the prescribed manner by a registered user of a trade mark, correct any error, or enter any change, in the name, address or description of the registered user.

48. (1) The registered proprietor of a trade mark may apply in the prescribed manner to the Registrar for leave to add to or alter the trade mark in any manner not substantially affecting the identity thereof, and the Registrar may refuse leave or may grant it on such terms and subject to such limitations as he may think fit.

(2) The Registrar may cause an application under this section to be advertised in the prescribed manner in any case where it appears to him that it is expedient so to do, and where he does so, if within the prescribed time from the date of the advertisement any person gives notice to the Registrar in the prescribed manner of opposition to the application, the Registrar shall, after hearing the parties if so required, decide the matter.

(3) Where leave is granted under this section, the trade mark as altered shall be advertised in the prescribed manner, unless the application has already been advertised under sub-section (2).

49. (1) The Registrar shall not, in exercise of any power conferred on him under clause (a) of sub-section (2) of section 84, make any amendment of the register which would have the effect of adding any goods or classes of goods to those in respect of which a trade mark is registered (whether in one or more classes) immediately before the amendment is to be made, or of antedating the registration of a trade mark in respect of any goods :

Adaptation of entries in register to amended or substituted classification of goods.

Provided that this sub-section shall not apply when the Registrar is satisfied that compliance therewith would involve undue complexity and that the addition or antedating, as the case may be, would not affect any substantial quantity of goods and would not substantially prejudice the rights of any person.

(2) A proposal so to amend the register shall be notified to the registered proprietor of the trade mark affected and advertised in the prescribed manner, and may be opposed before the Registrar by any person aggrieved on the ground that the proposed amendment contravenes the provisions of sub-section (1).

CHAPTER VIII.

CERTIFICATION TRADE MARKS.

50. Subject to the provisions of this Chapter, the other provisions of this Act except sections 6, 21, 22, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42 and 43 and sub-section (2) of section 45 shall apply to certification trade marks as they apply to trade marks.

Provisions of this Act applicable to certification trade marks

51. A mark shall not be registrable as a certification trade mark in the name of a person who carries on a trade in goods of the kind certified.

Certification trade mark not to be registered in name of person trading in goods certified thereby.

52. In determining whether a mark is adapted to distinguish in accordance with the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 2, the tribunal may have regard to the extent to which—

Determination whether a mark is a certification trade mark.

(a) the mark is inherently so adapted to distinguish in relation to the goods in question; and

(b) by reason of the use of the mark or of any other circumstances, the mark is in fact so adapted to distinguish in relation to the goods in question.

53. (1) An application for the registration of a mark as a certification trade mark shall be made to the Registrar in writing in the prescribed manner by the person proposed to be registered as the proprietor thereof, and accompanied by a draft of the regulations to be deposited under section 56.

Application for registration

(2) The provisions of section 14 shall have effect in relation to an application under this section as they have effect in relation to an application under the said section, except that for references therein to acceptance of an application there shall be substituted references to authorisation to proceed with the application.

(3) In dealing under the said provisions with an application under this section, the tribunal shall have regard to the like considerations, so far as relevant, as if the application were an application under section 14 and to any other considerations (not being matters within the competence of the Central Government under section 54) relevant to applications under this section, including the desirability of securing that a certification trade mark shall comprise some indication that it is a certification trade mark.

54. When authorisation to proceed with an application under section 53 has been given, the Registrar shall forward the application to the Central Government who shall consider the application with regard to the following matters, namely :—

Consideration of application for registration by Central Government.

(a) whether the applicant is competent to certify the goods in respect of which the mark is to be registered;

(b) whether the draft of the regulations to be deposited under section 56 is satisfactory;

(c) whether in all the circumstances of the registration applied for would be to the public advantage; and may either—

(i) direct that the application shall not be accepted; or

(ii) direct the Registrar to accept the application and approve the said draft of the regulations either without modification and unconditionally or subject to any conditions or limitations, or to any amendments or modification of the application or of the regulations, which it thinks requisite having regard to any of the said matters;

but, except in the case of a direction for acceptance and approval without modification and unconditionally, the Central Government shall not decide the matter without giving to the applicant an opportunity of being heard :

Provided that the Central Government may, at the request of the applicant made with the concurrence of the Registrar, consider the application with regard to any of the said matters before authorisation to proceed with the application has been given, so however that the Central Government shall be at liberty, to reconsider any matter on which it has given a decision under this proviso if any amendment or modification is thereafter made in the application or in the draft of the regulations.

55. (1) When an application has been accepted, the Registrar shall, as soon as may be thereafter, cause the application as accepted to be advertised in the prescribed manner, and the provisions of section 15 shall have effect in relation to the registration of the mark as if the application had been an application under section 14 :

Provided that, in deciding under the said provisions the tribunal shall have regard only to the considerations referred to in sub-section (3) of section 53, and a decision under the said provisions in favour of the applicant shall be conditional on the determination in his favour by the Central Government under sub-section (2) of this section of any opposition relating to any of the matters referred to in section 54.

(2) When notice of opposition is given relating to any of the matters referred to in section 54, the Central Government shall, after hearing the parties, if so required, and considering any evidence, decide whether, and subject to what conditions or limitations, or amendments or modifications, if any, of the application or of the regulations to be deposited under section 56, registration is, having regard to those matters, to be permitted.

56. (1) There shall be deposited at the Patent Office in respect of every mark registered as a certification trade mark regulations approved by the Central Government for governing the use thereof, which shall include provisions as to the cases in which the proprietor is to certify goods and to authorise the use of the certification trade mark, and may contain any other provisions which the Central Government may by general or special order require or permit to be inserted therein (including provisions conferring a right of appeal to the Registrar against any refusal of the proprietor to certify goods or to authorise the use of the certification trade mark in accordance with the regulations) ; and regulations so deposited shall be open to inspection in like manner as the register.

(2) The regulations so deposited may on the application of the registered proprietor be altered by the Registrar with the consent of the Central Government.

(3) The Central Government may cause such application to be advertised in any case where it appears to it expedient so to do, and where it does so, if within the time specified in the advertisement any person gives notice of opposition to the application, the Central Government shall not decide the matter without giving the parties an opportunity of being heard.

57. Subject to the provisions of sections 25, 26 and 58, the registration of a person as proprietor of a certification trade mark in respect of any goods shall, if valid, give to that person the exclusive right to the use of the certification trade mark in relation to those goods, and, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, that right shall be deemed to be infringed by any person who, not being the proprietor of the mark or a person authorised by him in that behalf under the regulations deposited under section 56, using it in accordance therewith, uses a mark identical with it or so nearly resembling it as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion, in the course of trade, in relation to any goods in respect of which it is registered, and in such manner as to render the use of the mark likely to be taken either—

(a) as being use as a certification trade mark ; or

(b) to import a reference to some person having the right either as proprietor, or by his authorisation under the said regulations, to use the mark, or to goods certified by the proprietor.

58. (1) The right to the use of a certification trade mark given under section 57 by registration shall be subject to any conditions or limitations entered on the register, and shall not be deemed to be infringed by the use of any such mark as aforesaid in any mode, in relation to goods to be sold or otherwise traded in in any place, in relation to goods to be exported to any market, or in any other circumstances, to which having regard to any such limitations, the registration does not extend.

(2) The said right to the use of a certification trade mark shall not be deemed to be infringed by the use of any such mark as aforesaid by any person—

(a) in relation to goods certified by the proprietor of the mark if, as to those goods or a bulk of which they form part, the proprietor or another in accordance with his authorisation under the relevant regulations has applied the mark and has not subsequently removed or obliterated it, or the proprietor has at any time expressly or impliedly consented to the use of the mark, or

(b) in relation to goods adapted to form part of, or to be accessory to, other goods, in relation to which the mark has been used without infringement of the right given as aforesaid or might for the time being be so used, if the use of the mark is reasonably necessary in order to indicate that the goods are so adapted and neither the purpose nor the effect of the use of the mark is to indicate otherwise than in accordance with the fact that the goods are certified by the proprietor :

Provided that clause (a) shall not apply to the case of use consisting of the application of any such mark as aforesaid to any goods, notwithstanding that they are such goods as are mentioned in that clause if such application is contrary to the said regulations.

(3) Where a certification trade mark is one of two or more registered certification trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other, the use of any of those marks in exercise of the right to the use of that mark given by registration, shall not be deemed to be an infringement of the right so given to the use of any other of those marks.

59. (1) The Central Government may, on the application in the prescribed manner of any person aggrieved or on the recommendation of the Registrar, and after giving the proprietor an opportunity of opposing the application or recommendation, make such order as it thinks fit for expunging or varying any entry in the register relating to a certification trade mark, or for varying the deposited regulations, on any of the following grounds, namely :—

(a) that the proprietor is no longer competent, in the case of any of the goods in respect of which the mark is registered, to certify those goods ;

(b) that the proprietor has failed to observe any provision of the deposited regulations to be observed on his part ;

(c) that it is no longer to the public advantage that the mark should be registered ;

(d) that it is requisite for the public advantage that, if the mark remains registered, the regulations should be varied ; and neither a High Court nor the Registrar shall have any jurisdiction to make an order under section 46 on any of those grounds.

(2) The Registrar shall rectify the register and the deposited regulations in such manner as may be requisite for giving effect to an order made under subsection (1).

60. The Registrar shall have no power to award costs to or against any party on an appeal to him against a refusal of the proprietor of a certification trade mark to certify goods or to authorise the use of the mark.

Costs not to be awarded in certain cases.

Decisions of Central Government to be final.

61. Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Chapter, every decision of the Central Government under this Chapter shall be final.

(2) If any person contravenes any of the provisions of sub-section (1), he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the use in British India in relation to a trade mark of the word "registered," or of any other expression referring whether expressly or impliedly to registration, shall be deemed to import a reference to registration in the register, except—

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to Arbitration.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to arbitration in British India; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTORY.

Short title, extent and commencement

1. (1) This Act may be called THE ARBITRATION ACT, 1940.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

(3) It shall come into force on the 1st day of July, 1940.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) "arbitration agreement" means a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether an arbitrator is named therein or not ;

(b) "award" means an arbitration award.

(c) "Court" means a Civil Court having jurisdiction to decide the questions forming the subject-matter of the reference if the same had been the subject-matter of a suit, but does not, except for the purpose of arbitration proceedings under section 21, include a Small Cause Court ;

(d) "legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased, and, where a party acts in a representative character, the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so acting ;

(e) "reference" means a reference to arbitration.

CHAPTER II.

ARBITRATION WITHOUT INTERVENTION OF A COURT.

3. An arbitration agreement, unless a different intention is expressed therein, shall be deemed to include the provisions set out in the First Schedule in so far as they are applicable to the reference.

Provisions implied in arbitration agreement.

4. The parties to an arbitration agreement may agree that any reference thereunder shall be to an arbitrator or arbitrators to be appointed by a person designated in the agreement either by name or as the holder for the time being of any office or appointment.

Agreement that arbitrators be appointed by third party

Authority of appointed arbitrator or umpire irrevocable except by leave of Court.

5. The authority of an appointed arbitrator or umpire shall not be revocable except with the leave of the Court, unless a contrary intention is expressed in the arbitration agreement.

Arbitration agreement not to be discharged by death of party thereto.

6. (1) An arbitration agreement shall not be discharged by the death of any party thereto, either as respects the deceased or any other party, but shall in such event be enforceable by or against the legal representative of the deceased.

(2) The authority of an arbitrator shall not be revoked by the death of any party by whom he was appointed.

(3) Nothing in this section shall affect the operation of any law by virtue of which any right of action is extinguished by the death of a person.

7. (1) Where it is provided by a term in a contract to which an insolvent is a party that any differences arising thereout or in connection therewith shall be referred to arbitration, the said term shall, if the receiver adopts the contract, be enforceable by or against him so far as it relates to any such differences.

Provisions in case of insolvency

(2) Where a person who has been adjudged an insolvent had, before the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, become a party to an arbitration agreement, and any matter to which the agreement applies is required to be determined in connection with, or for the purposes of, the insolvency proceedings, then, if the case is one to which sub-section (1) does not apply, any other party to the agreement or the receiver may apply to the Court having jurisdiction in the insolvency proceedings for an order directing that the matter in question shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the agreement; and the Court may, if it is of opinion that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the matter ought to be determined by arbitration, make an order accordingly.

(3) In this section the expression "receiver" includes an Official Assignee.

Power of Court to appoint arbitrator or umpire.

8. (1) In any of the following cases—

(a) where an arbitration agreement provides that the reference shall be to one or more arbitrators to be appointed by consent of the parties, and all the parties do not, after differences have arisen, concur in the appointment or appointments; or

(b) if any appointed arbitrator or umpire neglects or refuses to act, or is incapable of acting, or dies, and the arbitration agreement does not show that it was intended that the vacancy should not be supplied, and the parties or the arbitrators, as the case may be, do not supply the vacancy; or

(c) where the parties or the arbitrators are required to appoint an umpire and do not appoint him; any party may serve the other parties or the arbitrators, as the case may be, with a written notice to concur in the appointment or appointments or in supplying the vacancy.

(2) If the appointment is not made within fifteen clear days after the service of the said notice, the Court may, on the application of the party who gave the notice and after giving the other parties an opportunity of being heard, appoint an arbitrator or arbitrators or umpire, as the case may be, who shall have like power to act in the reference and to make an award as if he or they had been appointed by consent of all parties.

Power to party to appoint new arbitrator or, in certain cases, a sole arbitrator.

9. Where an arbitration agreement provides that a reference shall be to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, then, unless a different intention is expressed in the agreement,—

(a) if either of the appointed arbitrators neglects or refuses to act, or is incapable of acting, or dies, the party who appointed him may appoint a new arbitrator in his place;

(b) if one party fails to appoint an arbitrator, either originally or by way of substitution as aforesaid, for fifteen clear days after the service by the other party of a notice in writing to make the appointment, such other party having appointed his arbitrator before giving the notice, the party who has appointed an arbitrator may appoint that arbitrator to act as sole arbitrator in the reference, and his award shall be binding on both parties as if he had been appointed by consent:

Provided that the Court may set aside any appointment as sole arbitrator made under clause (b) and either, on sufficient cause being shown, allow further time to the defaulting party to appoint an arbitrator or pass such other order as it thinks fit.

Explanation.—The fact that an arbitrator or umpire, after a request by either party to enter on and proceed with the reference, does not within one month comply with the request may constitute a neglect or refusal to act within the meaning of section 8 and this section.

10. (1) Where an arbitration agreement provides that a reference shall be to three arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party and the third by the two appointed arbitrators, the agreement shall have effect as if it provided for the appointment of an umpire, and not for the appointment of a third arbitrator, by the two arbitrators appointed by the parties.

(2) Where an arbitration agreement provides that a reference shall be to three arbitrators to be appointed otherwise than as mentioned in sub-section (1), the award of the majority shall, unless the arbitration agreement otherwise provides, prevail.

(3) Where an arbitration agreement provides for the appointment of more arbitrators than three, the award of the majority, or if the arbitrators are equally divided in their opinions, the award of the umpire shall, unless the arbitration agreement otherwise provides, prevail.

11. (1) The Court may, on the application of any party to a reference, remove an arbitrator or umpire who fails to use all reasonable dispatch in entering on and proceeding with the reference and making an award.

(2) The Court may remove an arbitrator or umpire who has misconducted himself or the proceedings.

(3) Where an arbitrator or umpire is removed under this section, he shall not be entitled to receive any remuneration in respect of his services.

(4) For the purposes of this section the expression "proceeding with the reference" includes, in a case where reference to the umpire becomes necessary, giving notice of that fact to the parties and to the umpire.

12. (1) Where the Court removes an umpire who has not entered on the reference or one or more arbitrators (not being all the arbitrators), the Court may, on the application of any party to the arbitration agreement, appoint persons to fill the vacancies.

(2) Where the authority of an arbitrator or arbitrators or an umpire is revoked by leave of the Court, or where the Court removes an umpire who has entered on the reference or a sole arbitrator or all the arbitrators, the Court may, on the application of any party to the arbitration agreement, either—

(a) appoint a person to act as sole arbitrator in the place of the person or persons displaced, or

(b) order that the arbitration agreement shall cease to have effect with respect to the difference referred.

(3) A person appointed under this section as an arbitrator or umpire shall have the like power to act in the reference and to make an award as if he had been appointed in accordance with the arbitration agreement.

13. The arbitrators or umpire shall, unless a different intention is expressed in the agreement, have power to—

Powers of arbitrator.

Award to be signed, and filed.

(2) The arbitrators or umpire shall, at the request of any party to the arbitration agreement or any person claiming under such party or if so directed by the Court and upon payment of the fees and charges due in respect of the arbitration and award and of the costs and charges of filing the award cause the award or a signed copy of it, together with any depositions and documents which may have been taken and proved before them, to be filed in Court, and the Court shall thereupon give notice to the parties of the filing of the award.

(3) Where the arbitrators or umpire state a special case under clause (b) of section 13, the Court, after giving notice to the parties and hearing them, shall pronounce its opinion thereon and such opinion shall be added to, and shall form part of, the award.

Power of Court to modify award. 15. The Court may by order modify or correct an award.—

(a) where it appears that a part of the award is upon a matter not referred to arbitration and such part can be separated from the other part and does not affect the decision on the matter referred ; or

(b) where the award is imperfect in form, or contains any obvious error which can be amended without affecting such decision ; or

(c) where the award contains a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission.

16. (1) The Court may from time to time remit the award or any matter referred to arbitration to the arbitrators or umpire for reconsideration upon such terms as it thinks fit—

(b) where the award is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution ; or

(c) where an objection to the legality of the award is apparent upon the face of it.

(2) Where an award is remitted under sub-section (1) the Court shall fix the time within which the arbitrator or umpire shall submit his decision to the Court :

Provided that any time so fixed may be extended by subsequent order of the Court.

(3) An award remitted under sub-section (1) shall become void on the failure of the arbitrator or umpire to reconsider it and submit his decision within the time fixed.

17. Where the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for reconsideration or to set aside the award, the Court shall, after the time for making an application to set aside the award has expired, or such application having been made, after refusing it, proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award, and upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except on the ground that it is in excess of, or not otherwise in accordance with, the award.

18. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 17, at any time after the filing of the award, whether notice of the filing has been served or not, upon being satisfied by affidavit or otherwise that a party has taken or is about to take steps to defeat, delay or obstruct the execution of any decree that may be passed upon the award, or that speedy execution of the award is just and necessary, the Court may pass such interim orders as it deems necessary.

(2) Any person against whom such interim orders have been passed may show cause against such orders, and the Court, after hearing the parties, may pass such further orders as it deems necessary and just.

19. Where an award has become void under sub-section (3) of section 16 or has been set aside, the Court may by order supersede the reference, and shall thereupon order that the arbitration agreement shall cease to have effect with respect to the difference referred.

Power to supersede arbitration when award becomes void or is set aside

CHAPTER III.

ARBITRATION WITH INTERVENTION OF A COURT WHERE THERE IS NO SUIT PENDING.

20. (1) Where any persons have entered into an arbitration agreement before the institution of any suit with respect to the subject-matter of the agreement or any part of it, and where a difference has arisen to which the agreement applies, they or any of them, instead of proceeding under Chapter II, may apply to a Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates, that the agreement be filed in Court.

(2) The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs and the remainder as defendant or defendants, if the application has been presented by all the parties, or, if otherwise, between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

(3) On such application being made, the Court shall direct notice thereof to be given to all parties to the agreement other than the applicants, requiring them to show cause within the time specified in the notice why the agreement should not be filed.

(4) Where no sufficient cause is shown, the Court shall order the agreement to be filed; and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed by the parties, whether in the agreement or otherwise; or, where the parties cannot agree upon an arbitrator, to an arbitrator appointed by the Court.

(5) Thereafter, the arbitration shall proceed in accordance with, and shall be governed by, the other provisions of this Act so far as they can be made applicable.

CHAPTER IV.

ARBITRATION IN SUITS.

21. Where in any suit all the parties interested agree that any matter in difference between them in the suit shall be referred to arbitration, they may at any time before judgment is pronounced apply in writing to the Court for an order of reference.

Parties to suit may apply for order of reference.

22. The arbitrator shall be appointed in such manner as may be agreed upon between the parties.

23. (1) The Court shall, by order, refer to the arbitrator the matter in difference which he is required to determine, and shall in the order specify such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award.

(2) Where a matter is referred to arbitration, the Court shall not, save in the manner and to the extent provided in this Act, deal with such matter in the suit.

24. Where some only of the parties to a suit apply to have the matters in difference between them referred to arbitration in accordance with, and in the manner provided by, section 21, the Court may, if it thinks fit, so refer such matters to arbitration (provided that the same can be separated from the rest of the subject-matter of the suit) in the manner provided in that section; but the suit shall continue so far as it relates to the parties who have not joined in the said application and to matters not contained in the said reference as if no such application had been made, and an award made in pursuance of such a reference shall be binding only on the parties who have joined in the application.

Reference to arbitration by some of the parties.

Provisions applicable to arbitrations under this Chapter. 25. The provisions of the other Chapters shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply to arbitrations under this Chapter :

Provided that the Court may, in any of the circumstances mentioned in sections 8, 10, 11 and 12, instead of filling up the vacancies or making the appointments, make an order superseding the arbitration and proceed with the suit, and where the Court makes an order superseding the arbitration under section 19, it shall proceed with the suit.

CHAPTER V.

GENERAL.

Application of Chapter. 26. Save as otherwise provided in this Act, the provisions of this Chapter shall apply to all arbitrations.

Power of arbitrators to make an interim award. 27. (1) Unless a different intention appears in the arbitration agreement, the arbitrators or umpire may, if they think fit, make an interim award.

(2) All references in this Act to an award shall include references to an interim award made under sub-section (1).

28. (1) The Court may, if it thinks fit, whether the time for making the award has expired or not and whether the award has been made or not, enlarge from time to time the time for making the award.

(2) Any provision in an arbitration agreement whereby the arbitrators or umpire may, except with the consent of all the parties to the agreement, enlarge the time for making the award, shall be void and of no effect.

29. Where and in so far as an award is for the payment of money the Court may in the decree order interest, from the date of the decree at such rate as the Court deems reasonable, to be paid on the principal sum as adjudged by the award and confirmed by the decree.

Grounds for setting aside award. 30. An award shall not be set aside except on one or more of the following grounds, namely :—

- (a) that an arbitrator or umpire has misconducted himself or the proceedings;
- (b) that an award has been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration or after arbitration proceedings have become invalid under section 35 ;
- (c) that an award has been improperly procured or is otherwise invalid.

31. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, an award may be filed in any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the reference relates.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force and save as otherwise provided in this Act, all questions regarding the validity, effect or existence of an award or an arbitration agreement between the parties to the agreement or persons claiming under them shall be decided by the Court in which the award under the agreement has been, or may be, filed, and by no other Court.

(3) All applications regarding the conduct of arbitration proceedings or otherwise arising out of such proceedings shall be made to the Court where the award has been, or may be, filed, and to no other Court.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained elsewhere in this Act or in any other law for the time being in force, where in any reference any application under this Act has been made in a Court competent to entertain it, that Court alone shall have jurisdiction over the arbitration proceedings and all subsequent applications arising out of that reference and the arbitration proceedings shall be made in that Court and in no other Court.

32. Notwithstanding any law for the time being in force, no suit shall lie on any ground whatsoever for a decision upon the existence, effect or validity of an arbitration agreement or award, nor shall any arbitration agreement or award be set aside, amended, modified or in any way affected otherwise than as provided in this Act.

Bar to suits contesting arbitration agreement or award

33. Any party to an arbitration agreement or any person claiming under him desiring to challenge the existence or validity of an arbitration agreement or an award or to have the effect of either determined shall apply to the Court and the Court shall decide the question on affidavits.

Arbitration agreement or award to be contested by application

Provided that where the Court deems it just and expedient, it may set down the application for hearing on other evidence also, and it may pass such orders for discovery and particulars as it may do in a suit.

34. Where any party to an arbitration agreement or any person claiming under him commences any legal proceedings against any other party to the agreement or any person claiming under him in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may, at any time before filing a writing statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to the judicial authority before which the proceedings are pending to stay the proceedings; and if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the arbitration agreement and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced, and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, such authority may make an order staying the proceedings.

Power to stay legal proceedings where there is an arbitration agreement.

35. (1) No reference nor award shall be rendered invalid by reason only of the commencement of legal proceedings upon the subject-matter of the reference, but when legal proceedings upon the whole of the subject-matter of the reference have been commenced between all the parties to the reference and a notice thereof has been given to the arbitrators or umpire, all further proceedings in a pending reference shall, unless a stay of proceedings is granted under section 34, be invalid.

Effect of legal proceedings on arbitration.

(2) In this section the expression "parties to the reference" includes any persons claiming under any of the parties and litigating under the same title.

36. Where it is provided (whether in the arbitration agreement or otherwise) that an award under an arbitration agreement shall be a condition precedent to the bringing of an action with respect to any matter to which the agreement applies, the Court, if it orders (whether under this Act or any other law) that the agreement shall cease to have effect as regards any particular difference, may further order that the said provision shall also cease to have effect as regards that difference.

Power of Court where arbitration agreement is ordered not to apply to a particular difference, to order that a provision making an award a condition precedent to an action shall not apply to such difference.

Limitations.

37. (1) All the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to arbitrations as they apply to proceedings in Court.

(2) Notwithstanding any term in an arbitration agreement to the effect that no cause of action shall accrue in respect of any matter required by the agreement to be referred until an award is made under the agreement, a cause of action shall, for the purpose of limitation, be deemed to have accrued in respect of any such matter at the time when it would have accrued but for that term in the agreement.

(3) For the purposes of this section and of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, an arbitration shall be deemed to be commenced when one party to the arbitration agreement serves on the other parties thereto a notice requiring the appointment of an arbitrator, or, where the arbitration agreement provides that the reference shall be to a person named or designated in the agreement, requiring that the difference be submitted to the person so named or designated.

(4) Where the terms of an agreement to refer future differences to arbitration provide that any claims to which the agreement applies shall be barred unless notice to appoint an arbitrator is given or an arbitrator is appointed or some other step to commence arbitration proceedings is taken within a time fixed by the agreement, and a difference arises to which the agreement applies, the Court, if it is of opinion that in the circumstances of the case undue hardship would otherwise be caused, and notwithstanding that the time so fixed has expired, may on such terms, if any, as the justice of the case may require, extend the time for such period as it thinks proper.

(5) Where the Court orders that an award be set aside or orders, after the commencement of an arbitration, that the arbitration agreement shall cease to have effect with respect to the difference referred, the period between the commencement of the arbitration and the date of the order of the Court shall be excluded in computing the time prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, for the commencement of the proceedings (including arbitration) with respect to the difference referred.

38. (1) If in any case an arbitrator or umpire refuses to deliver his award except on payment of the fees demanded by him, the Court may, on an application in this behalf, order that the arbitrator or umpire shall deliver the award to the applicant on payment into Court by the applicant of the fees demanded, and shall, after such inquiry, if any, as it thinks fit, further order that out of the money so paid into Court there shall be paid to the arbitrator or umpire by way of fees such sum as the Court may consider reasonable and that the balance of the money, if any, shall be refunded to the applicant.

(2) An application under sub-section (1) may be made by any party to the reference unless the fees demanded have been fixed by written agreement between him and the arbitrator or umpire, and the arbitrator or umpire shall be entitled to appear and be heard on any such application.

(3) The Court may make such orders as it thinks fit respecting the costs of an arbitration where any question arises respecting such costs and the award contains no sufficient provision concerning them.

CHAPTER VI

APPEALS.

39. (1) An appeal shall lie from the following orders passed under this Act (and from no others) to the Court authorised by law to hear appeals from original decrees of the Court passing the order:—

An order—

- (i) superseding an arbitration;
- (ii) on an award stated in the form of a special case;

(b) the "previous year" as so determined for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1937, and that for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1939 ; or

(c) the "previous year" as so determined for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1938, and that for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1939 ; or

(d) the "previous year" as so determined for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1939, and that for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940 :

Provided that in no case shall any period of less than nine months be taken as a standard period.

(3) If, within the period specified in the notice issued under sub-section (1) of section 13, the person carrying on the business makes an application to the Excess Profits Tax Officer in this behalf, the Excess Profits Tax Officer shall refer the application to the Board of Referees, and if the Board is satisfied that during the standard period the profits of the business were less than might at the beginning of that period have been reasonably expected, it may direct that the standard profits shall be computed as if the profits during the standard period were such greater amount as it thinks just :

Provided that such amount shall not exceed the statutory percentage of the average amount of the capital employed in the business unless the Board is satisfied that owing to some specific cause peculiar to the business it is just that a greater amount should be allowed.

(4) The standard profits shall be taken to be rupees thirty-six thousand in any case in which the standard profits computed in accordance with sub-section (1) are less than this sum :

Provided that if the chargeable accounting period is greater or less than one year the sum of rupees thirty-six thousand shall for the purpose of this sub-section be increased or decreased proportionately.

(5) Where the standard period includes any period prior to the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935, during which Burma was part of British India, there shall, in computing the standard profits of a business under this section, be excluded from the profits of the business during the standard period so much of such profits as arose or accrued or were received in Burma unless such profits are also included in the profits of the business during the chargeable accounting period.

7. Where a deficiency of profits occurs in any chargeable accounting period in any business, the profits of the business chargeable with excess profits tax shall be deemed to be reduced and relief shall be granted in accordance with the following provisions :—

(a) the aggregate amount of the profits so chargeable for the previous chargeable accounting periods shall be deemed to be reduced by the amount of the deficiency of profits and the amount of excess profits tax payable in respect thereof shall be deemed to be reduced accordingly and the relief necessary to give effect to the reduction shall be given by repayment or otherwise ;

(b) where the amount of the deficiency of profits exceeds the aggregate amount of the profits so chargeable for the previous chargeable accounting periods, or where there is no previous chargeable accounting period, the balance of the deficiency of profits or the whole of the deficiency, as the case may be, shall be applied in reducing any profits so chargeable for the next subsequent chargeable accounting period, and if and so far as it exceeds the amount of those profits, any profits so chargeable for the next subsequent chargeable accounting period and so on.

8. (1) As from the date of any change in the persons carrying on a business, the business shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be deemed for all the purposes of this Act, except for the purposes of determining the amount of the statutory percentage to have been discontinued, and a new business to have been commenced.

(2) Where the change took place before the 1st day of September, 1939, and consisted in the death or retirement of a partner, or the taking in of a partner, the persons carrying on the business after the change may, by notice given in writing before the prescribed date to the Excess Profits Tax Officer, elect that, for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits, the business shall not be deemed to have been discontinued.

(3) A business shall not, for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits, be deemed to be discontinued by reason of any change occurring on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, in the persons carrying it on, and the standard profits of the business in relation to any chargeable accounting period shall be computed accordingly, and, in particular, in computing the capital employed in the business after the change, no regard shall be had to any consideration given in respect of the transfer of the business or any of the assets thereof on the occasion of the change.

(4) Where, on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, two or more businesses are amalgamated, the resulting business shall be treated for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits as if—

(a) it had been in existence throughout the period during which there were in existence any of the former businesses ;

(b) any profits made or losses incurred or capital employed in any of those former businesses had been made, incurred or employed in the resulting business ; and

(c) any assets of any of those former businesses had become assets of the resulting business when they became assets of the former business ; and, in particular, in computing the capital employed in the resulting business, no regard shall be had to any consideration given in respect of the transfer of any o those former businesses or any of the assets thereof on the occasion of the amalgamation.

(5) Where, on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, part of a business is transferred as a going concern, by the person theretofore carrying it on to another person, the part transferred and the part not transferred shall each be deemed for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits to be a continuation of the original business, and the said provisions, including the provisions of this section relating to amalgamations, shall apply accordingly, subject to any necessary modifications :

Provided that, for the purposes aforesaid, such apportionments shall be made of the profits made, and losses incurred, and the capital employed, in the original business, and of any assets of the original business as may appear to the Excess Profits Tax Officer, or on appeal in the prescribed time and manner to the Board of Referees, to that Board, to be just.

(6) Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing provisions of this section, where a business was carried on immediately before the 1st day of April, 1936, and that business, or the main part of that business, was transferred after the said day and before the 1st day of September, 1939, by the person carrying it on to another person, the Excess Profits Tax Officer, if he is satisfied that the business carried on after the transference was not substantially different from the business or part transferred, shall, on the application of the person carrying on the business after the transference, treat that person, for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to the computation of standard profits, as if he had carried on the transferred business or part of the business as from the date of the commencement of that business, subject, however, to such modifications (including modifications as respects the computation of capital) as he may consider just.

(7) Where, on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, a partner in a firm carrying on a business to which this Act applies dies, then notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) any deficiency of profits in respect of any chargeable accounting period ending on or before the date of his death shall, if it has not been fully applied in reducing the profits of any chargeable accounting period under section 7, be carried forward and applied in reducing any profits from the same business carried on by the surviving partner or partners in the first chargeable accounting period after the death of the partner, and if and so far as it exceeds the amount of those profits, in reducing any profits from such business in the next subsequent chargeable accounting period and so on.

9. (1) Where any interest, annuity, or other annual payment, or any royalty, or rent, is paid by one company to another company and one of those companies is a subsidiary of the other, or both are subsidiaries of a third company, the capital, profits and losses of both companies shall be computed for the purposes of this Act as if—

- (a) the interest, annuity, annual payment, royalty or rent were not payable ;
 - (b) any debt in respect of which any such interest is payable did not exist ;
- and

(c) any asset in respect of which any such royalty or rent is payable were the property of the company paying the royalty or the rent.

(2) Where

(a) a company (hereinafter referred to as "the principal company") is resident in British India and is not a subsidiary of any other company resident in British India ; and

(b) during the whole or any part of any chargeable accounting period of the principal company, another company, whether or not resident or carrying on business within British India (hereinafter referred to as "the subsidiary company") is a subsidiary of the principal company, the following provisions of this section shall, subject to the provisions of section 5, have effect in relation to that chargeable accounting period.

(3) If the subsidiary company is a subsidiary of the principal company throughout the chargeable accounting period, such capital employed in, and profits or losses arising from, the business of the subsidiary company as is employed or arise in—

(i) the chargeable accounting period ; or

(ii) any year constituting or comprised in the standard period of the principal company, shall be treated for the purposes of this Act as if it or they were capital employed in, or as the case may be, profits or losses arising from, the business of the principal company.

(4) If the subsidiary company is a subsidiary of the principal company during part only of the chargeable accounting period, the excess or deficiency of profits of the subsidiary company for that part of that period shall be treated as increasing or, as the case may be, decreasing the excess or deficiency of profits of the principal company for the whole period and shall not be deemed to be an excess or deficiency of profits of the subsidiary company.

In this sub-section, the expression "excess" and "deficiency" mean, in relation to profits, an excess or deficiency in relation to the standard profits of the subsidiary company or, as the case may be, the principal company.

(5) In any case to which sub-section (3) or sub-section (4) applies, such alteration, if any, of the periods which would otherwise be the chargeable accounting periods of the subsidiary company shall be made as the Central Board of Revenue may direct.

(6) For the purposes of this section, a company shall be deemed to be a subsidiary of another company if and so long as not less than nine-tenths of its ordinary share capital is owned by that other company, whether directly or through another company or other companies, or partly directly or partly through another company or other companies.

(7) The amount of ordinary share capital of one company owned by a second company through another company or other companies, or partly directly and partly through another company or other companies shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of the Third Schedule.

(8) In this section and the Third Schedule references to ownership shall be construed as references to beneficial ownership, and the expression "ordinary share capital", in relation to a company, means all the issued share capital (by whatever name called) of the company, other than capital the holders whereof have a right to a dividend at a fixed rate but have no other right to share in the profits of the company.

(9) The principal company shall be entitled to allocate to its subsidiary company or companies the respective proportionate shares of the excess profits tax payable by the whole group.

(10) The excess profits tax payable by virtue of this section by the principal company in respect of the profits of any subsidiary company shall, for the purposes of section 12, be deemed to have been paid by the subsidiary company and not by the principal company.

10. (1) A person shall not for the purpose of reducing any excess profits which are or would be chargeable to excess profits tax enter into a fictitious or artificial transaction, or carry out any fictitious or artificial operation.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section an artificial transaction or operation includes every device of whatever nature adopted for the purpose of presenting the accounts of a business in a misleading form or manner with intent to evade or having the effect of evading any obligation imposed by this Act.

(2) Any such transaction or operation shall be treated as null and void for the purpose of computing the excess profits tax payable under this Act.

(3) If the Excess Profits Tax Officer is satisfied that any person has acted in contravention of the provisions of sub-section (1), he may with the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner direct that such person shall pay, in addition to any excess profits tax for which he is or would, but for such transaction or operation, be liable, a penalty not exceeding the tax evaded or sought to be evaded.

11. (1) The Central Government may by notification in the official Gazette make provision for the granting of relief in cases where both excess profits tax under this Act and excess profits tax under any law in force in the United Kingdom, in any Indian State, or in any other part of His Majesty's Dominions have been paid upon the profits of any business if it appears to the Central Government that the laws of the United Kingdom or of that Indian State or of that other part of His Majesty's Dominions provide for corresponding relief in respect of excess profits tax charged on profits both in the United Kingdom or in that State or in that part and in British India :

Provided that where under section 19 of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, national defence contribution has been paid in the United Kingdom in lieu of excess profits tax, that portion of the national defence contribution so paid which is equal to the excess profits tax which would otherwise have been payable shall, for the purposes of this sub-section, be deemed to be excess profits tax paid in the United Kingdom.

(2) If any person, who has paid excess profits tax under this Act for any chargeable accounting period in respect of profits arising outside India in a country the laws of which do not provide for any relief in respect of excess profits tax charged in British India, proves that he has paid excess profits tax under the laws of the said country in respect of the same profits, he shall be entitled to the deduction from the excess profits tax payable in British India of a sum equal to one-half thereof or to one-half of the excess profits tax payable in the said country, whichever is the less.

12. (1) The amount of the excess profits tax payable in respect of a business for any chargeable accounting period diminished by any amount allowable by way of relief under the provisions of section 11, shall, in computing for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax the profits and gains of that business, be allowed to be deducted as an expense incurred in that period.

(2) There shall also be so deducted the amount of any excess profits tax payable under any law in force in a country outside British India on the profits of the business in respect of any chargeable accounting period to the extent that such profits arose in the said country, after diminishing such amount by any amount which is allowable by way of relief by repayment, set off or otherwise under any law in the country where the tax is payable providing for the granting of relief in that country where excess profits tax has also been charged in British India :

Provided that where, under the provisions of this Act relating to deficiencies of profits or under any corresponding law in force in the said country without British India, relief is given by way of repayment from excess profits tax chargeable for any chargeable accounting period previous to that in which the deficiency occurs, the amount of the deduction allowed under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall not be altered, but the amount repayable shall be taken into account in computing the profits and gains of the business for the purposes of income-tax as if it were a profit of the business accruing in the chargeable accounting period in which the deficiency of profits occurs.

13. (1) The Excess Profits Tax Officer may, for the purposes of this Act, require any person whom he believes to be engaged in any business to which this Act applies, or to have been so engaged during any chargeable accounting period, or to be otherwise liable to pay excess profits tax, to furnish within such period, not being less than sixty days from the date of the service of the notice, as may be specified in the notice, a return in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner setting forth (along with such other particulars as may be provided for in the notice) with respect to any chargeable accounting period specified in the notice the profits of the business and the standard profits of the business as computed in accordance with the provisions of section 6 or the amount of deficiency available for relief under section 7 :

Provided that the Excess Profits Tax Officer may, in his discretion, extend the date for the delivery of the return.

(2) The Excess Profits Tax Officer may serve on any person, upon whom a notice has been served under sub-section (1), a notice requiring him on a date to be therein specified to produce, or cause to be produced, such accounts or documents as the Excess Profits Tax Officer may require and may from time to time serve further notices in like manner requiring the production of such further accounts or documents or other evidence as he may require :

Provided that the Excess Profits Tax Officer shall not require the production of any accounts relating to a period prior to the "previous year" as determined under section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the purpose of the income-tax assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1937.

14. (1) The Excess Profits Tax Officer shall, by an order in writing after considering such evidence, if any, as he has required under section 13, assess to the best of his judgment the profits liable to excess profits tax and the amount of excess profits tax payable on the basis of such assessment, or if there is a deficiency of profits, the amount of that deficiency and the amount of excess profits tax, if any, repayable and shall furnish a copy of such order to the person on whom the assessment has been made.

(2) Excess profits tax payable in respect of any chargeable accounting period shall be payable by the person carrying on the business in that period.

(3) Where two or more persons were carrying on the business jointly in the chargeable accounting period, the assessment shall be made upon them jointly and, in the case of a partnership, may be made in the partnership name.

(4) Where by virtue of the foregoing provisions an assessment could, but for his death, have been made on any person either solely or jointly with any other person or persons, the assessment may be made on his legal representative either solely or jointly with that other person or persons, as the case may be.

15. If, in consequence of definite information which has come into his possession, the Excess Profits Tax Officer discovers that profits of any chargeable accounting period chargeable to excess profits tax have escaped assessment, or have been underassessed, or have been the subject of excessive relief, he may at any time within five years of the end of the chargeable accounting period in question serve on the person liable to such tax a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under section 13, and may proceed to assess or re-assess the amount of such profits liable to excess profits tax and the provisions of this Act shall, so far as may be, apply as if the notice were a notice issued under that section.

16. If the Excess Profits Tax Officer, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Commissioner, in the course of any proceedings under this Act, is satisfied that any person has, without reasonable cause, failed to furnish the return required under sub-section (1) of section 13, or to produce or cause to be produced the accounts or documents or other evidence required by the Excess Profits Tax Officer under sub-section (2) of that section, or has concealed particulars of the profits made by or capital employed in the business, or has deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such profits or capital, he may direct that such person shall pay by way of penalty, in addition to the amount of any excess profits tax payable, a sum not exceeding—

(a) where the person has failed to furnish the return required under subsection (1) of section 13, the amount of the excess profits tax payable ; and

(b) in any other case, the amount of excess profits tax which would have been avoided if the return made had been accepted as correct.

Provided that the Excess Profits Tax Officer shall not impose any penalty under this section without the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.

17. (1) Any person aggrieved by a decision made in pursuance of section 8, or objecting to the amount of excess profits tax for which he is liable as assessed by the Excess Profits Tax Officer or denying his liability to be assessed under this Act, or objecting to any penalty imposed by the Excess Profits Tax Officer, or to the amount of any deficiency of profits as assessed by the Excess Profits Tax Officer, or to the amount allowed by the Excess Profits Tax Officer by way of relief under any provision of this Act or to any refusal by the Excess Profits Tax Officer to grant relief may appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner :

Provided that no appeal shall lie against a determination of the amount of the profits of any standard period where those profits have been determined in accordance with the first proviso to rule 1 of the First Schedule except in respect of adjustments made under the provisions of that Schedule :

Provided further that no appeal shall lie under this section against any apportionment made by the Excess Profits Tax Officer under the proviso to subsection (5) of section 8 or against any decision of the Board of Referees under subsection (3) of section 6.

(2) An appeal shall ordinarily be presented within forty-five days of receipt of the notice of demand relating to the assessment or penalty objected to, or in the case of an appeal against the assessment of a deficiency of profits, within forty-five days of the receipt of the copy of the order determining the deficiency, or in the case of an appeal against the amount of a relief granted or a refusal to grant relief, within forty-five days of the receipt of the intimation of the order granting or refusing to grant the relief, but the Appellate Assistant Commissioner may admit an appeal after the expiration of that period if he is satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not presenting it within that period.

(3) An appeal shall be in the prescribed form and shall be verified in the prescribed manner.

(4) The Appellate Assistant Commissioner shall hear and determine the appeal and, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall pass such orders as he thinks fit, and such orders may include an order enhancing the assessment or a penalty :

Provided that an order enhancing an assessment or penalty shall not be made unless the person affected thereby has been given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against such enhancement.

(5) The procedure to be adopted in the hearing and determination of appeals shall be in accordance with the rules made in this behalf by the Central Board of Revenue.

18. (1) Any person objecting to an order passed by an Appellate Assistant Commissioner imposing on him a penalty under section 16 or enhancing his assessment or enhancing a penalty under section 17 may appeal to the Commissioner within thirty days of the date on which he was served with notice of such order.

(2) In disposing of the appeal the Commissioner may, after giving the appellant an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders thereon as he thinks fit.

(3) On the coming into operation of Part II of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, this section shall cease to have effect.

Appeal to Commissioner against Appellate Assistant Commissioner's orders, imposing penalties or enhancing assessments or penalties.

19. (1) The Commissioner may of his own motion call for the record of any proceeding under this Act which has been taken by any Excess Profits Tax Officer or Appellate Assistant Commissioner subordinate to him, and on receipt of the record may make such enquiry, or cause such enquiry to be made, and, subject to the provisions of this Act, may pass such orders thereon (including an order enhancing an assessment) as he thinks fit :

Power of revision. Provided that he shall not pass any order prejudicial to a person to whose business this Act applies without hearing him, or giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

(2) On the coming into operation of Part II of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, sub-section (1) shall cease to have effect, but thereafter any Excess Profits Tax Officer or any person in respect of whose business an order under section 14 has been passed who objects to an order passed by an Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 16 or section 17 may, within the prescribed time and in the prescribed manner, appeal against such order to the Appellate Tribunal constituted under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and that Tribunal shall have all such powers in disposing of the appeal as it has in respect of appeals preferred to it under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

20. The Commissioner may, at any time within four years from the date of any order passed whether by himself or by any Appellate Assistant Commissioner or Excess Profits Tax Officer under this Act, rectify any mistake in any evidence recorded during assessment or appellate proceedings, or any mistake apparent from the record and shall within the like period rectify any mistake apparent from the record which has been brought to his notice by a person to whose business this Act applies :

Rectification of mistakes. Provided that no such rectification shall be made having the effect of enhancing the liability of any person unless that person has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

21. The provisions of sections 4A, 4B, 10, 13, 24B, 29, 36 to 44C (inclusive), 45 to 48 (inclusive), 49E, 49F, 50, 54, 61 to 63 (inclusive) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, shall apply with such modifications, if any, as may be prescribed, as if the said provisions were provisions of this Act and referred to excess profits tax instead of to income-tax, and every officer exercising powers under the said provisions in regard to income-tax may exercise the like powers under this Act in regard to excess profits tax in respect of cases assigned to him under sub-section (3) of section 3 as he exercises in relation to income-tax under the said Act :

Application of provisions of Act XI of 1922. Provided that references in the said provisions to the assessee shall be construed as references to a person to whose business this Act applies.

22. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, all information contained in any statement or return made or furnished under the provisions of that Act or obtained or collected for the purposes of that Act may be used for the purposes of this Act.

(2) All information contained in any statement or return made or furnished under the provisions of this Act or obtained or collected for the purposes of this Act may be used for the purposes of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

23. If any person fails, without reasonable cause or excuse, to furnish in due time any return or statement, or to produce, or cause to be produced, any accounts or documents required to be produced under section 13, he shall on conviction by a Magistrate be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, and with a further fine which may extend to fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues.

Income-tax papers to be available for the purposes of this Act.

Failure to deliver returns or statements.

24. If a person makes in any return required under section 13 any statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false, or does not believe to be true, he shall be punishable on conviction by a Magistrate with simple imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

False statement and declaration.
 Institution of proceedings and composition of offences. 25. (1) A person shall not be proceeded against for an offence under section 23 or section 24 except at the instance of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.

(2) No prosecution for an offence punishable under section 23 or section 24 or under the Indian Penal Code shall be instituted in respect of the same facts as those in respect of which a penalty has been imposed under this Act.

(3) The Inspecting Assistant Commissioner may, either before or after the institution of proceedings, compound any offence punishable under section 23 or section 24.

26. (1) If the Central Board of Revenue is satisfied in the case of any business that special circumstances exist which render it inequitable that the standard profits of the business in relation to any chargeable accounting period should be computed in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 6, and that no relief or insufficient relief has been granted under the provisions of sub-section (3) of that section, the Central Board of Revenue may direct that the standard profits of the business shall be computed to be such greater amount as the Central Board of Revenue thinks just :—

Power of Central Board of Revenue to grant relief in special cases.
 Provided that such amount shall not exceed the statutory percentage of the average amount of the capital employed in the business unless the Central Board of Revenue is satisfied that owing to some specific cause peculiar to the business it is just that a greater amount should be allowed and that the relief, if any, afforded, by the Board of Referees under sub-section (3) of section 6 is inadequate.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the provisions of sub-section (1) the Central Board of Revenue shall, in considering the making of a direction under that sub-section, have regard to the following circumstances, namely :—

(a) that the capital employed in a business commenced on or after the 1st day of July, 1938, is so small in relation to the volume of the activities of the business that to compute the standard profits in accordance with the provisions of section 6 would be inequitable, taking into account the normal profits made in similar businesses ;

(b) that owing to the nature of the business heavy expenditure by way of preliminary expenses or expenses in connection with experimental or development work has been incurred in accounting periods closely preceding the chargeable accounting period and that during the chargeable accounting period such expenditure would normally fall to be written off wholly or partly in the books of the person chargeable to excess profits tax ;

(c) that the business is of a pioneer nature, that is to say, is concerned with an industrial process or a form of manufacture or production not undertaken in British India before the 1st day of April, 1932, and has not been in existence long enough to have paid income-tax for the previous year as determined for the purpose of the income-tax assessment for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1937.

(3) If the Central Board of Revenue is satisfied that the computation in accordance with the provisions of Schedule I of the profits of a business during any chargeable accounting period would be inequitable, owing to any of the following circumstances, namely :—

(a) any postponement or suspension, as a consequence of the present hostilities, of renewals or repairs, or

(b) the provision of buildings, plant or machinery which will not be required for the purposes of the business after the termination of the present hostilities, or

(c) difficulties in bringing into British India income arising outside British India where the country in which the income accrued prohibits or restricts by its laws the remittance of money to British India, and loss in the remittance to British India of such income because of fluctuations in the rate of exchange between that country and British India ;

the Central Board of Revenue may direct that such allowances shall be made in computing the profits of the business during that chargeable accounting period as the Central Board of Revenue thinks just :

Provided that in making such direction the Central Board of Revenue may impose such conditions as it deems appropriate.

27. (1) The Central Board of Revenue may, subject to the control of the Central Government, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

(a) prescribe the procedure to be followed on appeals, applications for rectification of mistakes, and applications for refunds ;

(b) provide for the adaptation to excess profits tax of any of the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, which are made applicable to excess profits tax by section 21 ; or of any rules made under any such provision ;

(c) provide in regard to companies whose business consists wholly or mainly in the dealing in or holding of investments for the granting of exemption or relief from liability to excess profits tax of profits derived from investments in other companies the profits of which have been subjected to excess profits tax in British India ;

(d) provide for any matter which by, or under, this Act is to be prescribed.

(3) The power to make rules conferred by this section shall be exercised in like manner as the power to make rules under section 59 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

SCHEDULE I.

[See section 2 (19).]

Rules for the computation of profits for purposes of Excess Profits Tax.

1. The profits of a business during the standard period, or during any chargeable accounting period, shall be separately computed, and shall, subject to the provisions of this Schedule, be computed on the principles on which the profits of a business are computed for the purposes of income-tax under section 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 :

Provided that where the profits during any standard period have already been determined for the purpose of an assessment under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, such profits as so determined shall, subject to the adjustments required by this Schedule, be taken as the profits during that period for the purpose of excess profits tax :

Provided further that where a standard period or chargeable accounting period is not an accounting period, the profits or losses of the business during any accounting periods wholly or partly included within the standard period or chargeable accounting period shall be so computed as aforesaid, and such division and apportionment to specific periods of those profits or losses and such aggregation of those profits and losses, or any apportioned part thereof shall be made as appears necessary to arrive at the profit during the standard period or chargeable accounting period : and any such apportionment shall be made in proportion to the number of months or fractions of months in the respective periods unless the Excess Profits Tax Officer, having regard to any special circumstances, otherwise directs.

2. The profits of a business during the standard period shall be computed on the same basis and in the same manner as the profits of that business are under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as amended by the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, computed for the chargeable accounting period, notwithstanding that the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, may not have been in force in the standard period.

3. (1) The principle of adding the allowance for depreciation for any one period to the allowance for depreciation for any subsequent period and deeming it to be part of the allowance for such subsequent period shall not be followed.

(2) No allowance shall be made for any loss other than a loss sustained in a business to which this Act applies.

(3) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as permitting the application, in computing profits for the purposes of the excess profits tax, of the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 24 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

4. (1) Income received from investments shall be included in the profits in the cases and to the extent provided in sub-rules (2) and (4) of this rule and not otherwise.

(2) In the case of the business of a building society, or of a money lending business, banking business, insurance business or business consisting wholly or mainly in the dealing in or holding of investments, the profits shall include all income received from investments, whether or not such income is included in the profits charged under section 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or is charged under any other section of that Act, or has been subjected to deduction of tax at source or is free of or exempt from income-tax.

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-rule (2), where the profits of a subsidiary company are under the provisions of section 9 to be included in the profits of the principal company for the purposes of assessment to excess profits tax, dividends from the subsidiary company out of such profits shall not also be included in the profits of the principal company.

(4) In the case of a business which consists wholly or partly in the letting out of property on hire, the income from the property shall be included in the profits of the business whether or not it has been charged to income-tax under section 9 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or under any other section of that Act.

(5) Where the person carrying on a business is the beneficial owner of any investments, the income from which is by virtue of the provisions of this rule not to be taken into account in computing the profits of the business, and a deduction would, apart from the provisions of this rule, fall to be made in respect of interest on borrowed money, the deduction (if any) to be made in respect of that interest shall be computed as if the principal of the borrowed money were reduced by the value of those investments:

Provided that where the person carrying on the business is not a company, no such reduction shall be deemed to be made in the principal of any borrowed money in respect of any investments unless the investments are mortgaged, charged or pledged as security for the repayment of that money and interest thereon.

5. If at any time after the close of the standard period, any increase in the capital employed in a business has been effected by means of a loan from a bank carrying on a bona fide banking business, or by means of a public issue of debentures secured on the property of the company, the interest on so much of the loan or debentures as has been utilised in effecting the increase in the capital shall not be deducted in computing the profits for the purposes of excess profits tax and, notwithstanding the provisions of rule 2 of Schedule II, that amount of such loan or debentures shall not be deducted in arriving at the amount of the capital employed in the business.

6. No deduction shall be made on account of liability to pay, or payment of, income-tax, super-tax, or excess profits tax.

7. (1) In the case of a business carried on, in any accounting period which constitutes or includes a chargeable accounting period, by a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein,—

(a) if the standard profits of the company are computed by reference to the profits during a standard period, no deduction shall be allowed in respect of directors' remuneration in excess of the amount paid for directors' remuneration in respect of the standard period or, if the standard period is longer or shorter than the accounting period, in excess of a sum which bears to the sum paid for directors' remuneration in respect of the standard period the same proportion as the length of the accounting period bears to that of the standard period;

(b) if the standard profits are not computed by reference to the profits during a standard period, no deduction shall be allowed in respect of directors' remuneration.

(2) In this rule the expression "directors' remuneration" does not include—

(a) the remuneration of any director who is required to devote substantially the whole of his time to the service of the company in a managerial or technical capacity and is not the beneficial owner of, or able, either directly or through the medium of other companies or by any other indirect means, to control, more than five per cent. of the ordinary share capital of the company, or

(b) the remuneration of any managing agent where such remuneration is included in the profits of the managing agent's business for the purposes of excess profits tax.

8. In the case of a business carried on by a company, if the standard profits of the company are computed by reference to the profits during a standard period, no deduction shall be allowed in respect of remuneration paid to a managing agent in excess of the amount which would have been payable to that managing agent if the agreement in force in the standard period had been in force in the chargeable accounting period, except where such remuneration is subjected to excess profits tax in the hands of the managing agent.

9. Where the performance of a contract extends beyond the accounting period, there shall (unless the Excess Profits Tax Officer, owing to any special circumstances, otherwise directs) be attributed to the accounting period such proportion of the entire profits or loss which has resulted, or which it is estimated will result, from the complete performance of the contract as is properly attributable to the accounting period, having regard to the extent to which the contract was performed therein :

Provided that when any such contract has been completed and the profits have been finally ascertained, if the aggregate of the amounts attributed to previous accounting periods exceeds the profit, as finally ascertained, from the complete performance of the contract, an adjustment shall be made to reduce the amounts so attributed to the various chargeable accounting periods to the amount of the profits as finally ascertained.

10. In respect of any building erected on or after the 1st day of September, 1939, which during any chargeable accounting period has ceased to be required for the purposes of the business or has been sold, any amount by which the value of the building at the date when it ceased to be required for the purposes of the business or the price obtained for the building, as the case may be, falls short of the written down value of the building shall be allowed as a deduction in arriving at the profits of that chargeable accounting period.

SCHEDULE II.

[See section 2 (3)]

Rules for computing the average amount of capital.

1. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Schedule, the average amount of the capital employed in a business (so far as it does not consist of money) shall be taken to be—

(a) so far as it consists of assets acquired by purchase on or after the commencement of the business, the price at which those assets were acquired, subject to the deductions hereafter specified ;

(b) so far as it consists of assets being debts due to the person carrying on the business, the nominal amount of those debts, subject to the said deductions ;

(c) so far as it consists of any other assets which have been acquired otherwise than by purchase as aforesaid, the value of the assets when they became assets of the business, subject to the said deductions.

(2) The price or value of any assets other than a debt shall be subject to such deductions for depreciation as are necessary to reduce the asset to its written down value and, in the case of a debt, the nominal amount of the debt shall be subject to any deduction which has been allowed in respect thereof for income-tax purposes.

(3) Where the price of any asset has been satisfied otherwise than in cash, the then value of the consideration actually given for the asset shall be treated as the price at which the asset was acquired.

2. (1) Any borrowed money and debts shall be deducted, and in particular any debt for income-tax or super-tax or for excess profits tax in respect of the business shall be deducted :

Provided that any such debt for income-tax or super-tax or excess profits tax shall, for the purposes of this Schedule, be deemed to have become due—

(a) in the case of income-tax and super-tax, on the last day of the period of time within which the tax is payable under section 45 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 ;

(b) in the case of excess profits tax, on the first day after the end of the chargeable accounting period in respect of which the tax is assessable notwithstanding that the excess profits tax may not have been assessed until after that date.

(2) Where any debt for the excess profits tax assessable in respect of any period is to be deducted under this rule, the amount thereof shall not be reduced as the result of any relief to be given in respect of a deficiency of profits occurring in any subsequent period, and the amount of any such relief shall be treated as having become an asset of the business on the first day after the end of the chargeable accounting period in which the deficiency occurred.

3. Any investments the income from which is by virtue of the provisions of the First Schedule not to be taken into account in computing the profits of the business, and any moneys not required for the purposes of the business, shall be left out of account, but where any investments in the beneficial ownership of the person carrying on the business are so left out of account, the sum (if any) to be deducted under the last preceding rule in respect of borrowed money shall be computed as if the principal of the borrowed money were reduced by the value of those investments :

Provided that where the person carrying on the business is not a company, no reduction shall be deemed to be made in the principal of any borrowed money in respect of any investments unless the investments are mortgaged, charged or pledged as security for the repayment of that money and the interest thereon.

4. Notwithstanding anything contained in rule 3, in the case of the business of shipping, to which this Act applies, the sale proceeds of any tonnage sold or the amount of compensation in respect of loss of ships or the amount of accumulation of reserves, whether invested or not, shall be taken into account in computing the average amount of capital employed in such business :

Provided that any income received from investment of such funds shall be included in computing profits for purposes of the excess profits tax.

5. For the purpose of ascertaining the average amount of capital employed in a business during any period, the profits or losses made in that period shall, except so far as the contrary is shown, be deemed—

(a) to have accrued at an even rate throughout the period ; and

(b) to have resulted, as they accrued, in a corresponding increase or decrease, as the case may be, in the capital employed in the business.

6. Where, in accordance with the second proviso to section 5 of this Act, this Act is applicable to part only of a business, the capital employed in that part shall be computed separately from any other capital of the person carrying on the business, and all references to capital employed in a business shall be construed as references to capital employed in that part of the business only.

SCHEDULE III.

4. Where one of the owners in a series owns a fraction of the ordinary share capital of the company to which it is directly related, and every other owner in the series owns the whole of the ordinary share capital of the company to which it is directly related, the first owner shall be deemed to own that fraction of the ordinary share capital of the last owned company through the intermediary or chain of intermediaries.

the first owner shall be deemed to own through the intermediary or chain of intermediaries such fraction of the ordinary share capital of the last owned company as results from the multiplication of those fractions.
